What Does Spiritualism Mean? -- Who Are These Spiritualists?

What Is Spiritualism Doing for Humanity? What More Can It Do than Push Forward the Truth of Immortality?

These Are Some of the Questions that Are Discussed from Week to Week in This Paper. Are You at all Interested in Them? If Not, Why Not?

The Phenomena are all right, but the soul of man hungers for more light, seeks the Philosophy of the Phenomena, reads the truth from the occult side. These broad fields are searched by our scientific corps of writers every week, and if you wish to keep pace with the most advanced thought, you must read and study.

A SPIRIT MESSAGE.

Received by L. M. Cobb, Norwich, Ct.

Who are the honored dead whose graves are strewn with flowers to-day? It is they who have died for their country, who have been instrumental in freeing the slaves of the South and who compelled the states which wanted (in the sixties) to withdraw from the Union, to remain in the Union; these are the honored dead of to-day, at any rate that is the answer which you would receive should you ask that question.

Those who have fought upon the bloody battle field. This day has been set aside in memory of them.

But I have not come to-day to tell of the glories of the bloody wars, either of ancient or modern times, but instead have come to tell of a mightier war, which has been in progress for over 55 years, and which is still raging in your very midst; although you may not know it, it is true just the same.

But what of this war, you might question me, and I would answer you, that it is the bloodless war between Spiritualism and the creed-bound non-thinking people of the world.

For ages it has been taught by the so-called holy church of God, that man was not made to think, that he was to be held down by fear of his master God, and that he must only accept that which the paid thinkers or clergy might tell him was right for him to do.

They told him how he must act in order to please God and in which way to serve him, and in which way not anger him and what would be their reward for pleasing him; a life of happiness in the presence of God himself, would be their portion if they were so fortunate.

If they did not find favor with this God, they would suffer the torments of hell forever.

But this condition is doomed not to last, for the mighty hosts of the living, (not the dead) who inhabit a world which lies beyond the change which is called death, assembled and said that men and women were not made to be slaves to any denomination or church, but that they should be free to think and act as they thought was best, and not to be compelled in order to gain happiness hereafter, to believe this or that creed of any church.

And so war was declared by the grand army of freed spirits against ignorance, superstition and the dogmas of the past.

The first shot which was fired in this mighty bloodless war was when in the Fox sisters' home, the tiny knock was given, and when messages came saying we live and there is no such thing as death to the soul of man.

Then it was when the masses of the people heard these things, that they became frightened for fear of the safety of their creed and church.

In order to save themselves and their creeds from ruin, united in a desperate battle to do away with the enemy, when its ranks were thin, for they saw not the mighty army which stood ready to reinforce the thin column of Spiritualists, who dared to proclaim that that God was not an angry being, but that he was loving and meted out only justice to his children as were their just dues, that he sent none to hell because they differed in thoughts or in customs.

That the infinite spark of his being existed in all and through all.

And so it was brought about, friends, by the aid of these mighty unseen forces that the attacks of the ignorant and superstitious people had no effect in their attempt to crush out the band of Spiritualists, for they withstood their attacks and slowly but surely advanced.

Year by year their thin ranks have swelled until to-day they stand not a few in numbers but a mighty army, determined with the aid of the spiritual world to battle and finally conquer ignorance and superstition, wherever it is found in the world on which you now live.

Its mighty power can be felt all over the world to-day.

Many preachers of the churches are being impressed with its mighty silent influence; although they may not dare to acknowledge it, still it is true.

It is all right to call it the work of the Devil so long as your home circle is unbroken, but when that change (called death) comes into your home, when you are not permitted to see some one's dear face or to hear their voice, then it is, when the bleeding heart is longing for that comfort, which no other religion gives, that they enter the ranks of the Spiritualists, for they know that the dear ones have only laid aside the earthly garment for one more beautiful, that they still live, and if they will only come where conditions are right they receive words of comfort from the land of spirit.

Friends, the warfare is still raging, but the soldiers (Spiritualists) with a courage that never falters, are bravely enduring the missiles hurled by the enemy.

Scatter flowers that will not fade (noble deeds for the uplifting of humanity), in memory of those noble pioneers who gave their life work for the advancement of that religion which will remove the fetters of creed-bound and down-trodden humanity.

"Then let each soul with all its powers,
Forever seek to be
As perfect in itself as flowers,
Type of Divinity."

A High Standard of Social, Moral and Intellectual Culture Is Demanded.

WE INVITE THE SPECIAL ATTENTION OF OUR READERS TO THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE BY GEORGE B. FERRIS, A PROMINENT SPIRITUALIST OF GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. THE EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK WORLD SPEAKS IMPRESSIVELY IN FAVOR OF MUNICIPAL PURITY—PURITY IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF CITY GOVERNMENTS. THE COMMENTS OF MR. FERRIS ALSO SPEAK VOLUMES IN FAVOR OF PURITY IN CONNECTION WITH THE GRANDEST TRUTH EVER PRESENTED TO MORTALS—SPIRITUALISM. IF MUNICIPAL PURITY IS NECESSARY, IS NOT SPIRITUAL PURITY IN OUR RANKS, DOUBLY SO?

As set forth in an editorial in the New York World, some years ago Mr. S. S. McClure was selling light literature to newspapers on the syndicate plan. Finding himself in the way of securing regular supplies of interesting reading matter he started a magazine. For some time he conducted it on the usual magazine basis of entertainment and sugar-coated information and won success on that line.

Then Mr. McClure was struck with an idea. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that the idea gradually took possession of him. It was the conception of continuous public service by the unbiased investigation and description of dangerous tendencies in American life. Of course every magazine from time to time had published able articles dealing with some phase of wrong and suggesting some needed reform. What Mr. McClure did was to make this work systematic and persistent, to describe realities with absolute frankness, to avoid preaching and to let the facts produce their own impression upon the public conscience.

The labor troubles of 1902 gave the first opportunity. The facts about the anthracite strike were laid bare in a series of articles, and these were followed by others describing such things as the career of Sam Parks in New York, the conspiracy of capital and labor in Chicago, the Labor Trust in San Francisco and the anarchy in Colorado.

In the autumn of the same year Mr. Lincoln Steffens struck the lead that has produced his blistering book, "The Shame of the Cities," and Miss Tarbell began that extraordinary History of the Standard Oil Company which gives us the same insight into the nature of trusts in general that the medical student gains of cancers from a scientific description of a typical case. Thus enlightenment has been proceeding along three distinct lines.

It is an interesting fact that while Mr. McClure and his writers have been educating the public they have been educating themselves. They did not start with preconceived notions of what they were going to find. When Mr. Steffens began to investigate corruption in St. Louis he thought he was on the trail of the "ward politicians" who are so widely supposed to have succeeded by some mysterious miracle in enslaving free American communities. He discovered to his surprise that these politicians were only the humble servants of the "substantial citizens" whose reluctance to enter the "filthy pool of politics" critics of our institutions are accustomed to deplore. When he realized the truth he told it unsparingly. "The business man," he said, "has failed in politics as he has failed in citizenship. Why?"

Because politics is business. That's what's the matter with it. That's what's the matter with everything—art, literature, religion, journalism, law, medicine—they're all business, and all—as you see them. Make politics a sport, as they do in England, or a profession, as they do in Germany, and we'll have—well, something else than we have now—if we want it, which is another question. * * * The commercial spirit is the spirit of profit, not patriotism; of credit, not honor; of individual gain, not national prosperity; of trade and dickering, not principle. "My business is sacred," says the business man in his heart. "Whatever prospers my business is good; it must be. Whatever hinders it is wrong; it must be. A bribe is bad; that is, it is a bad thing to take; but it is not so bad to give one, not if it is necessary to my business." "Business is business" is not a political sentiment, but our politician has caught it.

Miss Tarbell's "History of Standard Oil" exhibits this destructive, anti-social pressure for selfish advantage from another point of view, as Mr. Ray Stannard Baker's labor articles do from still another. It shows how men of the most exemplary personal morality and piety can act in business matters with the callous unscrupulousness of Dyak head-hunters. By the simple force of dispassionately stated facts it refutes every claim advanced for the trusts as instruments of social advancement.

It has been said, for instance, that the Standard Oil Company has been a great national benefit, because it has organized and developed a chaotic industry, reduced the price of oil to the consumer and promoted our trade in foreign markets. Miss Tarbell shows that all these processes were in full swing when the oil industry was free, that all the difficulties of the business had been conquered by the independent pioneers in the face of the most cruel hardships, that they had invented every important device for reducing the cost of production and transportation, that they had developed the foreign market "until it included almost every country of the earth—China, the East and West Indies, South America and Africa"—and that thirty-three years ago they had raised their product to the fourth place among the exports of the United States. And all this, they thought, was only a beginning.

Life ran swift and ruddy and joyous in these men. They were still young, most of them under forty, and they looked forward, with all the eagerness of the young who have just learned their powers, to years of struggle and development. They would solve all these perplexing problems of overproduction, of railroad discrimination, of speculation. They would meet their own needs. They would bring the oil refining to the region where it belonged. They would make their towns the most beautiful in the world. There was nothing too good for them, nothing they did not hope and dare.

Suddenly, at the very heydey of this confidence, a big hand stretched out from nobody knows where, to steal their conquest and throttle their future. The suddenness and the blackness of the assault on their business stirred to the bottom their manhood and their sense of fair play, and the whole region rose in a revolt which is scarcely paralleled in the commercial history of the United States.

How this revolt was suppressed and the oil business monopolized by methods ranging from strategy to crime is shown in exhaustive detail.

Mr. McClure has discovered that the first step toward curing an evil is to make it known. He has found that a magazine need not be confined to pink-tea entertainment, but can be as formidable an agent of reforming Publicity as is a newspaper. "I am a journalist," says Mr. Steffens. "My purpose * * * * was, as I said above, to see if the shameful facts, spread out in all their shame, would not burn through our civic shamelessness and set fire to American pride. That was the journalism of it." That was why he told of such things as the "joke" of the Philadelphia boodlers who "counted out the 'divvy' of their graft in unison within the chime of Independence Hall."

The work Mr. McClure has been doing is one that any magazine or any newspaper might have been proud to do. It ought to have been done before. If it be true that some respectable corruptionists have resented it socially, their action is a medal of honor. They are the "Enemies of the Republic" whom Mr. Steffens has branded. Their hostility is an inspiration. It shows that something is being accomplished. Let us hope that the McClure idea will have many imitators.

The first step in the advancement of truth and knowledge is the removal of the erroneous opinions prevailing, the elimination of the false and misleading ideas that find acceptance, in order that they may not retard and prevent the acceptance of the truth.

The first step in the betterment of social and political conditions is the removal of the corrupt and incompetent officials from the control of governmental affairs, the exposure of the extent and manner of their corruption and incompetency; and then the substitution of honorable, intelligent and responsible officials in their stead.

The first and most important move in the advancement of true religion is the elimination of all false, misleading, or unverifiable doctrines; the removal of all untruthful, immoral, unprincipled and incompetent teachers and leaders; and the endorsement of only the most indubitable doctrines, and the employment of only those workers and leaders whose integrity and ability are beyond question.

One prominent Spiritualist has recently made the statement that "Spiritualists should seriously ask if this hue and cry of fraud is not really detrimental to the best interests of the movement?" Proceeding further, he says: "Again, the majority of Spiritualists believe in the results of 'suggestions.' Does not this eternal cry of fraud suggest it to others? It certainly invites unscrupulous people into our ranks to try to foist off their fraudulent phenomena on us, and the speakers and press have been telling these people for years that it not only could, but was being done all the time. A standing invitation for them to 'come and do likewise.'"

It certainly must require a vivid imagination to accept the statement that the earnest desire for genuine phenomena, and the intense hatred and unequivocal denunciation of fraud will in any way suggest the practice of fraud to anyone, or attract the attention of undesirable characters toward our ranks. It would appear to me that instead of attracting frauds, the intense hatred of fraud and the desire for the truth alone, would, by mental influence, cause the frauds, such as were susceptible to such thoughts, to turn toward an honest means of gaining their livelihood; for when such thoughts as these entered the mind they would awaken every latent moral impulse and cause an intense repulsion of fraud and a desire for moral progression.

Nor would those who could not receive the mental impressions be drawn to this field of operation. The desire on the part of Spiritualists to expose fraud would prove to them that it would not only be unsafe but unavailing as well. And furthermore, it is safe to assume that every trickster who sees a Spiritualist paper is aware of the extent of the fraud being practiced, and silence on the part of Spiritualists would lead them to believe that we were unaware of the existence of fraud, and that consequently they would be in no danger of detection if they committed fraud.

Turn again to the above editorial from the New York World. Read it carefully once more, and note its application to the present conditions to be met with in Spiritualism. Can we not draw a valuable lesson from its consideration? "Mr. McClure has discovered that the first step toward curing an evil is to make it known." This sentence should furnish food for reflection for those who argue that the constant reiteration of "this hue and cry of fraud" tends to make matters worse; for what applies to cities is also true in connection with any business, cult, sect, or religion—if corruption exists therein, it should be exposed, for it will not disappear unless some persistent and intelligent effort is made to overcome it.

One dishonest official casts discredit on the entire community; one dishonest medium casts suspicion and doubt on all others, and especially on those in that particular phase wherein the fraud is discovered. And they are both allowed to exist for the same reason: because public opinion has not been aroused to the extent of giving approval and aid in the work of reform, and the minimizing of the danger has only caused matters to become worse and worse.

For thousands of years mankind has been kept in ignorance by designing and unscrupulous priests and rulers, and during all these years crime and fraud held uninterrupted sway, but with the education and enlightenment of the masses, there came the demand for honesty and ability in those who held positions of trust, and the only reason for the existence of so many frauds in politics and in religion is because the vast majority of people are not aware of the extent of their depredations.

"Of course every magazine from time to time had published able articles dealing with some phase of wrong and suggesting some needed reform. What Mr. McClure did was to make this work systematic and persistent; to describe realities with absolute frankness; to avoid preaching and to let the facts produce their own impression upon the public conscience. "Such has been the work accomplished in the field of social and political reform, and in religion the need for persistent and systematic effort for reform is just as great. What has been the result of Mr. McClure's efforts? Has the public conscience become corrupt through "suggestions" received in reading of the criminality and fraud exposed? Instead of increasing the number of dishonest officials the effect of this work has been to cause honesty to be demanded; and since publicity has not caused more corruption in business and government affairs, there is no reason to suppose that incessant effort on the part of Spiritualists to expose and eradicate fraud will do otherwise than cleanse and purify the moral atmosphere of the cause.

Social, political and religious progression can only result from earnest and industrious effort to separate truth from falsity, honesty from dishonesty. Allow frauds to flourish, silence every mention of their methods and the extent of their work, and you provide the exact conditions they need for the perpetration of their work. On the contrary, expose their methods, direct attention to their work and they no longer have the ignorance and credulity necessary for their operations. They know full well that if attention is directed toward them they will be obliged to turn their attention to other means of gaining a living, consequently they say: "Let the frauds alone; error cannot harm the truth. Search for honesty and you will not be troubled with the frauds. The heralding of the fraud only defiles the whole movement."

When Spiritualists learn to reason upon such statements, they will find them but a subterfuge for the purpose of diverting attention from the real issue. If the "heralding of fraud" defiles the whole movement, certainly the mere existence of it will do likewise.

What would have been thought of our government had it tried to "whitewash" the postoffice scandal instead of probing the matter to the bottom? What will be thought of Spiritualism if it tries to conceal the evidence of fraud in its ranks and does not determine the character of its expounders and demonstrators? Some fraudulent mediums have been exposed. We know there are more of the same class. What shall we do about it? Seek to hide the evidence of their work for the shame their exposure would cause?

Nations have gone down to decay and death because of the load of error they had accumulated; religions have done likewise. Spiritualism holds a vast array of truth; it also contains some error. These errors do not yet outweigh the truths; but is any effort being made to prevent them from increasing and gaining control at some future day? You say, "Error cannot harm the truth." What authority have you for this statement? You say that all the truths of past religions have carried down the ages and live at the present time. Grant that such is the case. What has become of the original systems? Gone down to decay while the gems of truth have been rescued from the rubbish to form the basis for new religions.

Spiritualism has absorbed the truth from every religion to which it has added more of its own discovery. All religions contain some truth and many of them hide it under a mountain of error. Spiritualism contains but little error compared with older forms of belief. It has not had time to accumulate them. But are we making any effort to prevent the spread of error? And furthermore, unless some effort is made to avoid the mistakes of the past, Spiritualism will follow in the path of dead religions, while out of its ruins the truth it taught will rise to be incorporated in new religions. This is the inevitable destiny of all organizations that do not answer the requirements of a progressive age. Every Spiritualist desires to see Spiritualism, as an organized religion, made as eternal as the human race, and the only method by which this can be accomplished is by carefully discarding all errors as fast as discovered, and by continually adapting itself to the requirement of an advancing civilization.

The work being accomplished by McClure's Magazine should furnish a valuable lesson for Spiritualists to consider. It can be copied with profit by the Spiritualistic press. Spiritualism will accomplish nothing more than an ordinary victory over superstition, ignorance and crime, until its progressive friends demand a high standard of social, moral and intellectual culture among its advocates, and permit and sanction the fearless discussion of all the various problems that are encountered. Let us have light upon the errors as well as the facts of Spiritualism. The mistakes of the past and present will lead to future successes if we avoid repeating them; but if, on the other hand, we refuse to consider them, and even deny their existence, they cannot do otherwise than lead us on to greater mistakes and ultimate ruin. By considering the present mistakes of Spiritualism we can insure its future success, make it as eternal as the race, and the accepted religion of all enlightened mankind.

Grand Rapids, Mich. GEORGE B. FERRIS.

To Put God in the Constitution

For THis Purpose "The United Christian Party" Has Been Organized in "Free America."

Upon this very important question we find the following ringing patriotic words from the pen of Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, in the Chicago Examiner:

A new political organization is in the field, and its name is "The United Christian Party."

The object of this party is the reformation of the Constitution of the United States.

The immortal document, drafted by master minds, debated for months in the historic convention at Philadelphia, and finally ratified by the states—the document which was pronounced by no less a man than the late William Ewart Gladstone to be the noblest piece of work that was ever conceived by the human intellect—is, in the opinion of the new party, a very poor affair after all.

The leaders of the new party do not hesitate to say that the Constitution is immoral—yes, downright wicked.

They have a reason for such extraordinary charge, and that reason is simply this—the Constitution does not recognize God.

The gentlemen of the United Christian party are, like Abraham of old, the "friends of God," and they are in a heap of trouble for fear that God will not get what belongs to Him.

They want the American people to "recognize God" in their Constitution.

It was old Dr. Sam Johnson, I believe, who said that while a man might be permitted now and then to say a foolish thing, he should not be allowed to insist upon people taking his foolishness seriously.

In imagination, while these radiant Summer days are on, we go out into the country. We find ourselves in the midst of a rich meadow. The tall grass waves about us, and in the grass are innumerable crickets, ants, grasshoppers, and other kinds of the bug tribe.

In the meantime, the sun, lifting himself above the eastern hills like a god, strides on toward his throne in the zenith. His glory fills the heavens and floods the earth! His heat penetrates every nook and corner of the meadow! The splendor crowns every clod and grass blade and weed and flower, and the whole scene is one grand proclamation of the power and beneficence of the resplendent thing up there in the meridian!

And now, down at our feet, we notice a whole lot of grasshoppers, ants, crickets, flies, and other insects who seem to be in a great commotion. They are holding a convention, they are organizing a new party, they are getting ready to enter a solemn protest against the wickedness and immorality of those crickets, grasshoppers, and other bugs that have neglected to "recognize" the sun.

These insects are the friends of the sun, just as the gentlemen of the new party are the friends of God, and they are mightily afraid that the great source of light and life will be neglected, even as the new party folk are afraid that God will be.

But the sun does not ask for any recognition at the hands of the insects, any more than God stands in need of favors from the Constitution. God can get along fairly well without that Constitution. And—to speak the whole truth—the Constitution can get along very well without God.

A great many of the people of the United States are religious, but the Constitution is purely political.

It is the instrument not of religion, but of government.

It was intended primarily not to be an arm of the Church, but to regulate the purely temporal affairs of the people of "United States of America."

It is neither religious nor irreligious, it neither affirms God nor denies Him; it simply attends to its business as the political chart of the great Republic.

"This is a Christian country," the new party claims. The claim is a false one.

It is probably true that the majority of the people in this country are Christians, but the nation is neither Christian nor Pagan, Catholic nor Protestant, Jew nor Mohammedan.

So far as the constitution is concerned religion is at the option of the citizen. He may have any kind he likes, or none at all, if he so pleases.

In a word, the government of this country is a civil, not an ecclesiastical affair; an earthly democracy, not a heavenly theocracy.

With wisdom, I believe, our fathers concluded to separate the state from the church, and if we know what is well for us we will see to it that the separation is forever maintained.

Unless I am greatly mistaken, I think I can hear the mighty voice of the American people replying as follows to the crazy demand of this new party:

"Under this flag of ours a man may worship as he pleases, or, if he is so inclined, he may not worship at all; but, by the eternal! 'Old Glory' shall never be permitted to throw its protecting folds over the fanaticism which would re-enact in our midst the horrors and brutalities of the Dark Ages!"

A BEAUTIFUL POEM.

To the Editor: I cannot resist the temptation to occasionally send a product of my gleaning in the fields of poetry and song and spirituality. Here is another poem of Nature by Irving C. Showerman. H. V. SWERINGEN.

When the dew is on the roses
In the balmy days of June,
Verdure o'er the land reposing,
Birds and brooks in sweet attune;
Far away across the waters
Flashing bright, with silvery sheen,
Bathed in morning's radiant sunbeams
Lie fair fields of living green.

Swiftly flows time's ceaseless river,
And we linger on its verge,
Listening now, and listening ever,
For the ocean's distant surge;
And our eyes grow dim with watching
On the way that lies between;
Fairer fields there must be somewhere,
Meadows clothed in brighter green.

Ever green, the fields of childhood,
When we knew not cares or tears,
To our yearning sight returning
Through the misty vale of years,
Seem the fairest and the rarest
That our eyes have ever seen,
And they live in memory's tablets
Dressed in robes of vernal green.

Fairer fields than we have dreamed of Lie beyond the ocean's strand;
When we gain the mountain summits
Of fair Beulah's border land,
All our sighing shall be over
As we view the distant scene,
For behold! the fields of Eden
Stand arrayed in fadeless green.

American Grange for Woman's Equality

The American Grange Bulletin and Scientific Farmer, the official representative of the National Grange, in a recent issue published "The Grange Declaration of Purposes," and in announcing its "Ideal of Womanhood," said:

"The Grange was the first of fraternal organizations to recognize woman's equality with man—a fact that is of lasting honor to the founders of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry. It is worthy of particular note that the right of woman to an equal voice and vote in Grange meetings was not formerly announced, but simply taken for granted. There was no struggle for rights; there was no demand for privileges; but as man and woman have equal responsibilities in the home, it was naturally and properly assumed that they should stand on a common level in an organization made up of the home-keeping people of the country."

The position of the Grange, representing as it does the great body of American farmers, is the strongest possible assurance of the eventful establishment of woman suffrage. "My constituency," said General Jackson, "begins with the first cross-roads out of town." With the Grange and the Federation of Labor on the side of woman suffrage, success is only a question of time.

NEW YORK ASSOCIATION.

Annual Report for 1903-1904, of President H. W. Richardson.

In compliance with the requirements of our constitution and by-laws, it becomes my duty as president of the New York State Association of Spiritualists to submit to its officers and members assembled in this convention, my annual report of the progress of its affairs during the last fiscal year, and in the performance of this duty it gives me pleasure to be able to state that the year now closing has been one of progress. While the additions in membership and in auxiliary societies have not shown the increase we all would have been glad to see, still the increased confidence and esteem clearly indicated in the attitude of non-Spiritualists toward our association, and our work, augurs much for its permanency and future influence.

To persons who come in touch with thinking people it is clearly apparent that a larger number of persons are interested in Spiritualism, and are studying its phenomena and its philosophy, than ever before in the history of the movement, and the general pudblic are giving the organized movement greater consideration, and I unhesitatingly assert that our influence as an organized body is greater than it was one year ago.

The opposition to organization, which was so strenuous during the early years of the life of the National Spiritualists' Association, has now practically vanished, and the Spiritualists now see that it is but an effort to unite our forces into a methodically working body along business lines, and to make it a strong fortress of defense for our cause in every possible direction.

Missionary Work.

In accordance with instructions from the state board, which I have endeavored to carry out, Mrs. T. U. Reynolds was engaged as state missionary, and while I have not studied her report, which she will herself present to this convention, I believe at least one-third part of the year has been devoted by her especially to this work. Mrs. R. W. Barton, of Binghamton, was engaged for one month, and served faithfully during that time. She will presumably present her report to the convention.

Besides this, Mrs. A. G. Atchison, of Buffalo, has under my advice and cooperation, materially assisted in promoting the interests of the association, as well as the cause in general, by her untiring efforts in the western part of the state. In her generous sacrifices and untiring efforts in the Niagara Falls society, she has shown that her love for the cause counts for more to her than can be measured in dollars and cents.

All of these noble workers have, in my opinion, done faithful service for the State, and while the result in added societies is not so great, the way is paved in several places, and if judiciously followed up will, in my opinion, result in the addition of several good working societies, in the near future.

We have continued the policy of refraining from organing societies unless we believed they were strong enough to hold together and do good effective work. It looks glittering to see reports of societies organized over the country with two or three days' work by the missionaries, but the trail of wrecks that usually follows such glittering reports makes the last estate worse than the first.

We have endeavored, in so far as was consistent, to assist the weaker societies, and in my opinion, the missionary work done this year has been effective, and of lasting benefit to our cause in the Empire State.

Camp-meetings.

State days were granted our State Association, at the City of Light Assembly, or Lily Dale, and at Freeville camp.

At the former place the state association was represented by Mrs. Twing, Mrs. Reynolds, Mrs. Duhl, of Elmira, and myself, of the state board. We were assisted by several state workers, and new interest was awakened in our organized movement among those present.

At Freeville camp, Mrs. Reynolds and myself were booked to speak, but illness prevented my presence, and Mrs. Reynolds was the only representative of the state board present. Nevertheless, the meeting was successful in every way, and several individual memberships to our state association were received. Mr. Coston, Mrs. Travis and others rendered substantial service to the state on State Day at Freeville.

At North Collins, the "Friends of Human Progress," the oldest Spiritualist camp association in existence, a successful meeting was held in June, and again in September. At the latter meeting I assisted by contributing what I could in carrying out the programme, and the meeting was, I believe, a profitable one.

Arrangements have already been made for a State Day at Freeville the coming summer assembly, and your humble servant has consented to be present and assist in the exercises on that day.

Mass-Meetings.

A very successful mass-meeting was held in Buffalo January 15, 16 and 17, 1904. The array of talent included Dr. B. F. Austin, Lyman C. Howe, Editor Bach, of the Sunflower, our second vice-president and missionary, Mrs. T. U. Reynolds; F. Corden White, the test medium; Mrs. A. G. Atchison, Chas. F. Hulbert of Buffalo, your humble servant, and others. Financially a goodly sum was netted to the state treasury, and the cause was given new impetus in that city.

In July I was invited to West Potsdam, the home of our worthy trustee, Mrs. Laura A. Holt, where an all-day grove meeting was held. State missionary, Mrs. Reynolds and myself gave of our thought and inspiration, and all seemed to feel that the meeting was a grand success. That faithful, loyal representative of Northern New York on the state board, Mrs. Holt, seemed to think the meeting, which was really a Northern New York mass-meeting, would result in helpfulness in her efforts to upbuild our state association in that part of the state.

An all-day meeting was held at Niagara Falls in the month of January. Brother Lyman C. Howe, Mrs. T. U. Reynolds, Mrs. Atchison and myself comprised the array of talent. Several Spiritualists were present from Buffalo, Akron and surrounding towns. Bro. George Jones, from Akron, was present the entire day, and his inspiring songs contributed largely to the success of the meeting. The feast of song and inspiration gave new life to the work in that city.

Elaborate preparations were made for the holding of a five day mass meeting in the city of New York the first week of May, in this year, and a grand meeting would no doubt have been the result, had it not been for the sudden and severe illness of our resident Trustee, Miss Marie Fitzmaurice, who had charge of the arrangements. Because of her illness the meeting was postponed indefinitely.

I would emphasize the importance of mass meetings as an efficient means of promoting our cause, and arousing new interest, and would recommend that the system be continued, and that the number of such meetings be increased from year to year, as circumstances seem to favor.

Medical Legislation.

In so far as has come to my knowledge no attempt has been made by our State Legislature during the past year to further abridge the exercise of spiritual gifts by the citizens of New York State.

It is quite probable that the officers of the Medical Association and the representatives from other special privileges with which mediumship in some of its varied forms may touch or come in competition, have not forgotton the contest that was put up by our state association three years ago, but we must not assume that bigotry and tolerance have been outgrown. An instance and proof of this is seen in a recent occurrence in a small city in the western part of the state. We hired a hall and held therein a state meeting in that city, and a lady who had been a member of the Catholic church was active in assisting in the detail arrangements for the meeting.

After this meeting the lady arranged with Mrs. A. G. Atchison to come to her home and hold an evening circle and several friends had been invited to attend. Before the time for the circle this lady was forbidden by the police to hold the circle, and the policemen patrolled the walk in front of her house the entire evening ready to enforce that edict. It appears that this lady's daughter was soon to be confirmed in the Catholic church. Evidently the Catholic church of that city stands in close relation to the police—hence this outrage on the local and moral rights of a peaceful and law-abiding citizen, which is a shame and a disgrace on our boasted civilization.

Is it not time, fellow Spiritualists, to secure legislation that will relieve our medical clairvoyants and other abused lines of action of some of the restrictions which have been on the statute books for so many years? Our mission of defense should reach far enough to include the initiation of such legislation as will remove such restrictions which limit or abridge legitimate exercise of mediumship and spiritual gifts.

A strong organization can do this—and, fellow Spiritualists, will you not take sufficient interest in our state association to lend us your influence and your support toward the building up of such an organization?

Delegates to the N. S. A. Convention.

By virtue of an amendment to the state association by-laws, which was adopted at your last annual convention, it became the duty of your president to act as delegate to the National Convention, held in Washington, D. C., in October, 1903. Also to see that this state was represented in said convention with its quota of delegates. In pursuance of this important duty, I opened correspondence with the several societies, and in such instances as they did not feel able to send a delegate from their own numbers, I suggested names of competent, loyal Spiritualists who were likely to go if appointed, and succeeded in having our state fairly well represented. There were, however, a few vacancies, in instances where the delegates were detained at the last moment by some unforeseen occurrence.

I would suggest that in future, as soon as delegates find they cannot attend the National Spiritualists Association Convention, that they notify the president of that fact as early as possible. At least by the first day of that convention, so that suitable substitutions from our own state may be made, if possible.

I deem it important that each state be fully represented in all these conventions by its own loyal workers, for many reasons, but more especially to look after such legislation as is of a character which will affect our own state interests in some special feature, as is sometimes the case.

Our own state workers better understand the needs of our state, and can act more intelligently on such matters than can some delegate from a distant state where conditions may be entirely different in many respects.

Legislation by the N. S. A. Convention.

Several important measures came before the last National Spiritualists convention. One question in particular to which I would call your attention, was the adoption of certain regulations or requirements that should be complied with by candidates for ordination, and a compliance with such regulations was to be obligatory in all subordinate state associations in the granting of ordination certificates.

I had expected to be able to lay before each delegate a printed copy of such ordination service and requirements, but was informed by the National secretary that the N. S. A. board had postponed the date when such regulations would take effect until September 1 of this year, and had also deferred the printing of this matter.

In my opinion this ordination service and regulations, as adopted by the National Association, were of that conservative character which will be a safeguard to our cause, and will tend to strengthen our movement, and give it standing with candid thinking people.

We have with us Brother Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., who was chairman of the committee who formulated the ordination service, as adopted, and who can give this convention much light on this important subject, and will probably be asked to do so at some time during the convention. That committee of which he was the chairman, made a most exhaustive study of the whole subject, and of the laws bearing on ordination in each of the several states, especially as they relate to marriage by ordained ministers; and it was believed that this system, as adopted, will place the ministers of Spiritualism on the same basis, with the same rights and powers, as are enjoyed by ministers ordained by any of the other religious denominations.

Ordination.

This is a question that may well engage the most careful consideration of every Spiritualist in this land. How can ordination best be regulated so that only persons who are qualified by education, or development, or spiritual gifts shall receive endorsement of this kind.

There are ordination certificates in this country that are not worth the paper upon which they are written. Something over a year ago a person claiming to be a Spiritualist, wrote me from a western state, saying she was endeavoring to effect, or else secure control of a state charter in that state, and indicated that the object was to be in position to issue ordination certificates, remarking that plenty of people would pay $25 to be ordained, and that the business could be made a lucrative one.

Such a state of things as indicated could not exist in a state which had a good, true state association, working as auxiliary to the National Spiritualists Association. Here is another argument in favor of extending and perfecting our organized movement.

The National Association has very wisely taken the stand that ordination legitimately belongs to state associations, and, as I have elsewhere set forth, at the last National Convention adopted regulations to govern the action of state associations in certain respects, in the exercise of this very important function. With this system of uniform requirements in all the states, the certificates issued would carry with them not only the weight of legal authority to marry, but would also carry a wholesome influence which would command general respect and confidence. Under such a system there would be no more question as to the legality of marriages performed by regularly ordained ministers of Spiritualism than those performed by ministers of any other denomination.

Our state association has always aimed to be conservative in its action on ordinations, and I think it wise that the incoming board co-operate with the National Association in every legitimate way to carry out and put in force this system of ordination, revised if need be, but always conservative, efficient, and uniform in the several states. I recommend that this convention instruct the incoming board of trustees to so amend the state rules of ordination that they will harmonize with and conform to the regulations adopted by the National Association, with certain amendments thereto by the N. S. A., which I believe will be adopted at their next convention.

Registration of Ordained Ministers.

Heretofore the National Spiritualists Association has had in force a system of registration of ordained ministers of Spiritualism. Such registration to be made annually at a nominal cost.

I have not studied the workings of that system, but it occurred to me that either that system or some other that may be formulated could with profit be adopted and put into practice in New York state. Such a system, rightly conducted, ought to be of assistance to the local societies in securing suitable persons as pastors and speakers.

I recommend that a special committee be appointed to deal with this question which committee shall report to this convention, so that action may be taken on their report before the convention adjourns.

Committee on Literature.

One field of labor which appeals to me as worthy your consideration is that of the distribution of literature. We have favorable avenues for such distribution through our several auxiliary societies, and through our individual memberships, and such literature as goes out under authority of the state Association should be selected and edited with greatest care, and its proper preparation and selection would require the good judgment of those who have had wide experience in this work. I recommend the appointment of a committee of three, whose work shall be done under the general supervision of the incoming president, and kept within such lines of expenditure as the board of trustees may decide can be legitimately spared from the treasury to be used for this purpose. I would clothe that committee with authority to solicit contributions to a fund to be used for that special purpose.

I would have them equipped with a full list of names and addresses of individual members, and the officers of the auxiliary societies. I fully believe that a competent, conscientious and enthusiastic committee could do much in this line of work for the promotion of our cause, and the growth of our movement.

Life Membership.

At our last annual convention several life memberships were taken at $25 each. And I bespeak your earnest consideration this afternoon in behalf of this organized movement. Is it not worth your while to invest in a life membership? It assures you of continued connection with organized Spiritualism—not only in New York State, but with the National Association as well, without annual dues or further financial demands. Do you not feel that it is a privilege that you could enjoy to thus assist in laying permanent and lasting foundations for our state association. As a token of your life membership—a beautiful certificate will be presented you which will serve as a remembrance of this worthy action. If you do not feel that you can take a life membership the opportunity presents to become an individual member by the annual payment of $1. Supposing we should receive five thousand or even ten thousand individual memberships from the thousands of Spiritualists in this state. Yes, add to the present receipts $10,000 annually and have ten thousand more persons interested in our state work and what a work could be done and what a power for good it would make our state association. When I received my life membership certificate I framed it and hung it upon the walls of the meeting-place of our local society. I wanted people to know that I was a Spiritualist and that I feel a deep interest in the organization movement. I suggest to the incoming board that more strenuous efforts be put forth for the increase in both life and individual membership.

Children's Lyceums.

I regret that I am compelled to report the seeming lack of interest in children's lyceums in so many of our local societies.

To be sure there are in the state several good strong lyceums, which are doing a noble work with the children and with the young people. But we wish such lyceums might obtain in every society in the state. Young blood is as essential to the healthy growth of Spiritualism as to any avocation in life.

Some of our heads are sprinkled with the frosts of many winters and we shall soon graduate to the spiritual realm from whence all travelers may return, but our work in the physical will have been finished.

Younger men and younger women will in the nature of events soon be called upon to fill the depletion in our ranks, and the children's lyceums are the very best places in which to train up spiritual workers to fill our places. The National Association has appointed Brother John W. Ring as National Lyceum Superintendent and he is striving to arouse interest in this work.

He is sending out the Progressive Lyceum, which is an interesting and useful sheet for the children.

I recommend that each and all of our local societies open correspondence with Brother John Ring, of Galveston, Texas, and become imbued with a little of his enthusiasm and absorb some of his ideas regarding lyceum work. I bespeak the careful consideration of this question by the delegates here assembled and trust that some practical, judicious means may be discovered and put into operation whereby our lyceums may be put on a solid and substantial basis—the numbers and membership largely increased.

I sincerely hope that this convention will take some definite action on the question.

Responsive Readings.

The National Association at its last annual convention took up the question of the adoption of a system of responsive readings that societies could use if they so desired.

A committee had been appointed to formulate these and they were presented to that convention and discussed at some length but were laid on the table to be considered at some future convention. With the responsive readings suggested were a marriage ritual and a burial service. The adoption of these and sending them out under the authority of the National Association does not make their use obligatory upon any society or individual. I mention this subject to call atention to what has been done, and what will probably come up in future in this direction—but will make no recommendation at this time. I would say, however, that there has been some inquiry for a marriage and burial ritual.

What Spiritualism Stands For.

In secular affairs Spiritualism stands for Peace, "Universal Peace."

For arbitration in lieu of war in the adjustment of all differences.

For equal rights and privileges with all people regardless of sex and color.

For the enfranchisement of women, placing them on an equal footing with men at the ballot box.

For the same standard of purity for men and for women alike.

For equity, justice and truth at all times and everywhere.

And let us strive diligently to promote a realization of these lofty ideals for no more laudable principles can engage the attention of mankind.

Status of Local Societies.

During the year I have visited several of our local societies, especially in the western part of the state, and in many instances I find them weak financially as well as numerically; and I have queried to myself whether it could be possible that belief in a literal hell of fire and brimstone was a necessary adjunct to a religious movement in order to open the pocket-book.

Can it be possible that fear of hell is more potent than truth, justice and equity in commanding the support which is so essential to the life of this, or any other movement? Our cause is worthy of liberal financial support, and I appeal to all Spiritualists to support our movement, and enter into this work with a will and an enthusiasm that is worthy of so noble a cause.

Another drawback that confronts the state officers is the friction and discord which frequently come in and interfere with the success of our local societies.

Instances could be cited where local societies with local talent have been doing a good and efficient work, and things have been running smoothly for a year or more, when all at once another speaker drops in and proposes to purify things; contention and discord are at once stirred up, trouble begins, and many of the most spiritually-minded Spiritualists seek homes elsewhere, generally in the churches. Perhaps the society is broken up, or possibly meetings continue with diminished attendance and membership.

What a pity it is that these reformers of reformers cannot see that no matter how good their intentions, they are doing more harm than good to our cause, by rending societies in this way.

We have in another section of our report considered the question of the adoption of a system for the registration of ordained ministers of Spiritualism in the office of the secretary of our association. With this system in force and such information as would naturally go to the secretary and to the members of the board therewith, would not our local system be in position by availing themselves of such information, of avoiding some of the breakers which have heretofore been so prolific in causing trouble to them? But in reality, fellow Spiritualists, the remedy for all this is to cultivate spirituality, subdue jealousy and curb self.

We might as well try to grow corn in a snow bank as to grow spirituality in continuous discord and inharmony. Let us learn to govern self—control our thoughts and words, and produce a thought atmosphere in our meeting-places, which will be so full of harmony and so permeated with love that there will be no room for discord or contention.

Let us get our hearts right and contention will depart from our midst, our pocket-books will be converted, and Spiritualism will assume its proper station in the world and mankind will be doubly blessed by its coming.

This, my fellow Spiritualists, is in my opinion the real salvation for Spiritualism.

We have the proof of immortality.

Interesting Clairvoyant Revelations.

Spirit Scenes and Conversations Graphically Portrayed at the Meeting of J. Clegg Wright.

The third Sunday in March the First Society of Spiritualists of Washington, D. C., met for their regular service. Mr. Wright was the speaker. Previous to the lecture the Sunday-school or lyceum met for the usual lesson given to the various classes. As the adult class was forming a circle in the back part of the hall, a class of children near the piano were singing, "Then Scatter Seeds of Kindness, for Your Reaping By and By." I remarked that the thought just expressed in the song was a good text for our consideration. One gentleman said, "Don't say text, it savors too much of the orthodox churches, and we have had enough of them."

Mr. Wood, the president of the First Society, said, "Mr. May has given a sentiment that might be well for us to consider. Is it well to antagonize the denominations? Have not they given much that has been a benefit to the world, and given all their light enabled them to give?"

That set the ball to rolling, and as there were a number of very intelligent ladies and gentlemen present, and several spirits spoke through controlled mediums, the result was many thought waves were set in motion, and the vibrations carried beyond the power of mortal understanding.

We must not lose sight of the fact that Spirit lives are controlled by mental laws. Mortals are infants in their understanding of mental science, compared with those who have been in spirit life a few hundred, a thousand, or even a few years, and sought to learn the conditions and higher laws of their life.

At the close of the Sunday-school the people took their seats to listen to Mr. Wright's guide's able lecture. All expected the usual treat. I happened to sit between two mediums who are very scientific in their development. Both saw a little of what I saw, and a third medium in another part of the house was conscious of certain influences coming in and causing the demonstration all were witnesses of. He said he knew there were Catholic spirits there. I speak of these three mediums as a proof that others beside myself can testify that these things are true.

While Mr. Wright was talking, giving a short address before going under control, he said: "No man has ever seen God; no man ever will see God."

Just after he made that statement I saw coming down the center of the hall a company of spirits, a man, two women and a band of children. The man carried a black banner on which were the words in letters of fire, "There is a God." They passed to the platform, and formed a half circle around the front, each dropping upon the knees as if kneeling before an altar. I got the sense of a strong religious feeling of devotion coming in with them, and while they were kneeling an altar rose around the front of the platform with all the paraphernalia belonging to a Catholic church.

The kneeling ones crossed themselves, and said to me, "It is our custom." Much to my surprise, because of the display of the semblance of their church, they said, "We know you think there should be no creed or denomination in our sphere of life, but we feel more at home with what we have been accustomed to. It is only a form, but it harmonizes our feelings."

I saw that they had the power to create, to build up anything they desired through laws at their command.

The children remained kneeling till Mr. Wright finished speaking, and as a gentleman went to the piano to sing for us, they rose, faced the audience and began singing. The man stood at one end of the altar, robed as a priest, holding the banner in his hand. He erected a crucifix beside him. The children formed a group in front of the altar, and the two sisters, who had been nurses in some public institution where these orphan children had been cared for, and from where they had passed to spirit life, stood near them. The children were singing and the priest said to us: "We do not see God any more than he does, but we have Christ, who died for truth," and he pointed to the crucifix.

The children said, "Yes, we sing his praise."

They all seemed so much in earnest, so truly devotional, so in harmony with that which is a spiritual light to the world, seeking to reform and elevate the mortal lives. They manifested themselves to me, they said, because I was with my guides working along the same lines, and seeking to give Christ's teachings to the world in its true meaning. The priest handed one of my guides a white banner with the word "Truth" in gold letters as representing our work.

Mr. Wright went under control, but talked only a short time, when he sat down, and spirit John Shaw announced that the guide first speaking could not go on with the lecture, but that he would try to take the same thought and continue it, but the medium would not be able to stand while he was speaking. After a few moments spirit John Shaw was unable to speak farther, and Mr. Wright was assisted from the hall in a weak and faint condition, and the mediums who were to give messages used up the remaining time of the morning service.

The priest was a man of strong mental powers, had been a magnetic force carrying all with his will powers, and still wielded the scepter as a leader of a certain circle in the realms of spirit life.

I cannot give you the conversation between him and my guides, but they represented themselves as working in harmony with the good influences in life, so I was a little surprised when Mr. Wright was unable to go on with the lecture, and they showed me that this band of Catholic spirits had caused the condition.

Soon after one of the mediums began giving messages, I was conscious of new moments coming into the hall, and looking up I saw a company of spirits come in. A very beautiful young woman carrying a young babe in her arms came down the aisle to the opposite end of the altar from where the priest stood, and kneeling, erected a crucifix, and laid the child before it. The agony of her life was all expressed in the beautiful face, and in the thought-pictures that came like a panorama for me to read. The pure young girl whose life was laid at the foot of the cross given to God, had been forced to yield more than life itself to see the infant life crushed out of her innocent child, its existence hid. The agony expressed in all she told I shall never forget, and facing the priest she said: "You bring these here to show your work, these from your public institutions, but I come to show the hidden life of your inner sanctuary."

The strong man of iron will stood there trying to be calm while he faced the results of his past life, which he had been trying to hide under later work in the public world, and still clung to the belief, or claimed to believe, that Christ redeemed him, at the same time the thought pictures he gave out revealed the fact that he knew he must reap as he had sown, must bear the result of every act of his life. He could not help thinking, and the laws not only forced his thoughts from him, but made them readable to all in the same condition of life as himself, as well as to a developed medium.

Again I cannot take the space to tell all I saw and heard, but could you have seen and heard all I did, you would know that the lake of fire, the hell of the Bible is only an illustration, and that God, nature, or whatever you call the power that has made the mental laws, makes that hell equal to the illustration.

The book of life was truly open for all to read, and try to hide the past as he would, each thought pictured itself on the atmosphere, and showed how his sins haunted him, and while he still tried to appear as working righteously with these pure women and children, he stood over a gulf from which leaped flames of fire scorching him at all times.

He was working to eliminate the past, but it confronted him at every turn.

He stood alone in the great hereafter; no love, sacred and holy, gladdened his life; no child honored him with the name of father. He had to meet parenthood, but, oh! the horror of it, as it confronted him!

I saw another company of spirits come in and distribute themselves in various parts of the hall, but one man walked to the side of the priest and stood there, as strong in his mental powers as he had been when he defied death, for he was one, he said, of many, whom the Catholic church had burned at the stake, and he threw out an influence which caused the banner the priest held to drip with blood, the letters of fire showing through, proclaiming, "There is a God."

During the week I was conscious of strong mental vibrations coming to me from many personalities, expressing strong interest and emotions, and I knew there would be a sequel to the Sunday revelation. Saturday evening as I sat in my room I suddenly felt the presence of some one just come in; a strong magnetism touched me. I looked up and recognized Swedenborg's father, the Bishop of Skara, and welcomed him as a guest. I saw him with my guides that night, and the next morning he was still with them. I could see them sitting at the table conversing, and he had a large Bible before him, and told me that he would help me to teach it to the world as he now understood it. He said he would teach me to understand the Psalms. He went with us to the hall, telling me there would be other guests there. I sat during the lecture beside the same two mediums who were beside me the previous Sunday, knowing they made a good battery for me to work with. I saw many of the followers and friends of Swedenborg and his father. A crowd of spirits had assembled, composed of those powerful mental and magnetic forces while here as mortals, and with their higher attainments as spirit beings, they were indeed a power in their realms of life.

There were others, crusaders, they said, and truly the aisle was filled with soldiers in the armor of the Crusade Knights. I saw sitting on the platform where she had kneeled the Sunday before, the same beautiful young woman, with the babe smiling in her arms. The motherhood that had been denied her in mortal life, she found and enjoyed in the spirit world.

When Mr. Wright came on the platform I saw others as plainly as I saw him. He was surrounded by a guard, among them were Egyptians. One stepped to the front and told me he was an Egyptian priest, and at once a temple appeared on the platform, which from descriptions I have read, I recognized as belonging to the history of Egypt thousands of years ago, and the intelligence which spoke through Mr. Wright was the priest of that temple.

I told the friends sitting with me that it was an Egyptian priest speaking, but as Mr. Wright was almost a stranger to me I did not learn till a few days ago that one of his guides was an Egyptian priest, claiming to have lived in that capacity thousands of years before Christ. The lecture was grand. There was in the hall a sense of peace and quietness noticed and mentioned by many as a beautiful condition.

Washington, D. C. MRS. MAY A. PRICE.

A PRACTICAL COURSE FOR Physicians and Students of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Neuropathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to

MISS NETTIE WINTER,

We have the grand spiritual lessons that come across the borderland of the two worlds. We claim our movement to be identical in character with that earlier movement, the primitive Christianity of 2,000 years ago, and if we are wise enough, and good enough and strong enough to hold to the true landmarks we will make our cause the power for good which will elevate and spiritualize the races.

I feel that I am not alone in the sentiments herein expressed. The tendency of Spiritualism and Spiritualists is in the direction I have indicated.

Our meetings partake more and more of the devotional features. There is less of materiality and more of spirituality apparent in our work and with our workers.

Hence I feel that there is more for encouragement than discouragement for the workers in our local societies, and I would say, brothers and sisters, press on, do not be disheartened or discouraged, do your whole duty, but do it in harmony and in love for every child of God.

H. W. RICHARDSON,
President.

Condensed Report of the Ohio State Association Convention.

The sixth annual convention of the O. S. A. convened at the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium, Columbus, Ohio, May 27, 28, and 19, 1904. President Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran in the chair; all officers present except first vice-president, Mr. S. Mehaffy, of Conneaut.

The first day's proceedings were of a business nature, consisting in reports of the officers—president, secretary and treasurer, and appointing of committees.

There were 22 local societies represented by the delegates this year, an increase of six societies over last year. Every delegate made an individual report. The missionaries, Mrs. E. Schauss of Toledo, and Mrs. A. E. Baird showed by their reports that they have been doing great work in the past year in assisting President Mrs. Curran to put Spiritualism on a higher standard, with a zeal seldom equaled. In the month of March the above named sisters with the assistance of President H. D. Barrett, held 25 mass-meetings all over the state. A vote of thanks was tendered them by the convention.

This convention was the most harmonious ever held from a spiritual standpoint. All officers and members were greatly elated over the grand success achieved; all promised to double their efforts in spreading our glorious truth. Saturday morning the Ritual as passed by the N. S. A. was adopted with the recommend of an amendment. By-laws were also amended.

All ordinations were laid over until after Sept. 1, 1904. The delegate to the National Convention, Mrs. C. F. Curran, made her report and received a vote of thanks from the convention. Secretary R. C. Baird received a vote of thanks, also the spiritual papers for their kind assistance.

Open meetings were held May 27 and 28, and three meetings on Sunday.

Excellent programs were prepared, consisting of vocal and instrumental music furnished by the West and East Side Societies of Columbus, and others.

The lecturers were Mr. H. D. Barrett, the N. S. A. president; Dr. G. B. Warne, president of the Ill. S. S. A.; Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president Ill. S. S. A.; Mrs. C. F. Curran, Mrs. E. Schauss and Mr. F. D. Dunakin.

The above speakers made soul-inspiring addresses and carried their audience by storm.

The message mediums were Mrs. C. F. Curran, Mrs. E. Schauss, Mrs. A. E. Baird. They brought many glad tidings from the spirit friends.

The election showed the appreciation of the good work done by our beloved sister, Mrs. C. F. Curran, in re-electing her president by acclamation.

First vice-president, H. E. Boerstler, Columbus.

Second vice-president, Hattie G. Webster, Columbus.

Secretary, C. A. Sollinger, Cleveland.

Treasurer, F. D. Dunakin, Antwerp.

Corresponding secretary, A. E. Baird, Elyria.

Trustees—W. V. Nicum, Dayton; Thos D. Bellis, Cleveland; Mrs. W. S. Allen, Cincinnati; Mrs. Carrie Bartholomew, Geneva.

Delegates to the National convention—Mrs. C. F. Curran and Mrs. A. E. Baird.

MY EXPERIENCES

A Gleam of Sunshine Amid Darkness and Gloom.

Forty years ago I was married to a most estimable young woman, she being 20 years of age and I 25. For 38 years we lived and loved together through all the varying vicissitudes of life, when she was suddenly taken ill and passed away. My grief was such that no one can know but they who have passed through a like experience. For eleven days my grief was intense, well nigh unbearable, when on the night of the eleventh day after she had left me, just after I had retired for the night, I suddenly felt a presence near me, invisible but real, and a moment later a gentle voice whispered, "Don't grieve. I am still with you. We are not separated."

The thrill of joy that passed through my whole being no language can describe, and I arose on the following morning cheered and comforted, for I felt sure that my dear one was still alive and could come to me and we could converse together.

The next night I expected another visit, but she came not, and the following night she did not come, and I felt disappointed and a little downcast; but I thought this is a proof that she really was with me the other night, for if it had been a delusion, why should it not occur every night when the conditions were just the same.

The third night I had just extinguished the light and had lain down, the room being not quite dark, when, lo! a human face appeared about two feet from me in front of my face; it was the most beautiful face I had ever looked on. It was the face of a young woman, and I could easily recognize it as that of my dear wife when she was young—about the time we were married—only more beautiful. I was spellbound. It only remained five or six seconds, then melted away smiling.

Tears filled my eyes, but they were tears of delight, and never, never shall I forget the vision of that beautiful face; but it has never been repeated since.

After that she would come at intervals, but invisible, for about eight months, when on the night of November 2, 1902, she came very distinctly and remained a long time.

She said: "Now I am going to be serious with you. You know that we are now free from our marriage vows, and our thirty-eight years of companionship have been very happy, but it is now over, and we are free, and if you wish it, I will leave you now and return no more."

I said, "Oh, no—a thousand times no. I can never be happy without you."

Then she came very near and seemed to enter my very organism, closer, as some one has said, than hands or feet. It seemed as if heart beat to heart, life to life, and she said: "Then let us pledge ourselves to each other for the spiritual world, and as long as we love each other supremely nothing can ever separate us." We did then pledge ourselves for the spiritual world. Then she said: "Now I will take on earth conditions, whatever that may mean, and will never leave you until you are ready to come, and we will go away together."

From that time I consciously realize that she is always near me. All I have to do is to think of her, and I instantly feel that she is at my side, and I am more under her influence now than I was when she was with me in the body, for I feel that now she knows me more fully than ever before, knows all I do, say or even think, and many a time she checks me in some little thing that is not quite right.

The other day I felt tempted to smoke a cigar, but she interfered and said, "Please don't," calling me a familiar name. "I hate the smell of tobacco smoke as much as I ever did." That was enough. I always give in, for for I would not do anything to displease her or cause the least shade of separation between us. I am only too happy to keep her near me.

Now, then, is all this really true, or is it only imagination, delusion, or the subjective mind replying to the objective mind? Well, to me it is very real and very comforting. Now I, in common with very many others, believe that my dear companion is not dead, but that she still lives, is still herself, the same individuality that she was before she left the body, and that her individuality or selfhood is made up of various characteristics, such as intelligence, mind, self-consciousness, character, memory, experience, likes and dislikes, and love, that mighty power which is only another name for attraction—deathless, indestructible love.

I no longer fear physical death. I no longer regard physical death as a calamity, but as an event of transcendent rapture, by means of which we are again united to each other in the spiritual world.

THEODORE SIMPSON.

Vancouver, B. C.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

The skies above so loving bend,
The stars look out from depths of blue;
We cannot feel death is the end,
The whole world pleads it is not true.

Our faith so fair we have no fear!
We feel that life is more than breath,
And Love and Light doth dry our tear,
For well we know there is no death.

The change that comes in every clime,
Gives to the soul a fuller view
Of endless joys and truths sublime,
Beneath the arch of bending blue.

The loved ones gone are yet still dear
As when we felt their pleasing power.
And when we feel their presence near,
Is fond memory's sweetest hour.

For laws of love no bonds will break;
And realms of joy abide all space!
At deathless dawn all souls awake
Bathed in love and bounteous grace.

To cheer and cherish hope's desire,
To live the life the good soul lives,
Must constant lead our hearts aspire
To gain the goal which glory gives.

From star-set skies the light shall gleam,
To tell life is more than breath,
The light of love, and joys supreme,
To make us feel there is no death.

Again we call your attention to the Mt. Pleasant Park camp-meeting which opens July 31 and closes August 28. Each day is a revelation in the varied preparations for the meeting this summer. The grounds are in the best condition, and paint is making old buildings new. "No price is set on the lavish summer," and nowhere can a more delightful, healthful and invigorating spot be found than on this park. Attractive cottages, cozy tents, splendid hotel and restaurant service, a spacious dining hall, the reasonableness of the charges and the attention given to the smaller details, are the wonder of all visitors.

The afternoon teas, the musicals, theatricals and dances are alike pleasing to the old and young. The conference meetings each morning are of the greatest interest, and to the many friends, lecturers, ministers, etc., that have expressed a desire to be "one of us" during their summer vacation, we will say every subject that will break the long rule of sorrow and pain—that will elevate and spiritualize the human family is here discussed at length. Each one has the privilege of expressing the heart's intensest longing, believing that after many days good will return to them.

Come friends, an outing will make your homes all the better, your inspiration all the greater. It is well, sometimes, to change the vibrations by getting away where we can gather new force, a store of new ideas and association with which we may decorate and enrich our homes after our return.

The Diamond Jo line has granted one fare transportation for the round trip on their magnificent steamers plying between St. Louis and St. Paul. These boats are trim, swift, commodious, and have a gallant crew to steer you safely from port to port. The trip by water, gliding swiftly among nature's most favored haunts, passing through intricate channels and by innumerable isles is one of exquisite delight.

The Western Passenger Association has kindly granted the rate of fare and one-third for the round trip upon the certificate plan from points in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri, going tickets to be purchased on July 28-30 inclusive and on each Tuesday and Friday thereafter during the continuance of the camp session. Where the journey is made over more than one line it is necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket of each road. Study this carefully. Buy your ticket, taking a certificate from your agent, board one of these swift, flying trains, "shake and before you have time to fully comprehend it you are landed at Clinton.

All burdens from the heart,
All weary thoughts away,"

Several cab and baggage lines ply between the depots and steamboat landings and the park, while the electric street cars pass the main entrance. Travel is made so pleasant, so easy these 20th century days that a trip is almost like a dream, and you awake to find yourself enjoying life at Mt. Pleasant Park. "HE THAT WILL NOT REASON IS A BIGOT; HE THAT CANNOT REASON IS A FOOL; AND HE THAT DARE NOT REASON IS A SLAVE."

There are no miracles. "Truth is stranger than fiction." "The laws of nature are the laws of God." Whatever man does is arbitrary—mechanical; whatever God does is natural. Every creature and atom of matter is endowed with intelligence according to its needs and environment. Prof. P. Braun says, "So-called matter is not dead matter but 'mind in different degrees of development;' in other words that consciousness is in matter. Huxley acknowledged that 'Thomas Edison declared himself utterly unable to conceive of an atom than conscious and intelligent.'" Again Prof. Braun says, "Certain insects, bugs and worms are preyed upon by birds while other insects similar in form and size but distinctive because of their peculiar markings or color, are distasteful and so are left unmolested. The little insects whose lives are in danger, soon learn the distinction, and when liable to exposure they assume the self-same color, markings and all, of their unmolested neighbors."

In many instances the senses of the brute creation are more sensitive and acute than human beings. "The vibration of light is everywhere. The owl sees in the dark. That shows it is there. But man cannot see it. For man that vibration is only visible in the lamp, in the sun, in the moon." The instinct of animals is sometimes a surer guide and prophecy than the logic and reasoning of men.

A legend, sanctioned by ages, often proves to be more truthful than history.

History is written by a human hand and no writer is without bias and prejudice.

The richest veins of ore lie deeply imbedded, and mixed with slag and recrement. Pure superstition, belief in myths, and fabled gods and heroes, have served their purposes in the world as well as doctrines founded upon solid facts and reason.

Opium produces just as beautiful oratorical and literary gems as genius. The most current coin contains some alloy.

There is a grain of superstition in every faith, a weak point in every armor.

The Catholic believes in an infallible church and the Protestant in an infallible book.

In the deepest sense there is no such power in the world as evil; no such thing as sin. Ignorance is at the base of all the ills that befall mankind. But you might as well undertake to catch up with a ray of light; overtake to-morrow, or photograph thought, as to undertake to weed out the superstition in man's belief or the cringing, servile element inherent in his nature. He bows before deities, kings, saints and heroes. There is no measure of beauty, or form of ugliness he has not worshiped. His deity changes with climate, age and intelligence. Strange as the sentiment may sound thousands of people would accomplish more for the world if they would worship their fellow-men more and their imaginary God less. God can get along without our sympathy, our aid, or attention, but our fellow-man cannot. The man whose faith leads him to believe that whatever sin he commits there is a being able and willing to forgive him will not be as careful in his acts as the person who knows that no violation of either a physical or a moral law can be wiped out and that the record as made forever will stand.

The effect of the slightest cut through the bark of a tree, or the laceration of the skin upon the body of the person can never be eradicated. The wound will heal but the scar remains. Superstition and bigotry often pass for piety, while selfishness and ambition have been known to masquerade in the garb of philanthropy and patriotism. Never will an old Jewish Pharisee, when he stands, dismantled before God, stripped of his hypocrisy, be more astonished at his selfish and unworthy life than many at the present day who posing as saints, will in the final accounting, find themselves to be flagrant imposters and arrant hypocrites.

The most opinionated and disagreeable persons I have ever known, were the most scrupulous as to form and tenacious as to creed. They would turn a spiritual oasis into a desert. People's idea of Christianity is often a misconception;—it covers no ground. They stake all on a man, a book, or a symbol. They rely upon architecture, rites, rituals and relics to intensify their piety and stimulate devotion. The Mohammedan has his temple, the Catholic his saints, images, beads and crucifix; and the Protestant his Bible. Religion has always been the greatest civilizing factor in history. The highest thought of a people, at length becomes embodied in a book, crystallized into a religion, a creed, a life guidance. And yet there are laws higher than any man, more commanding than any creed or book.

No system of philosophy can be deemed perfect, no system of religion can be received as an ultimatum to the world. The most of our science is based upon theory and not upon knowledge.

What we know about astronomy is largely a guess. All advancement is from the simple to the complex; from the crude to the well digested thought. Slang words in time become good English; phrases that originated in the slums finally are woven into classics. First the hut, then the house, then the hamlet, village, city, metropolis. First the the individual, then the family, then the tribe, state, empire or republic. Let us keep our minds open and expectant. Every day comes a new revelation, every morning a new creation. Old things continually pass away. The old fashioned church, the old fashioned school, the old fashioned way of farming, are all things of the past. We could not bring them back if we would. The simplicity of life, business, manners, customs and activities of all kinds which our forefathers practiced and enjoyed have forever become obsolete. It is said that the hands of the dial of time never move backward. The past fifty years have revolutionized scientific, philosophical and religious investigation. Dr. Lyman Abbott, speaking of the change in religious thought and of his own experience said: "My experience has been the experience of many. It is a mistake to think this change is minor or unimportant; a still greater mistake to attack the faith which we believe we have outgrown. I respect it, although I myself hold it no more. I think of God not as one dwelling apart from nature, but in nature its dwelling force. There is only one law and force—God. There are no vital energies, no great first cause, but one great underlying cause. There is no longer a radical distinction between the natural and supernatural, and the supernatural is natural. I have come to think of the creation as a continuous process. Every spring is a new creation. As I think of God as universally and continually creating, so I think of Him as not ruling over creatures, but in them. He was always in history, but not more truly guiding Moses than that other great statesman, Gladstone.

"So a miracle is not a manifestation of extraordinary but ordinary power. Forgiveness is no more the remission of penalty, but taking away sin. I no longer look forward to a great day of resurrection. We are all in processes of resurrection. Death goes from the cradle to the grave, and resurrection along with it."

The longer you tread in a beaten path the narrower and deeper it grows. The belief of the multitude is never the belief of the elect few.

A man's religious views neither makes him honest or dishonest. It may for a time check the outward action but not the inward desire or intention. All the education a boy gets at the academy applies to the surface of life—not to its depths. No man was ever made great by the schools; neither was he ever made good by a creed. The love of truth and justice must be borne in the heart, else no set rules or formulated belief will be of any avail. There is nothing real or vital in rites, liturgies or dedicated phrases of worship; neither is it essential under what title we worship, nor the name that is inscribed upon our banner. "The name of the bush that blazed before the wondering eyes of Moses in the wilderness is of little consequence. Enough it is to remember that through its kindling light came a message."

Thousands " * * * groping in the darks of Thought Touched the Great Hand and knew it not."

Whatever is vital and true to nature and life in a belief, doctrine or dogma will never lose its hold on the hearts of the people—all else will change and in time be winnowed out. This can only be done by the widest liberty of thought, speech and action. There are microscopic animals which live in a drop of water, but the leviathan of the deep must have the ocean for a home. There are men who live and die contented, without ever leaving the vicinity in which they were born, but there are others that the earth itself is not large enough for their ambition.

Each individual thing feels, believes and acts according to his mental and physical bias and environment. The careful observer reads the purpose of every person as he passes along the street. The well trained eye of an Indian sees the meaning in the disturbance of a leaf, a twig, a blade of grass and reads a history in a sound. The poet sings and the prophet foretells, far beyond what the most learned and observant can solve by reason and logic. They see a word and it enfolds a chapter. They read a sentence and it suggests a volume. "Truth has always dwelt with the few" and in time the world learns to recognize them. Even the dumb brute knows its master. A herd of cattle, a drove of wild horses recognize their leader. Men instinctively make way for the master mind. "In the presence of the Alps all false greatness perishes."

Through the ages men have contended over definitions, wrangled over symbols, asserted propositions they neither comprehended or understood, but to-day science, philosophy and religion are seeking common ground. As scholars now teach the unity of nature, that there is really but one substance in the universe, so to-day the world is working more and more into harmony and concert of action, thought and feeling. Instead of the brotherhood of a people the watchword has become the brotherhood of mankind. It is claimed that the English-speaking people already control the destinies of the race; and it has been prophesied that the English language, in some distant future, is to be the universal dialect of all peoples, nationalities and tongues. The trend is towards one universal prayer to pray, one universal psalm to sing, one universal creed for all men, nations and times. It is claimed in ancient history that whatever road you took it finally led to Rome—so whatever scientific or theological view we entertain it leads to God—but

"Each in His Own Name."

"A fire-mist and a planet, a crystal and a cell—
A jellyfish and a saurian, and caves where the cavemen dwell,
Then a sense of law and beauty, and a face turned from the clod—
Some call it Evolution, and others call it God.

"A haze on the far horizon—the infinite tender sky—
The ripe, rich tints of the cornfield, and the wild geese sailing high;
And all over upland and lowland, the charm of the goldenrod,
Some of us call it Nature, and others call it God.

"Like the tide of a crescent sea beach when the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings come welling and surging in,
Come from the mystic ocean, whose rim no foot has trod,
Some of us call it Longing, and others call it God.

"A picket frozen on duty, a mother starved for her brood,
Socrates drinking the hemlock, and Jesus on the rood;
And millions who, humble and nameless, the straight, hard pathway trod;
Some call it Consecration, and others call it God."

THE MYSTERY OF MYSTERIES.

As Comprehensively Revealed to R. E. Flection, M. D.

Among our early psychological studies evincing occult intelligence, was the following. April 16th, 1904, E. M., 304, as I was leaving the tea-table, our caretaker, Miss Anna L——, said: "I think Madam and I will go out and see spirits to-night."

"Well" said I, "if you are all to go out and leave me alone, I think I will try and materialize some myself."

To which she replied, laughing, "Why, Doctor, if you should see a spirit you would be frightened."

"That remark," said I, "reminds me of what a colored man said away back in 1879. At that time I was dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of this city, and advertised for a janitor. A great big burly colored man applied for the position. I asked him if he would not be afraid to handle the dead in the dissecting room? He replied: 'No, massa; Ise neber 'fraid ob de dead; it's de livin' Ise 'fraid of.'"

Soon after tea that evening while at the Ouija board, the name of Berry Macintosh was spelled out. I said, "I don't remember you, Berry. Did you know me while on earth?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Where did you live?"

"123 South Division street, Buffalo."

"How long since you passed out, Berry?"

"Fourteen years."

"Did I doctor you then?"

"No."

"Why did you come to see me to-night?"

"I heard what you said to Anna as you left the tea table."

"What did I say?"

"Just what I said to you when you employed me as janitor at the College of Physicians and Surgeons."

Just imagine my surprise, for I had never heard that spirits were all around us and could hear and comprehend our conversation.

"Oh!" I said, "then you were a colored man?"

"Yes, I was colored while on earth, but I'm white here."

I asked him if he knew anybody there that knew me? "He did not know," he said. I asked him if he knew Col. Ingersoll?

"No," he said.

"Well, Berry, you go to Fred Douglass, whom you must know, for he spent years here as an anti-slavery orator."

"Yes," he replied quickly.

"Tell him to tell you the story he told me many years ago about the Colonel, and he will introduce you to him." The story was as follows:

Douglas said; "Once I was in Peoria, Ill., and could not get a place to sleep. I had money, and did not starve. I was almost disheartened. Finally I asked a policeman what I should do. He said, 'Go to No. —— street, and you will find a man who is very kind to you people.' I went there, rang the bell, and a great, large, fine-looking gentleman came, and after hearing my story said, 'Come in, sir. Have you had any supper?' 'Yes,' said I, and can pay for a bed,' etc. I staid all night and longer, for that man was Robert G. Ingersoll."

The next morning, April 17, while trying to get some one on the Ouija board, "BOB" was spelled out. "Hello, Colonel; glad you've come. I am going to tell you a story." And at this juncture he crowded me out and said: "You had a colored man to see you last night by the name of Berry Macintosh. He came to me with Fred Douglass and told me all you said, and we had a good visit."

Now I would like some "know-it-all" critic explain what I have detailed. Certainly I had not heard of the death of the janitor, nor thought of him since he left the college in 1881. If such demonstrations do not give evidence of spirit return then my name is not Experiences in Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—I saw in The Progressive Thinker of June 4, a question by B. R. Anderson, then a request by the editor, so I will give a few of my experiences.

To-day is the twelfth anniversary of the Junior Order of American Mechanics; they are celebrating in grand style, with four bands, grand parades in uniforms, etc. This morning I went to my daughters. Before I got in the door I saw lying on the table across the room a new panama hat with a raised welt across the crown, the brim turned up at back and sides, but dipped in front. I crossed the room, looked at the hat and said: "I saw that hat about three weeks ago."

My daughter said, "It is Bert's, to wear in the parade."

I then found that the time that I saw the hat corresponded with the time that the lodge decided what kind of hat to wear.

About one year ago I was visiting at one of my sons, about seven miles from my own home. One night I saw a grand parade, a great many different lodges. Among them was a very big lot of Indians. I was amused at their antics. The next evening my daughter-in-law received a letter from her mother living nine miles from where I was, saying that my son's family should come to Franklin next Saturday a week to see the big time. I afterwards learned that I saw then exactly what occurred about ten days later, the Order of the Red Men being the Indians I saw.

I will now give a different kind of experience, but first let me say I am a member of the National Developing Circle. In the latter part of October, 1902, I was spending the evening with a friend who was also an N. D. C. member. While chatting, I saw a flag; above it about four inches was a large black star, then below the flag appeared a big black metallic coffin; across the coffin was a gray robe thrown. After a few minutes my friend and I saw the coffin on a peculiar truck of some kind, we couldn't tell what, for it appeared to be after night. I got the name Frank. Well, we wondered a great deal about that, for the next five or six weeks.

Now the postmaster at that time was Frank McGowan (he had traveled with President McKinley for three months, taking down speeches, etc., during the campaign of McKinley's election). About five weeks after we saw the coffin Mr. McGowan was stricken with black smallpox; he passed out of the mortal body, he was placed in a big black metallic coffin, he was buried after night, the coffin was taken to the cemetery on a pair of bob-sleds. To say it cast a pall over this city is putting it mild. SALLIE E. STIVER.

A REASONABLE REQUEST.

An Open Letter to W. F. Jamieson.

Dear Friend:—For a number of years you have been before the spiritual public, denying the fact of spirit return and communion with mortals, without making any investigation, so far as I know. You will pardon my plain, blunt language in addressing you, for I assure you it is in the most friendly spirit.

The most indubitable proofs of spirit communication have been publicly offered to you by writers whose veracity you would not question, but whose statements you ignore, still claiming that you can explain the phenomena on mundane principles.

Your failure to explain is reasonably ascribable to your inability to do so; but there are many who are pleased at your denial of the genuineness; and if that were your object, the course you are pursuing could not be better accomplished.

Now you propose to prepare a few articles for The Progressive Thinker on the "Weakness of Witnesses." Would it not be a little wiser to strengthen your own position before the spiritual public? Real strength is in the doing of what one says he can do. Your strength consists in words, words, something on the Falstaffian order.

To a logical mind the verity of spiritual communion does not depend on witnesses at all. Let me illustrate. I was never in the city of New York, but I am as certain of its existence and what is going on there, as if I had lived in it. I held a claim against a man there, and seeing an advertisement of one whose business was to collect accounts on commission, I sent him my claim, and in due time I received a check for the amount minus the commission.

Again: An acquaintance of mine, in conversation with me, spoke incidentally of having lived in Boston, and named certain streets and places in regard to that city. He had no thought of convincing me of its existence, for there was no motive. A few years later, another acquaintance, in another part of the country, an entire stranger to the one above mentioned, spoke of the city of Boston and incidentally mentioned the same streets and places, assuming my knowledge of its existence. Then I heard a numbr of others speak of that city, and lately I received a paper, The Banner of Light, published in Boston. I was never there, but have not the least doubt of its existence. This, we call moral evidence.

Now the fact of spirit return and communion with mortals is subject to the same kind of evidences. I know, and so does every intelligent Spiritualist know, that spirit manifestations have arisen sporadically, so to speak, all over the country, without any knowledge of these manifestations elsewhere; and of course, without any intention of proving their genuineness in that way. There were no witnesses here, and the proof is as unquestionable as that in regard to the existence of New York or Boston.

Now let us examine your "mermaid" case. For a long time there were witnesses to prove that all so-called manifestations were fraudulent. It was proved by intelligent witnesses, even professors of medical colleges, that the raps were produced by knee-joint motions; and numberless witnesses proved that the raps were produced by toe-joint movements. Now you prove that there are no mermaids because of the weakness of the witnesses, and you propose to prove there are no genuine spirit manifestations by means of "weak witnesses," and yet, you admit the existence of the manifestations, but affirm that spirits have nothing to do with them.

Again: One begins the study of chemistry. A text book is put into his hands and his teacher assigns a lesson. Definitions are given, and the principles upon which the science is founded are formulated and clearly set forth. He pursues his studies until manifestation in the laboratory is required. When he is ready to enter into experimental work he is as well satisfied as to the verity of chimical science as he is afterward. One commences the study of geology with books and plates; completes his study and is just as confident of the facts upon which it rests as if he had delved among the rocks and taken out real fossils.

In the study of these branches of science, the student has no proof but WITNESSES. He does not go into the laboratory for proof, but for practical knowledge, nor go among the rocks because he doubts what he has learned of geology from books or by his teacher. These witnesses are no more credible than those who bear testimony of the verity of spirit return and communion. It is corroborated by moral evidence, and all the testimony of science and the acceptance of millions.

Now look at the position you occupy before the spiritual public. You claim to explain how these phenomena are produced; but you do not explain. You virtually proclaim to the world that you are wiser than hundreds of scientists and philosophers who have explained. When Prof. Hare, after years of patient investigation with a medium who never posed in public and never took pay, proved the verity of the spiritual phenomena and published the result in a large volume entitled "Spiritualism Scientifically Demonstrated," your denial of their genuineness, by necessary implication, declares him to be mentually incompetent; and all the scientists—Crookes, Wallace and hundreds of others, incapables! You alone can solve the problem! Why don't you do it? The church would bless you and cover you with glory. You would prove yourself the wisest of living men, and would command the homage of the world.

You promised to do this; what prevents you? Come out from your barricade of denials and do what the church is praying for you to do. Come out, my friend, and settle this great controversy. You say you can; now prove it, and not screen yourself behind "Weak Witnesses" articles.

Sincerely and respectfully your,

E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

Whom the Angels Name Lenore.

Why she should come to me I know not: I only know she is here. I do not know her spirit name. I fancy it is no longer Fanny. In dreaming of her I always think of "That rare and radiant maiden

Whom the angels name Lenore."

And so I have grown to call her Lenore. As I first remember her she was a bright, dark, laughing little thing, with short curls that tumbled in bonny, riotous fashion about her altogether charming head.

And now she is my guardian angel! I did not love her then, but I knew she was pretty, and I can see her bright, piquant face, as she appeared in the years gone by, more distinctly than I can that of the radiant creature who meets me to-day on the threshold of my Land of Dreams and comforts me and encourages me and helps me bear the burden of the hour.

She has the same dark eyes, and the curls are there, but always she comes in robes of filmy, misty white, and her presence fills the room with a soft radiance, not so dazzling as that of the sun, but tender, like that of the moon, a light that flickers and glows as the firelight does at times. And resting on the dark curls, always I see a star; and when she fades from my sight in this, my heavenly, Land of Dreams, always the vision of the star lingers longest, shining oh, so softly; surely with the light that is neither on land nor sea, for there is nothing to which I might liken it that would give you the faintest conception of its beauty.

My first recollection of my intimacy with Fanny stands out so plainly that were I an artist I could paint you every detail of the creature: A small, rebellious creature, little more than a baby herself, compelled to sit for hours, holding in her arms, and rocking to and fro, this precious Fanny, singing, meanwhile, such tender ditties as her limited musical training had allowed her to master. Oh, don't think I adhered to the words, or even to the spirit, of the few songs I knew—no, indeed—no more than I did to the tunes thereof. Fanny went to sleep, when she finally consented to close those dancing eyes of hers, to words like these:

"Go tell your mother,
Go tell your mother,
Go tell your mother,
I wish that you were dead!"

I often wonder what parents think when they get to a point where they behold their past lives in the flood of divine radiance that must sometime illuminate these souls of ours, of their treatment of the little ones entrusted to their care. Not as tender souls struggling to the light did they view them, but as little machines wound up for the owner's pleasure, as lifeless balls of putty to be pressed into this shape or that—and sometimes, alas, even as little burdens and curses sent to harass and blight.

The world can never hold for you again an injustice so blasting, a cruelty so stinging as that you suffered in your childhood at the hands of those you were supposed to honor and obey, who did not understand, who had not even the desire to understand.

Oh, the surprise and indignation a little child can feel at the sudden thrusting aside that so often is its lot with the coming of its first little brother or sister. Can you realize it, parents? No explanation; no apology, but all at once a door is shut in your face and you find yourself shut out in the cold, as far from the love light and the warmth as though you stood, hungry-eyed, in a far country where the feet of man had never trod. And so, at times, I hated this innocent little Fanny with an intensity I could not now feel toward mortal man were he to take the life of my nearest and dearest or to crush within me all the hopes and aspirations that make my life worth the living.

But one day, in play with a group of little cousin's something happened. A childish treble called out in tones of terror:

"Sanny's sollered a button! Sanny's sollered a button!"

It was true. Fanny's rosebud mouth had spread to unheard-of and apparently undreamed-of dimensions, and a big horn button had disappeared, never again to see the light of day. Whether as a direct result of this gastronomic feat, or because of a severe illness that immediately followed, I cannot tell, but Fanny was never again the same, mentally or physically, after that. Then the divinity that had hedged this young person around became indeed a flaming sword that turned in all ways and against which we were powerless. I say we because as time wore on two others came to join the circle, but the flaming sword was there at the time of their entrance upon the scene and I doubt if they ever fully realized the true value of the Eden from which we were barred but in which Fanny reveled, enjoying a freedom not one of us would have dared attempt on peril of our lives.

Poor Fanny! As I look back now on her clouded vision and troubled mind I am filled with remorse at my attitude toward her, although I know in my heart of hearts that I was no more responsible than is the tree for growing as it is bent and twisted and nailed and bound.

Time passed and one day, just as Fanny stood on the threshold of girlhood, she laid down the troubled burden of her mortal existence and joined that idolizing father and mother, who had already passed through the Gates of Gold. And there angel hands smoothed the troubled brow into peace and swept away forever the mists that had obscured the mortal vision.

That was many, many years ago, and why to-night, as I write, do I feel the presence, as of a guardian angel, of this beautiful vision of maidenhood?

"This rare and radiant maiden
Whom the angels name Lenore."

And why am I moved to write this story? Shall I tell you? I believe it is because that father and mother desire it. It is because, with their clearer vision, they can look into some heart that needs the lesson they learned in after life—and they know this message will reach that heart.

MABEL BURNHAM PACE.

They Have a Good Thing.

The Episcopalians of Missouri know a good thing when they have it, and they don't propose to throw it away. The diocese of Missouri, late in session at St. Louis, by a vote of 21 to 45, decided against the use of the Revised Version of the Bible in the prescribed church services. They showed good business sense in doing so, but not moral honesty.

The Revisors, one of the most learned body of churchmen assembled in modern times, appointed by a Convocation of the Church of England, whose labors were completed at Westminster Abbey, July 10, 1884, say in the margin of the revised edition, Mark 16:

"The two oldest Greek manuscripts, and some other authorities, omit from verse 9 to the end. Some other authorities have a different ending to the Gospel."

With this fact, then an honest Revision makes nugatory all that portion of Mark 16 after the 8th verse, which is clearly an interpolation after the original was written. What would be the effect of such exclusion? Why the loss of that invaluable text, so necessary to make converts to the faith:

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

On this interpolated text the whole superstructure of missionary work is built. Admission into the church by baptism is made an absolute necessity to salvation; and "belief in the story told of Jesus is the only way to escape damnation in hell.

Every revivalist the world over, has won his laurels by whooping up a burning sulphurous hell for all it is worth. Give up that false text and the church is abandoned to destruction.

Gross Misrepresentation.

Dr. Chas C. Hall, President of the Union Theological Seminary New York, in a late address at the Art Institute in Chicago, is reported to have said:

"It is a matter of consternation and deep concern to us that the moral standard of American life is deteriorating. In the hustle and bustle of everyday activity we have astonished the world, but, morally, we are rapidly going astern."

Is that statement true? We think not. The churches are losing power, and their teaching of dogmas are in illrepute; but there has been no other period in American history when crime, in proportion to population, was less frequent than now.

Those offenses upon which the church warred for ages, such as Sabbath-breaking non-attendance on church service, disbelief in Bible Munchausens, and skepticism generally, have ceased to be offenses. Their observance constitutes no part of good morals.

The real crimes of the age are outgrowths of war. They who engage in the indiscriminate destruction of life and property, when relegated to private life, are quite liable to forget the rights of mine and thine.

Reforms in this direction may not be expected from the church. They will come quickest by education, and by avoiding those great national calamities which are parents of crime, as was intemperance a hundred years ago. If criminal statistics could be accurately taken it would be found that churchmen, they who make the loudest pretentions to morality, are, in fact, as guilty of the great crimes as are the non-pretentious who take no stock in faith, or in the atoning blood of a crucified God.

Severe on Flunkeys.

The Associated Press dispatches from Rome, of June 1, announce that hereafter all persons visiting the Vatican, will be required to kneel and kiss the Pope's hand. Formerly they were expected to kiss his toe, thus showing abject submission to the Holy See. The custom, Del Mar tells us in his "Worship of Augustus Caesar," was inherited from this original "Son of God," who for 600 years was worshiped as a Junior God, Julius Caesar, his uncle, being adored as the real Father.

The new order is said to have been issued because some Americans, within a few weeks have declined to kneel when the pope appeared.

Now "watch a little out" for flunkeys.

Has Caught On.

"It is time to start the old libel about the increased attendance at Sunday-schools. The picnic season is at hand."

This from a Pennsylvania secular paper, edited by an old-time Methodist, whom we knew in more youthful days. It would seem he has learned the tricks of his sects when neglect of the Sunday school, and non-attendance at church show the decline of faith. When all seems lost desperation calls into service a Rev. Billy Sunday, or some other person of his ilk, who whoops up hell for all it is worth in the palmiest days of orthodoxy. It is well. It induces thought, and investigation, and these open the door to Spiritualism.

The Venus of Milo and the Forger.

The Venus of Milo, familiar as a piece of ancient statuary, with her arms broken off near her shoulders, is the subject for a nice brochure from the pen of Hon. Alex. Del Mar, which we have just read, and been greatly instructed. He informs his readers that the statue was found in February, 1820, near the village of Castro, on the island of Milo, in the Grecian archipelago, by a peasant working in a field on a mountain side. The ground caved in, a cavity was disclosed, and a shrine or temple was revealed, in the interior of which was found this statue. When visited by the French consul in March he found the statue about six feet in height, with two small statues and a lot of broken arms, legs, and parts of other statues; also the head and fractured limbs of a child.

A Catholic monk had visited the ruins immediately following their discovery, and it is believed the mutilation of the Venus came partly from his hands; for reasons very transparent to those familiar with the frauds and forgeries which characterize the history of the Catholic sculpture to destroy."

Without entering into details, the statue was bought at a large price with vexatious interference by ecclesiastics, and reached the Royal Museum in Paris in February, of 1821, where it remained a long time before it was exhibited to the public. During that period the forger plied his art. A part of the left breast was removed; the left arm was broken off at the socket; alterations were made in the navel; the hips were cut out and replaced by new ones; the head was cut out and restored. The left shoulder and back are much damaged. Says Mr. Del Mar:

"It seems abundantly evident that above the goddess' head was something, and in her left arm Something Else, which it was the determination of the Greek priests to mutilate, and of the Catholic sculpture to destroy."

Passing the fine description of this perfectly developed woman's form as it came from the hands of the Hellenic artist, seemingly warm with every semblance of life; then we have an account of its patch-work appearance; followed by the statement that Frank Paloma, born in Washington, D. C., in 1868, a distinguished sculptor, now residing in London, studied this statue with an artist's zeal and eye, who expressed surprise that the true pose, notwithstanding its mutilation and attempts of Catholic artists to deceive, was not discovered at once, "because the muscles of the right arm, the raising of the left side of the body, and the posture of the left knee, all combine to prove that the Venus must have sustained a heavy weight upon her left arm. The weight could have been none other than the Holy Child."

The brochure before us, price 50 cts., has a restored figure of the mother and child, with the lost arms in place, and the reason for its disfigurement are clearly apparent.

Again and again, why these forgeries, alterations of mural inscriptions, defaced and simulated coin, interpolations in books, whole libraries destroyed, huge volumes of false history written, and the merciless slaughter of the best and wisest men through all the centuries because they did not subscribe to a Catholic creed, and credit the fabulous tales of the monks? There must be a reason for all this. What is it?

Valuable Historic Facts.

Perhaps no writer of any age has given evidence of greater learning or more diligent research in the earlier history of the human race than has our learned American author, Hon. Alex. Del Mar, author of "The Worship of Augustus Caesar," lately noticed at considerable length in these columns, and of numerous other volumes along the same line of thought, of which "Ancient Britain," and "The Middle Ages Revisited," are specimens. Reading the latter the other day we were forcibly impressed with the following facts, from pages 4 and 5 which seemed good enough for some of our scholarly readers, who love to go down to the bottom of things.

Mr. Del Mar was discussing the Messiah idea which culminated in the worship of Augustus Caesar fifteen years before our present era, and continued throughout the Roman empire as the state religion, by order of the Roman senate, for more than 600 years. He says:

"There can be no doubt the Messianic theory originated in India, where it developed, probably before the Mahabharata wars, in the ten incarnations of Iesnu, or Vishnu."

The idea seems to have been that there were great cycles of time which, when completed, the entire system of the universe was renewed, the same celestial movements secured, and a new era was begun. This era was marked by the appearance on earth of Brahma, or Jes-nu, the Creator in a new form. When ten such manifestations were complete, it was believed the earth would be destroyed and mankind would be brought to judgment. After reciting at length facts, and quoting authority, the author goes on to say, substantially:

The remotest period of this messianic theory is traced to the Mahabharata war. It antedates Gotama, other Buddha; then:

"Monuments, letters, language, dates, popular customs, religious rites and festivals, calendars, zodiacs, and numerous other evidences still extant, combine to prove the Indian origin of the messianic theory, the Divine Year of 658 common years, the Earth's Journey, and the various doctrines that grew out of these conceptions. That they flowed out of India westward into Persia, Babylonia, Egypt, Greece and Rome, can be demonstrated so overwhelmingly that the cosmogonies which refuse to recognize this great fact will either have to suffer revision or fall into contempt.

"The Babylonians and Assyrians imported almost all their religious materials from India. Their heaven and hell are both Indian. The Babylonian Messiah, Nara-Sin, is the fourth incarnation of the Indian Vishnu; the Manlion of the Assyrian seals and cylinders is his Indian Zodion [the man who knew not his father]. The Babylonian cross and suastica are Indian. The Syrian gods, patriarchs, religious cycles, year of Creation and names of the months are all Indian. The Egyptian worship of mother and child, the cup and sacred heart, the steeple, cross, bell, rosaries, altars, censors, holy water, rite of baptism, soul's journey to purgatory, etc., are all Indian. Greek messiahs down to the period of Alexander [B. C. 355 to 323] are all Indian. The Gaulish Hesus, Virgo Paritura [Virgin Mother] and cross quarter-days are Indian. The Gothic Woden and Fricca, and Yuletide are Indian; while many of the Roman festivals, ceremonies, rites, symbols and mysteries, both before and after the inception of Christianity, are also Indian. On the contrary, there is no evidence that the Indians ever imported any religious beliefs, customs, rites or tokens from the West. Religious light from the West would provoke a smile not only in India but in any country. The course of religion as well of empire has almost invariably been from east to west; not from west to east."

In a note the author says: "In 1497, when Vasco de Gama and his party first beheld a Hindu temple and observed its ceremonies and ritual, they mistook it for a Christian church and piously worshiped at the altar. When, during the 19th century the British sepoys landed in Egypt, they, in like manner, mistook the Christian churches for Hindu temples and there knelt in prayer."

With these facts is it any wonder Christian missionaries have been so generally repulsed in the East? Assurances come from all quarters that the few converts made to the churches in India are from the lower castes, the uneducated. The very few persons there, of prominence, who have embraced Christianity have repudiated a virgin-born God, and have been classified with Unitarians.

On the Defense.

An American Bible League was lately organized in New York. Its membership is made up of those who believe in the divine inspiration of their holy book, and their object is to antagonize and put to route the "higher critics." They propose to inaugurate subordinate leagues throughout the country, and make the warfare general.

Truth loses nothing by agitation. Let the discussion go on, and become general. If God did listen to the prayer of Joshua, and stop the sun in its course that the slaughter should go on, we all want to know it, so we are glad of this organization if it can throw any new light on the subject. And so with a multitude of other questions the higher critics have ascribed to mistakes of Bible writers, they alleging these representations are revamped mythological fables.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

An Investigating Committee

Theodore J. Mayer, the Spiritualist Philanthropist, comes forth in ringing words in behalf of genuine mediums. He fully realizes that there are frauds in our ranks, and says: "We have to depend on ourselves, and after having been taken in half a dozen times, we have our eye-teeth cut, and are able to take care of ourselves against every fake and fraud." Mr. Mayer is a philanthropist in heart, word and deed, and he has done incalculable good to mediums and our Cause generally.

To the Editor:—The subject of the advisability of the N. S. A. forming an Investigating Committee whose duty it shall be to summon mediums and speakers for an examination of their claims as mediums and speakers, and to pass judgment upon their merits for the work of the spirit world, has been mooted by some of our Spiritualists. I have been appealed to for my opinion on this subject, which I herein unhesitatingly express. I am utterly opposed to the formation of any such examining committee, and I believe that should the N. S. A. board of trustees or its executive committee volunteer to act as such, it would be the death blow of that institution. My reasons for the opinions are as follows: Mediumship is a God-given gift; it cannot be acquired by hand work or industrial methods like learning a trade, such as watch-making, engineering, etc. A medium is born, not made, particularly a speaker, but if a person is not a medium from birth, you might as well try to make a silk purse from a swine's ear, as to make a genuine medium, or a bridge between the two worlds, out of a person not born with mediumistic qualities.

It is almost impossible to do justice to mediums at all times; sometimes the medium might appear before the examining committee and give beautiful and convincing tests; at another time, he or she might utterly fail because the conditions are bad. Outside forces and persons throw their shadows over sensitives or over one of the members of the committee, and absolutely destroy for the time being all possibility of getting satisfactory proof of the genuineness of the medium and of his or her powers. There are very few Spiritualists and scientists who are qualified to act on an examining committee, for very few people understand mediumship and its wonderful subtle forces. It took me years of close study and observation to learn the why and wherefores of certain manifestations and expressions and controls of certain trance mediums, whom it was my privilege to have in my employment, just for the purpose of investigating Spiritualism in its various phases, and I confess truthfully that many times during the first years of my experience, I, the would-be investigator, who thought he was doing the wise thing, was actually assisting evil-inclined spirits to destroy or hinder the true intention of the work of the spirit bands of the medium, instead of assisting them in their good labors as I meant to do.

Most Spiritualists think they know all about Spiritualism, when the fact is, that ninety per cent of them hardly know the first letter of the alphabet, and in their conceit they will never realize it until they pass from earth and see the grave mistakes they have made.

The executive committee of the N. S. A. board of trustees is too busy a body to be hindered with the work of playing examining committee for speakers and mediums. I for one have no time to give for such work, and if I had I would decline to serve, because it seems to me like an inquisition and an insult to every genuine medium, the most of whom would disdain to report for examination, and justly so, because many of them are but poorly paid at best, and to demand them in the midst of their many burdens to prove their innocence of imposture, and that they are what God made them, messengers between the two worlds, would be adding insult to injury. Besides, honest mediums are not beholden to the N. S. A. for their patronage; they can make their living independent of any institution, and they are by no means obliged to submit to dictum or authority of such an association. We want no examining committee for mediums; all the need is, for Spiritualists and investigators generally, to use their own common sense, as we have to do in all the business affairs of life; let them keep their eyes and ears open, and see and listen for themselves, and not act like little children asking for protection against being abused and imposed upon. We have no right to ask for protection against the fraudulent medium, any more than the "hayseed" has to ask for sympathy when he buys a "gold brick," or the speculator who buys a salted mine.

Let Spiritualists be men and women of common sense and judgment, and not whine when they learn that they do not know everything. Don't ask a committee to do what you should do for yourself, test the spirit. It is cowardly and selfish to ask others to do for you what you can do for yourself, and especially as you can educate yourself at the same time.

It strikes me that some of the good people who are crying to the N. S. A. to appoint investigating committees, are of the very class who never donate even a dime to the good work and the worthy objects of the National Association, even as some of the greatest talkers at our conventions, promise great things, but never redeem their word. But to go on.

I do not wish it to appear that I am excusing fraud, or condoning trickery, far be it from my desire. I know that frauds and impostors are in our ranks, but I cannot see that the proposed remedy will fit the case. Kindly show me any religion or profession which holds no frauds among its advocates, and yet we mingle with them every day and wrestle with them in business transactions, but we do not, and cannot ask the Government to appoint committees to protect us in our daily walks of life. WE HAVE TO DEPEND ON OURSELVES, AND AFTER HAVING BEEN "TAKEN IN" HALF A DOZEN TIMES WE HAVE OUR EYE-TEETH CUT, AND ARE ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF OURSELVES AGAINST EVERY FAKE AND FRAUD.

No sir, I am most positively not in favor of an examining committee. It will not reduce the number of fakes in mediumship, but it will be an affront to our honest workers, who, knowing the truth of their mediumship, would disdain to appear before such a body. You might get a lot of frauds to appear, for they would have much to gain and nothing to lose by their appearance, for if they made a favorble showing by hoodwinking the committee, they would be indorsed, and if they were proven to be frauds, they would simply change the scene of their labors and their names, and go on as before. THEODORE J. MAYER.

AN IDEAL SPIRITUALIST SOCIETY.

An Illustration of the Grandeur of Harmonious Work.

By the request of a prominent Spiritualist we republish the report of "An Ideal Spiritualist Society." The report was made by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, a prominent lecturer, whose sentiments are always to the point, and very impressive. She says:

In visiting the societies of this and other countries and finding some flourishing while others are struggling to maintain an existence, I have tried to diagnose the most prolific causes which spell success or defeat. The plant must have proper soil, climate and conditions in order to grow, so we must have favorable surroundings in order to develop our best; the great variety in individuality is caused largely by the different environments.

Even so Spiritualist societies must have favorable conditions in order to insure a healthful prosperous growth. Harmony is one of the greatest, in fact an absolute necessity. Social surroundings are a great inducement to growth and he who possesses social qualities has a pearl of great price.

I have never seen these facts exemplified so strongly as when visiting the First Spiritual Society of Seattle, Washington. It was my pleasure to deliver a couple of lectures there on April 10, the first Sunday I spent in America after my return from Australia. Rev. Lole F. Prior is the founder, pastor and central thought of this exemplary body. Mr. R. H. Little is the president; Mrs. A. Swan, secretary and Mr. George Campbell, treasurer. Mrs. Prior secured a charter for them under the National Organization seven years ago. Last June she returned and found that they were still in existence with a few members. She became the pastor of the society and it now has 175 members and holds public meetings every Sunday afternoon and evening in the K. P. Hall, the finest in Seattle.

The afternoon meeting is a general conference in charge of the officers and made especially interesting because so many take part in the discussions. At the close, the conference resolves itself into six or eight large circles, presided over by the different reputable mediums in the city, and thus another hour is spent.

They have a lyceum, founded by Mrs. Prior, which has over 50 children; also a large social club which meets every Monday evening, and a dancing class of over fifty members, who pay one dollar dues, which is turned into the building fund, as the teacher gives her services free. The Ladies' Aid Society has 47 members, presided over by Mrs. Lapworth; they pay five cents dues weekly.

The Psychic Educational Class meets every week at 217 Denny Building, and is presided over by Judge L. Williams or Mrs. Prior.

At her Sunday evening meetings she delivers an inspirational lecture, followed by tests, and every seat in the hall is always taken at this meeting.

This society is indeed alive; the committees active, and each member doing his share. Some persons are earnest workers themselves, but to find one who is not only a hard worker but who has the enviable quality of inducing everyone else to help, this is rare indeed. What a power such a society is, not only to Spiritualism, but to the city where it is located. This is loyal citizenship. Any pastor who can infuse in her members this spirit is indeed an ideal conception of a Spiritualist leader; and when this kindly spirit permeates a society all are blessed and uplifted. Upon such, the sun never sets, for it shines in the hearts of its members and of such is the kingdom of heaven. LAURA G. FIXEN.

UNDER TEST CONDITIONS.

A Chicago Medium Having Faith in His Own Honesty and Mediumship, Will Go Before the State Association.

To the Editor:—While I knew that The Progressive Thinker has a very wide circulation and great influence, yet I did not fully realize this fact until I received a flood of letters coming from every state in the Union referring to the article published in The Progressive Thinker of May 28, where I made an offer of my services under test conditions to demonstrate that there was genuine phenomena such as slate-writing, painting, partial materializing in the light, etc.

These many letters show the widespread interest in the matter, and while I appreciate each and every one, and would like to make each one a special and separate reply, yet it would be impossible to do so, and that they may know how the matter stands, I would like to say that the suggestion of the editor of The ProgressiveThinker has been accepted, and that the test will be made by the president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, Mr. Warne, assisted by those whom he may select, and arrangements to that effect are now being made; and with such a committee, familiar as they are with mediumship, and with the laws that govern spirit communication, which are so delicate that even an adverse mental attitude on the part of the sitters would prevent the manifestation, it is believed that this committee would furnish satisfactory conditions for a perfect demonstration. Very truly,

W. F. LANGDON,
70 East 24th street, Chicago.

Summer Tour of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

Mr. and Mrs. Richmond left Chicago for St. Louis on the 17th inst. Mrs. Richmond will lecture for Mr. Grimshaw's society at the Temple on Pine street, the two last Sundays in June. She is engaged to speak by the Unity League (continuation of the Parliament of Religions) which holds its sessions in one of the Congress halls inside the Fair grounds, on June 28, 29 and 30. She expects to remain in St. Louis the first two Sundays in July, speaking for Prof. Peck's congregation. On their way east Mr. and Mrs. Richmond will visit Cleveland, Ohio, and Corry, Pa., arriving at Onset, Mass., for the last Sunday in July, and the first week in August, when Mrs. Richmond speaks; August 7 at Lynn, Mass.; August 14 at Niantic, Conn., stopping at other places en route on their return to Chicago. The Church of the Soul will resume its regular services about the middle of September.

Prof. Lockwood.

Prof. Lockwood, the eminent scientist, has something to say of importance this week, on the eighth page.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

Success, And How to Win It.

A little book with the above title has just been issued by its author, Rev. B. F. Austin, which should be in the library, but more particularly in the hands and open to the eyes of every young man and woman. Indeed, the more advanced in years would profit much by its perusal. It consists of a series of lectures and lessons given to his pupils on "Success, and How to Win It," in the First Spiritual Church, Buffalo, May 9, 1904, and published by the request of those who heard them. They are nuggets of pure gold from Mr. Austin's rich cerebral mine. It is well printed in clear type upon first-class paper, and costs only 25 cents.

H. V. SWERINGEN.

"An Infamous Dynamite Roman Catholic Conspiracy Detected and Exposed." "Romanism Exposed." Two pamphlets by Rev. J. G. White, author of Startling Facts. Price 10 cents each, or two for 15 cents.

"Voltaire's Romances." Translated from the French. With numerous illustrations. These lighter works of the brilliant Frenchman, an invincible enemy of the Catholic church, are worthy of wide reading. Wit, philosophy and romance are combined, with the skill of a master mind. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

"Cosmian Hymn Book." A collection of original and selected hymns, for liberal and ethical societies, for schools and the home; compiled by L. K. Washburn. This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price 50 cents.

EVIDENCE OF IMMORTALITY AND SPIRIT COMMUNION. By G. Major Taber, Los Angeles, California.

Can we discover any reasonable or logical evidence of immortality even from a scientific standpoint, or does man when he shuffles off this mortal coil, die like a hog only to mingle again with Mother Earth and become blotted out of intellectual existence?

Let me say to those who may have doubts as to a future existence, that in my opinion, they have not given the subject as thorough an investigation as this subject demands.

There is no excuse for those who rely upon preconceived notions, or show indifference as to the facts of the question, because they cannot step over on the other side to see for themselves, whether their friends who have passed away are really alive, and are the same friends of olden times.

I know not what others may believe, but as for me, take away my hope in a future life, and I should have no other aim in life but to eat, drink and be merry, without an incentive but to gratify the instincts of the animal creation.

The cultivation of a moral sentiment or intellectual acquirements would offer no possible inducement to man.

Such a condition would be on a par with the brute creation, and yet there are many intelligent people who seem to take pride in the belief that they have no wish or desire beyond this physical existence, yet it seems to me that such conclusions are based upon neither reasonable, rational, traditional, occult or scientific conclusions.

It is simply, I don't believe, because it cannot be demonstrated to them through their five senses.

It would be more in line with a reasonable man to say, "I don't know." After the investigations of nearly half a century, I find that there is but little that I do know, and so much that I cannot know, that I find a very broad field open for investigation, as science is developing every day new truths which but a few years ago would have been pronounced absurd by every scientist in the world.

We meet with scientific subjects all around us which are mysterious and unseen, and perhaps at the present time unknowable, yet we are aware that there can be no effect without a cause.

Take for instance the light of the sun; it passes through our windows and gives us heat which no artificial light will do. Because we cannot comprehend the why, should we conclude that it is not a fact?

We know that what we call electricity moves our street cars and gives us light and heat. Can we analyze it and give its component parts? Because we cannot do so, is there a man so foolish as to believe that there is no such a thing as electricity?

We see beautiful flowers bud and blossom, filled with delicate perfume and every color of the rainbow, and yet we know as little of its growth and formation as we do of light and electricity.

We are forced to take the agnostic view, and acknowledge that we do not knew. I might cite you to thousands of nature's wonderful transformations which daily meet us upon every side that are just as mysterious, and yet we are forced to the conclusion that they are a reality.

We know that nature forms twenty-six varieties of crystallizations, each mineral having its own peculiar form which has never been changed in all the millions of past ages. Do we know, or understand the law that shapes them each after their own kind?

He who does not believe there is a mysterious law governing matter, let him investigate. Let us be honest to our intelligence, and admit that where we see an effect, that it is inevitable that there must be a cause. Take for instance the law of attraction, why one body draws another towards itself just in proportion to its weight.

We see the effect, but fail to explain the cause.

I mention these principles to illustrate how little we know of the mysteries we daily come in contact with, and the necessity of drawing an intelligent conclusion from them.

The scientists of the world have demonstrated the law of the evolution of matter in all of its forms, whether animate or inanimate.

There is no guesswork about it, as they have followed its course from its first gaseous formation to the highest form of matter, which is man.

Evolution, what is it? Webster defines it as follows: As the series of steps by which a germ becomes adult, or organism, or a fully developed part; the successive changes which a germ passes from a simple to a complex condition." If evolution means anything, it means progress, and progress from a lower to a higher development does not mean retrogression or a suspension of that law.

Nature's laws are fixed and unalterable, and if man has progressed from a single cell through all of its gradations as science has demonstrated, and as this law of progression is unalterable, is it reasonable to suppose that the intelligent part of man is annihilated when he has outgrown his physical environments?

If progression or evolution is onward and upward, why should not human intelligence which has taken millions of years to accomplish take a position in a higher sphere of activity and usefulness?

If evolution is true, and who doubts it, then eternal progress must be a natural result. Men may say they don't believe, yet that does not change the law of progression or impede its upward course.

When Chas. Darwin published his "Origin of Species," the world was full of doubters, and yet to-day there is not a prominent scientist in the world who doubts its truth. When it comes to well established facts, a doubter is a person who has failed to investigate this subject.

Man's relation to nature and his hope in immortality, is the most important question which has ever called for a satisfactory conclusion.

There are thousands in every country in the world who believe they have solved the question, and thousands who have never given the question an anxious thought. Let us briefly follow along the line of evolution and then draw our conclusions from the result of this wonderful law.

Scientists the world over agree that the matter which our universe as well as the composition of the whole stellar heavens, was originally composed of a gaseous formation. Even some of our planets have not yet completed their course of evolution, and even our sun is still a gaseous burning world, as well as all of the myriads of the fixed stars which adorn the heavens at night. There are also thousands of nebulas in every possible stage of world forming, some which the photographic plate detects their first indication of spherical formation.

Our little world has passed through its gaseous stage, its mineral development, its vegetable era, the lower order of its myriads of animal life, and as a crown standing upon its apex stands man.

Whence cometh this law of development, this evolution from the gaseous period of the earth to man?

There is no escape from the conclusion, that where there is an effect there must be a cause. Neither can we ignore the fact that there has been a mysterious struggle all along this line of evolution, and that in every step there has been a change from the lower to the higher, from molecular activity to instinctive intelligence, and up to the intelligence of man. Science tells us that all life commences with protoplasm, then a single cell, then groups of cells, then the lower forms of worms, then the vertebrates and the lower order of animals, and lastly man through all of the different grades of intelligence.

Do we not observe intelligence throughout the whole animal kingdom. The horse knows his master's face and even recognizes his voice, and the dog understands almost every word. The elephant remembers an injury for years, and in all the animal kingdom we can trace more or less intelligence.

With some we call it instinct, but what is instinct but instinctive intelligence? The most skillful geometricians have never been able to formulate a system of cells more economical than those made by the honey bee for the past 2,000 years. Is not this an evidence of instinctive intelligence. I might call your attention to thousands of indications and instances where the whole animal kingdom shows more or less intelligence. Can we draw the line between instinct and intelligence?

Charles Darwin has proven beyond the possibility of a doubt that there have been many instances where several of the bones and muscles which distinctly belong to the lower order of animals have cropped out in man, showing the connecting link between the animal creation and man.

There is also a connecting link between the vegetable and the animal kingdom; as a proof of this fact, there are plants that digest animal food to sustain life.

We find in the different races of mankind every grade of intellectual development, from those who have scarcely developed a language, to the present high state of cultivation of the twentieth century scientist. Has not science demonstrated that there is an unchangeable law of progress governing matter throughout the whole realm of nature?

Do we not further observe that this law has but one object and aim, and that is the development of intelligence?

Are we not, then, forced to draw the conclusion from these facts which are observable to every student of nature, that the law of evolution is as inflexible and as permanent as the law of gravitation?

Have we any reason to doubt that this law which holds and guides each planet and sun in its course through space will cease to operate?

What reason have we to doubt that this law of evolution that has been millions of years in developing man, with all of his intelligence, will not continue even when man has fulfilled his mission with crude matter?

Has one of nature's laws ceased to operate that we know of?

Then why does not this intelligence which has cost nature untold ages in perfecting, take a step higher in evolution in the future, as it has in the past. In all the stages which matter has passed through up to man, it has not been possible for any one species below man to realize what the next step in evolution would be, yet man with all of his scientific attainments may not be able to catch a glimpse of what the future should be, if the future is any indication of the past.

If this evolution of intelligence ceases with man's earthly career, then there must be a suspension of that law which would be one of the most sublime fizzles ever conceived of in all the investigations of science.

Men may say they don't believe, because they do not know, yet that is a poor argument in opposition to a well known law of nature which has existed for millions of years. He who ignores the perpetuation of man's intelligence, must necessarily ignore the well established law of evolution. From a strictly scientific standpoint, we have every reason to believe that there is no annihilation of intelligence, and therefore no death; that so-called death is only one step higher in the evolution of the intelligent part of man.

The great question whence comes this great power which governs and controls matter throughout the universe, has called forth varied opinions since man began to develop intelligence.

Some call it the "Great First Cause;" the untutored savage calls it 'The Great Spirit," but the most popular term is Jehovah or God.

Different nations have different names for their Deity:

In Hebrew it is Eloah.
Chaldaic and Assyrian it is Elah and Ellah.
Turkish, Malay and Arabic is Alah and Allah.
Old Egyptian is Tuet.
Greek is Theos.
Latin is Deus.
Italian is Dio.
Flemish is Gold.
Dutch is Godt.
Danish and Swedish is Gut.
Norwegian is Gud.
Polish is Bog.
Polaca is Bong.
Hindostance is Rain.

In a list of 48 languages there are but few with any similarity with the exception of Latin, Low Latin, Celtic, French, Spanish and Portuguese, which are similar.

There are in every community persons who claim to be scientific, who ridicule the idea of the possibility of intelligences giving evidence of immortality who have passed the bounds of mortal life.

They ignore the fact that the great cry of humanity is, "After death, what?" and that it is a subject of the greatest importance to the whole human family. It is a human desire, and it has been one of the most important desires of humanity since the dawn of civilization.

Do we live, are we conscious, do we hold our identity, and do we progress in knowledge, and will we meet our loved ones after we are through with our earth life? This is a serious subject, and one which every human being should investigate honestly and without prejudice.

The result of my investigation for nearly half a century has satisfied me that there is no death, that it is simply a change of condition, giving greater opportunities and an evolution on the line of intelligence. The best thought of every human being should be devoted to the searching out of TRUTH. There is an old adage which says: "The conquest of truth makes a man a king."

If the same efforts were made, and the millions which have been expended in establishing creeds had been devoted to the search of truth, the world would be much better off to-day. Creeds are man-made, truth is divine.

The following lines remind me of their condition:

Their hearts go hungry through the world,
And never find the truth they seek;
Their lips with pride and scorn are curled
To hide the pain they may not speak;
Their voice in oratory may thrill,
Yet underneath their hardened mask,
Their famished hearts are hungering still.

I have no envy for those who have no hope, knowledge, or belief in a future life. If there is a human soul that has no desire to meet the loved ones gone to that beautiful summer land we read of, when they shuffle off this mortal coil, and their physical bodies return to mother earth, their souls also should be blotted out of existence. They, however, cannot escape this law of evolution, and will live in spite of their desire to be blotted out. In regard to the various opinions predicated upon the belief in immortality, I have no quarrel with those who make a religion out of this fact, but as for myself, I look upon immortality as a scientific discovery, and not as a religion; and I am not alone in this belief, as there are hundreds of thousands who belong to almost every sect known, who daily consult mediums in order to receive messages from their friends who have passed to the spirit world, and yet they hold to their religious belief. I have never been able to see the necessity or propriety of establishing another religion, much less a creed, out of a scientific fact.

I will, however, grant that the knowledge of a future life, and what we have been able to learn from those who have gone before, that it leads to opening the way to a better religious thought, but not a religion.

This scientific discovery of spirit communion is not a new discovery, but is as old as civilization. Throughout all of the days of Egypt's wonderful progress in science, what is now called Spiritualism, was a universal belief. Hermes taught that. "This visible is but a picture of the invisible world." Herodotus mentions that a celebrated king of Egypt who descended to the mansions of the dead, and after some stay in those spirit realms, returned to light. Strabo states that in the temple of Serapis at Canopis, that many miracles were wrought and practiced and devoted to the sacred sleep, or what is now known as a trance condition.

Emanuel Rebold, president of the Academy of France, states that the occult sciences for more than 3,000 years were practiced by the Egyptian priesthood. Even Socrates was known to have heard voices.

Old Chinese records for 40,000 years records the belief in the intercourse between the living and the dead, so stated by a learned mandarin, and also by Dr. McGowan, a Chinese missionary. Confucius, the greatest of Chinese philosophers, was also a Spiritualist.

Zoroaster's prayer was, "When I die, carry me to the bosom of joy," and it is stated that he frequently saw celestial spirits. The Egyptians, Phoenicians, Persian and Grecian writers were imbued with the knowledge and belief in immortality, and also David the Psalmist, and scores of Biblical characters were deep in the philosophy. Ernest Renan says that Jesus believed in spirit communion. Titus, in his address to his soldiers before Jerusalem, declared that soldiers who died in battle joined the company who were placed among the stars.

The Chaldeans were Spiritualists in every sense of the word.

Hesiod, who flourished 1,000 years B. C., gave a faithful account of the spirits of antiquity. Their faith was:

Invisible, the gods are ever nigh,
Pass through our midst, and bend the all-seeing eye.

Homer became a medium and seer at 8 years of age. Pythagoras, 500 years before Christ, taught the immortality of the soul.

Aesculapius was a medium and foretold things taking place in distant countries. The Rev. J. B. Gross says: "It is time that posterity should raise its voice in vindication of the hoary past," referring to their belief in immortality. Beda states, that in the capitol at Rome, statues were hung with bells, and when rang by spirits they knew that a rebellion against Rome was attempted. It is claimed upon good authority that Plutarch, Luther and Mohammed often heard the melody of the spheres. Spiritual manfestations were common in those days, as it is stated that before the misfortune of the Lacedemonians there was heard the clashing of arms in the temple of Hercules, and the statue sweat profusely, and the folding doors which were bolted were thrown open, and arms hung on the wall were thrown down. Cicero says, there is no nation which does not believe it possible for future events to be predicted by certain persons. Nero and Julian consulted the spirits.

The Romans even sent embassadors to Greece to consult their oracles or mediums. Livy reports over fifty instances of fulfillment by those mediums. He also states that the spirit of Romulus visited Proculus Julius and gave an address. When Emperor Tiberius left the city of Rome, the soothsayers or mediums told him that he would never again enter the Eternal City, and he never did. History informs us that the immortality of the soul was taught by the most ancient Aryans, Thales, Zeno, Plato, Indian Seers, Persians, Apollonius, and inspired sages were considered superior to Jesus as mediums. Apollonius cured the blind, deaf and dumb. Ireneus also was a celebrated healer. Augustine and Ambrose, in the fourth and fifth century, reports numerous spiritual revelations.

Gregory VII, of the eleventh century, Roger Bacon of the twelfth century, Bishop Grossettete of the thirteenth century, and even Martin Luther were not only believers but were mediumistic. Philip Melancthon asserted he saw spirits, and even John Calvin claimed to be clairaudient.

Tasso, the Italian poet, was a Spiritualist. Joan D'Arc heard spirit voices. George Fox, the father of Quakerism, was highly gifted with spirit control, and all along down the ages there were hundreds of noted men who were spiritual mediums, and yet we are often told that no one who is sane could believe such nonsense.

It is stated upon good authority that Beethoven, Mozart and even Goethe were all mediumistic. Dr. Adam Clarke, the great Methodist commentator, said: "I believe that spirits may have intercourse with this world and become visible to mortals. John Murray also was a believer in spiritual phenomena. Coming down to our own day, we find the names of Judge Edmonds, John Stuart Mill, Ruskin, Wilkinson, Dr. Whately, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Hall, Wm. and Mary Howitt, the poet Tennyson, Robert Bell, Dr. Collins, of London, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Parker Snow, Sir David Brewster, Dr. Bird, Lord Brougham, Louis Napoleon, Horace Greeley, Henry Ward Beecher, Rev. E. H. Chapin, Theodore Parker, Harriet Beecher Stows, Rev. Wm. E. Channing, Bayard Taylor, Rev. G. H. Hepworth, Rev. A. D. Mayo, Rev. G. W. Skinner, Rev. Adin Ballou, Rev. Dr. Fisk, Rev. H. A. Reid, Rev. J. P. Sanford, Rev. J. H. Tuttle, Rev. W. Ker, Washington Irving, Charlotte Bronte, Margaret Fuller, Gerrit Smith, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Rev. Dr. Townsend, Victor Hugo, Rev. E. C. Towne, Abraham Lincoln, Queen Victoria and hundreds of the greatest intellects of the world were known to have believed in immortality, and of their power to return to earth after death.

They represent almost every phase of religion, science, music and art. Even that great orator, Robert G. Ingersoll, the agnostic, who stood second to no man in an honest search after truth, even he had hopes of a future life.

There are times no doubt with each of us, and we know not why, that there steals over us, and we are thrilled with a sensation of happiness; and how do we know but that it is the loving presence of some of our dear friends who are shedding over us their love and affection. Longfellow says:

"A drowsiness is stealing over me
Which is not sleep, for, though I close mine eyes
I am awake, and in another world,
Dim faces of the dead and of the absent

Come floating up before me."

In concluding this important subject, I agree with the poet:

Perfection altered, would produce a flaw;
Nature cannot err, hence cannot change its law.
On earth, there is nothing great but man,
In man, there is nothing great but mind.

Again:

In this important truth all tongues agree,
That man was made for immortality.
Death kindly comes and opens wide the door,
And lights our passage to the golden shore;
Oblivion spans the gulf on which we tread
The silent pathway of the living dead.
Then let earth join with aspirations high,
Proclaim this glorious truth—We Never Die.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life from his home in Wheaton, Ill., June 1, Mr. Adin Thompson Childs, aged 87 years. Thus has left this physical life one of the truest, kindest and noblest of souls. He journeyed longer than many do on this earth, and to some they would have indeed felt the impress of the years, but Brother Childs was as young and full of life, taking an interest in all that pertained to the upliftment of the race, as he did in his early manhood. He was an earnest Spiritualist, never afraid to express his views, tho' living in an extremely orthodox city. He was known by all as an outspoken man, fearless in his expression, true to his convictions. He left an impress on the minds of those he met which can never fade away.

He was president of our little society, and for years did all he could to help advance the cause he loved. He passed away conscious to the last, glad to be released, and to go to those who waited for him in the land of souls. He leaves a wife, three daughters, two brothers and one sister and a host of friends to mourn his loss. His funeral was very largely attended, and we laid his body away at the close of one of the beautiful June days which bless the earth. The writer officiated, and gave the consolation of Spiritualism.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. MINNESOTA.

Dedication of Spiritualist Temple at Long Lake.

The dedication of our Spiritualist Temple on June 5, was very nicely conducted and resulted in much good to all, uplifting to the soul and spiritual of man. Owing to the threatening rain many of the friends from the Twin Cities and country did not come. Notwithstanding the condition of the weather our temple was well filled. The morning meeting was devoted to a conference, of which Mr. Whitwell was nominated president for the day and conducted the meetings in a very pleasing and unassuming manner, and gained the love and respect of the audience. Mrs. Whitwell opened the conference by invocation, and the choir rendered some very nice music that added much to the harmonious condition of the meeting. Remarks were made by Mrs. Whitwell, Mrs. Sauer, Mr. Whitwell and others, that resulted in much good to all. After conference all partook of a bountiful dinner of the good things that supply the body and spirit of man. A general good time prevailed, and there was a good supply left for 5 o'clock lunch.

At 2 o'clock sharp, Mrs. Whitwell opened with a very fine invocation and followed with lecture by the guides, the subject being drawn from the lives of Thomas Paine, Lincoln and Christ, comparing their lives and their good works done to mankind. It was very nicely weaved in her discourse. All spoke well of the lecture, how good it was and how well it suited the occasion of dedication. Mrs. Sauer was message bearer from the spirit friends, and gave some very fine tests and readings; most of them were accepted as correct. Mrs. Sauer is developing much in test work. Mrs. Whitwell, Mrs. Sauer, Mrs. Hagdal christened a little child of Mrs. Ray Maxwell.

The writer in behalf of the Minnetonka Spiritualist Association, extended greetings and a welcome hand to the many friends that came to our dedication services, and we assure the dear friends that the meeting will long be remembered by the brothers and sisters here, giving them much encouragement to still work on in the great and good cause.

We do not see why we cannot support a camp-meeting in or near the Twin Cities. There is so much good talent in our state and the Twin Cities, with the beautiful lakes and fine scenery, and productive fruit country, and beautiful summer, I do not see why we cannot have a Cassadaga of the North during our summer months. A little energy, a little work with a will, will accomplish much. If we can all work together the results would be great and result in great good.

We would like to impress every Spiritualist association to work toward having a temple of their own. We know that there are many that could if they would just try by saving and working a year or two ahead, as we have done. Of course, we all will perhaps have to sacrifice a little from our home comforts to do it. We need a place where our children can go to have their lyceums and be instructed in spiritual truths.

Before closing we want to say that many of our friends were disappointed that Mr. Maxwell, president of the state spiritual society, could not be with us. Many expressed regrets. Owing to circumstances he could not come.

There is some talk now of having a general conference and general meeting and picnic at our temple, July 5, first Sunday of the month.

"Never-Ending Life Assured by Science." By Daniel Kent Tenney. A strong and conclusive argument from the basis of science. For sale at this office. Price 5 cents.

"Love—Sex—Immortality." By Dr. W. P. Phelon. For sale at this office. Price 25 cents.

Forty-Seventh Anniversary at Sturgis, Michigan.

Forty-seven years ago—think of it, the length of the average man's life—they built and dedicated a Spiritual temple or building. Forty-seven times the Spiritualists of that place and adjacent towns have gathered there to celebrate that event. For forty-seven winters and summers has it stood there marking the progress of Spiritual truth. And this has a deeper significance when you recall that the building of this structure was only a few years, some ten I believe, after the first tiny rap was heard at Hydesville. How many of those who were instrumental in building this temple have been carried through its doors to that last long rest of the physical body that knows no waking.

On this occasion we gathered there full of love and good will for each other, and how grand it was to see those old ladies and gentlemen, with hairs whitened and eyes dimmed by the years of time, say to me at parting, "If we do not meet on this planet we will meet in those higher realms." What a grand and inspiring thought, "We will meet in those higher realms." May we ever act and live on this earth that we may merit the reward in heaven!

President Collar secured for this meeting Mrs. Lichtig of Iowa, Miss Gibbs of Grand Rapids, Dr. Peebles and myself of Battle Creek. The hall was beautifully decorated with flowers and plants of all descriptions by Miss Cressler and friends, causing the interior to look cool, quiet and spiritual, and there was a strong uplifting influence with us during the entire meeting. Mrs. Lichtig gives short clear-cut addresses, followed by thorough and readily recognied tests that were of much comfort and help to those receiving them.

Miss Gibbs gave short inspirational lectures, also reciting an anniversary poem, which were highly appreciated. She has before her a very bright future.

Dr. Peebles needs no introduction from me. Let it suffice for me to say he delivered the last regular address on Sunday evening and met with his usual reward—an attentive and interested audience. It will be many years before we can produce another speaker like Dr. Peebles.

Owing to the fact that many of the camps have opened through this part of the country the president was unable to obtain as many lecturers as he desired, letting three of the five lectures fall to my guide "Joseph," and one I gave in the normal state to the young people in particular. But it is time that the older Spiritualists were thinking of this, and making an effort to bring young blood and life into our midst, I am a staunch friend of the young people, all young people, and am ever ready to help them enjoy themselves, and organize societies wherever I have an opportunity.

Dr. Peebles has attended over thirty of these meetings and has seen many of the old workers laid to rest.

I would like to see more societies owning their own temples, and stop this promiscuous renting and mixing with all kinds of magnetism and influences, Let us own our own homes when we commune with the other world and the dear ones gone before.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail samples of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCES CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comeg to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Dr. Green, secretary of the Missouri State Spiritual Assaciation, with headquarters at 518 Commercial building, is arranging a World's Fair Parliament of Advanced Minds. Dr. Green is well known as a student and lecturer on spiritual, occult, new thought and brotherhood topics. His original plan was to have a world's international convention of Spiritualists, but this has been abandoned with a view of making it more general to a Parliament of Advanced Minds. The meetings will be held in the auditorium tent at the Canvas Cottage City, north of the World's Fair. Dr. Green has been corresponding with the advanced thinkers and a large gathering of these bodies is expected.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

The Philosophical Journal says: "Mr. Will C. Hodge's lecture on 'Mediumship' was a lucid exposition of the widespread characteristic of those through whom the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism are presented, as well as showing the unconscious control or guidance to which many if not all of those who are not looked upon as mediums are subjected. It is a great mistake to think that only those we know as mediums are subject to the control of spirits, others are as susceptible to control and because in their case it is unsuspected, is oftentimes more potent than would be the case if it were exercised with the knowledge of the individual."

Emily E. Philp writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union will hold on Saturday evening, June 25, an ice-cream social at Mrs. Hurlbut's, 6320 Wentworth avenue. We anticipate a very pleasant evening, and hope to see our many friends. There will be cards for those who care for them, and other amusements. Come and have a good time. The social is for the benefit of the society. Admission, 25 cents."

Alarmed by the rapidly increasing number of amateur hypnotists among the boys attending the public schools of Aurora, Ill., Professor Barriwell, superintendent of the East Aurora high schools, issued an order forbidding the boys to practice their hypnotic spells. The order met with a good deal of indignation among the devotees of the "science," but will be strictly enforced, under penalty of expulsion. Hypnotism has suddenly become the fad of nearly every boy in Aurora. Books of instructions on hypnotism, advertised for sale in some of the cheaper magazines, suddenly made their appearance and school books have been neglected. Roy Raut, a paper carrier, is high priest of the hypnotists. Raut has a pair of eagle eyes, which his followers believe are endowed with unusual hypnotic powers. Raut held a big meeting. A large crowd of boys and girls and many older people gathered to witness the demonstrations. Boys were made to do all kinds of queer antics by the hypnotist, and the programme lasted for two hours or more. One boy was put under the spell so strongly that when he was released he fell headlong to the ground exhausted. Another was made to go to a neighbor's house and beg for something to eat while others wept like babies, rocked supposed infants to sleep or did equally grotesque things for the amusement of the audience.

Geo. H. Ely writes from St. Croix Falls, Wis.: "Within the last few days this village has had a treat. Mr. Will J. Erwood, of LaCrosse, president of the Wisconsin Spiritualist Association has come and gone, but in his brief stay he scattered enough seed of truth to insure a good yield when he visits us again. He to a large extent overcame prejudice and doubt. His off-hand readings at the close of his lectures have been declared correct in nearly every respect. To understand Spiritualism is to understand Christianity. They should be understood as the same thing."

Hereafter the home address of Oscar A. Edgerly will be 42 Smith street, Lynn, Mass.

Henry Truro Bray writes as follows to the Chicago Examiner: "I cannot help admiring your paper for the manner in which it speaks of the Japanese in the present war. The 'expert' on another paper tells us that it is inconceivable that a European especially a Christian, could desire victory for the Japs. He is the kind of Christian that has filled the world with blood that has said to all others who has differed with him, 'I am the way and there is none other.' It is a pity for him that Jesus happened an Asiatic, for had Christ been born a European He might have made such an accident the occasion for an oration against the 'yellow races.' As it stands, however, it is a fact that the purest morals and noblest ideals have come to the world through the 'yellow races'; instance Buddha, Confucius and Mencius. This 'expert' sees all good in Russia. Let this narrow-minded scribbler ask the Poles, the Finns, the Russians, the thousands of Siberian exiles, the murdered Jews, the thousands of widows and orphans whose blood cries from the ground. He speaks of 'pagans.' Marcus Aurelius was one of the scribbler's pagans. God forbid that I should compare them. Plato was another, and Epictetus and Aristotle. It is good that God knows no pagans or Christians. He knows humanity and loves him who does justice, loves mercy and walks humbly. A thief a robber, a falsifier, or the liberty-killing, God surely cannot love."

A. C. Clay writes: "Honor to whom honor is due. While visiting friends, it has been my lot to meet three worthy mediums, whose race will soon be run on this side of life. If the readers of this paper will give them now and then a letter of cheer, not forgetting to enclose a few stamps or something larger, I am sure the recipients will appreciate the deed. I refer to Mr. and Mrs. C. Winch, 54 Bostwick street, and to Mr. Samuel Smith of 395 North Lafayette street, all of Grand Rapids, Mich. Parties will be highly entertained that receive a message from James Jones, a control of Father Smith."

Mrs. J. M. Bartscherer writes from Dayton, Ohio: "The Light of Truth Spiritual Society have now a charter from the state association. J. M. Bartscherer represented the society, and W. V. Nicum the charter to the state convention at Columbus last month. W. V. Nicum was elected one of the trustees of the state association. Upon an urgent invitation the committee decided to meet here in Dayton next year. Harrison D. Barrett came here from Columbus and on the evening of the 30th and 31st gave us two lectures which were greatly enjoyed and warmly applauded by the audience. We will meet every Sunday evening in Gorman Hall, 113½ South Jefferson street, during the summer months. Frank M. Brown (our president) will lecture next Sunday. We have socials every two weeks with fine music and spirit messages. We hope all who are interested in the grand truth of Spiritualism in the city and neighboring towns will attend all our meetings."

Frances E. Bonney writes from Conneaut, Ohio: "Our society is at present enjoying with keen appreciation the services of Oscar A. Edgerly, whose psychic abilities are of a high order, and the lectures given through his instrumentality are above the average, proving not only the superior quality of the controlling spirit, but also suggesting that the medium possesses a similar character; for I believe that mortals of inferior mental ability, or whose aims and ideals are low and coarse, rarely attract spirits of superior intelligence and high ethical standards. The lectures which Mr. Edgerly's spirit guides and helpers are giving us are characterized by refinement, spirituality, clearness and fearless logic, and the thoughts are expressed in language at once forcible and beautiful. They hold the undivided attention of the audience, and arouse the intelligent interest of thoughtful minds outside of the Spiritualist ranks. The character of Mr. Edgerly's audiences attest the fact that the work accomplished through his mediumship is of great value to the cause of true Spiritualism. He is also a good message medium, but this work he considers as secondary to the presentation of truth through his special phase of trance mediumship."

Mr. Andrews is arranging for the camp meeting of the association to be held in this city August 21 to Sept. 11, 1904. For eleven years the association has held annual meetings at Marshalltown. This is the first time it has been held in any other city. The association brings a large gathering to Waterloo and the visitors stay the full time of four weeks. Very prominent speakers have been secured and the gathering promises to be one of great interest. Waterloo is fortunate in securing it.—Waterloo Reporter.

The Westminster Review, treating the drink question from an evolutionary point of view, remarks: "Drink is an important selective influence in the weeding out of undesirables in the course of evolution. It is true that in a high state of civilization undesirables are not left to die off; they tend rather to be preserved and reproduced. But, nevertheless, the defective organization of the drunkard is much less amenable to the preservative influences of civilization than are other forms of physical weakness, where the accompanying mental and moral deficiency is less marked; and along with the improvement in the race we may expect to observe the disappearance of the drunkard."

Licking postage stamps has cost Miss Sylvernale, assistant postmaster in Norfolk, Ct., part of her tongue. A few weeks ago Miss Sylvernale's tongue began to swell and physicians diagnosed the trouble as blood poisoning due to the mucilage on the stamps. Miss Sylvernale went to the Hartford Hospital, where an operation for the removal of nearly half of her tongue was performed yesterday. The young woman is expected to recover, but there will be an impediment in her speech.

H. F. Coates writes: "The marriage of Miss Agnes Janette Brown to Mr. Clarence E. Fry took place Sunday afternoon, June 12, at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove ave., Rev. G. H. Brooks officiating. It was a pretty affair. The bridal party was led by Miss Genevieve Hobbs, while Miss Ethel Marriott was maid of honor. Mr. and Mrs. Fry will reside at 5317 Washington avenue."

G. Major Taber writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "I take a good deal of interest in your valuable paper, and many of your correspondents are well known to me, as I have been interested in the cause for many years."

Don't forget the social and benefit test seance given in Hall B, No. 77 Thirty-first street, Wednesday evening, June 22, as a splendid time is anticipated. Messages by Georgia Gladys Cooley and others as well as fine literary and musical program, including refreshments and dancing—all for 25 cents.

The Ram's Horn is confronted with some startling statistics. Says the editor: "It taxed credulity when we published the fact that when the police broke up a nest of tramps and outlaws in an abandoned building and subjected them to examination it was found that a large proportion of them were college graduates. But even more startling statistics come from Philadelphia, where it has been found by the Sunday Breakfast Association, which provides a meal, Sabbath morning, for the outcast and hungry, that out of 950 of these unfortunates, 90 per cent had been instructed in religion when young, and had had Christian parents; 75 per cent had been enrolled in Sunday school, and 75 per cent had fallen through intoxicating drink, and 98 per cent would urge the young not to walk in their way. It has always been beyond controversy among those that appreciated the power in religion, that mere education could not be depended upon to keep one in the path of right, but what shall we say of this mournful fact that nine-tenths of these fallen men and women were graduates not of colleges, but of Christian homes, and that three-fourths of them came from Sunday-schools?"

Peter J. Loeb writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "The Church of Sacred Communion will hold its closing service on Sunday evening, June 26. This church has done splendid work, many being reached through our pastor, Miss E. C. Resch, our young and gifted medium. May God and the angel guides keep her well and strong and bring her back safe to us at the opening of our church season."

Max Hoffmann arrived in the city last week. If large and enthusiastic meetings are an evidence of success, and they generally are, then Max has achieved a great triumph. He seems to have been enthusiastically received everywhere, and his tests in an audience flow in one uninterrupted stream, given mostly to skeptics and investigators. From here Max went to Milwaukee, Wis., then goes to the camp at Winfield, Kansas; then to the Clinton camp, Iowa, where he has a cottage. He was lately at DesMoines, Iowa, and the Daily News spoke of him as follows: "A man who claims that he died when between six and seven years of age and was resurrected on the third day thereafter; that when but nine or ten years of age his parents imagined that he was possessed of the devil and had him cast into a dungeon, where he remained sixteen months; that he has prophesied fires and accidents, among them being the big Davison hotel fire in Milwaukee last June; and who, moreover, wears elegant medals accorded him in four different states as testimonials of belief in his abilities, is Max Hoffmann, spirit medium and lecturer, who will give a demonstration in Yeomen hall to-night. Straight from clear eyes shot the unfaltering gleam of natural intelligence of this man, who has a most strange story, as he talked of his awful past to a News reporter last night. To doubt his story was impossible. There was nothing in the natural tenor of his voice, the shudder as he recited the story of the terrors of the maniac's cell into which he was thrown by parents who thought him a witch, to denote falsity or the impostor. 'Here,' he said, 'is a small gold ring that was presented to me together with 5,000 shares of mining stock, by a man for whom I discovered a gold mine. Here is a letter from a man whose stolen horses and harness I discovered and whose sons I said were guilty of the theft. They were afterwards proven guilty. I have predicted fires and accidents by this power which came to me when I was languishing in the insane asylum. It was here I first saw spirits and followed their directions. They freed me.'"

Mrs. W. G. Bosworth, 335 Sixty-first place, was rescued by her husband from almost certain death by drowning under most remarkable circumstances. Mr. Bosworth, who is connected with Bosworth Brothers' Warehouse and Van Company, was absent from his home on a trip across the lake and his wife, arising early, decided to take advantage of the fine morning by rowing out on the lake near her home, with fishing tackle. A few minutes after she had left the shore a sudden gust overturned the boat and Mrs. Bosworth was lucky enough to grasp the gunwale and support herself in the water. Her husband, who had returned unexpectedly on the morning boat, strolled along the beach on his way home and saw the woman in the water. Hurriedly securing a boat he rowed out and rescued her and it was not until he was lifting her into the boat that he recognized his wife. "It was telepathic influence that made me take that little walk on the beach before going home," said Mr. Bosworth. —Chicago Examiner.

E. R. Keech writes from Rockford, Mich.: "The R. P. Society quarterly meeting was a success in every way. Mrs. D. A. Morrill fully sustained her reputation as an able exponent of the spiritual philosophy by delivering two very instructive lectures. Then after a short but excellent talk by Mrs. Harry Baldwin, of Grand Rapids, Mrs. Morrill followed with messages. It seemed to me that not one who had the pleasure of listening, could help feeling uplifted into a higher, purer humanhood."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley leaves the city this week, going to Rockford mass-meeting.

Rev. Sara C. Scovell attended a spiritual meeting at Joplin yesterday afternoon for the purpose of ordaining a minister of the Spiritualistic faith, Mrs. Florence Waltz, of Fifth and Joplin, being the candidate. By request only a few special friends and officers were present. The ceremony occurred at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. J. K. Brown, corner of Thirteenth and Grand avenue. Candidates for the ministry under Spiritualistic rules are required to obligate themselves to remember the spiritual and material needs of others, regardless of personal comfort to themselves. The ordination was made under the Illinois State Association of Spiritualists and the National Association, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., Rev. Scovell, as an ordained minister of this and the Joplin district being authorized to bestow papers and spiritual instruction upon the condidate.—Galena (Mo.) Times.

Mrs. Elizabeth Roberts, M. D., writes: "All Spiritualists should know of Mrs. Maggie Vestal's beautiful phase of mediumship. She is a trumpet medium and holds her seances in the light—IN SUNSHINE if you desire; and when your friends come and converse with you, they appear so near and are so consoling to the believer. We were very sorry to have her leave our town (Connersville, Ind.) so soon. I will say for myself I never sat with a medium who gave me as fine communications as I received through Mrs. Maggie Vestal."

J. L. Merritt writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "At the morning meeting of the Truthseekers Spiritualist Society of this city, June 5, 1904, spirit Carlyle Petersilea inspired Sister Pennington, the vice-president, to suggest the raising of funds to erect a temple, and so much enthusiasm for the project was evoked that in a short time $680 were guaranteed. At the meeting Sunday, the guaranteed amount had been so increased that Bro. E. W. Allen, president of the society, agreed to raise the sum of $1,000. Sveral others agreed to stand by the project, one brother promising $500. The ladies of the various societies are not idle, but already substantial plans for raising adequate funds to procure a pipe organ, chairs and other necessary furnishings are already well under way. Sunday last the society passed a resolution providing for the appointment of a building committee. The present plan under consideration is to erect a building at a cost of about $3,000, and with a lot on First street already owned by the society, together with $1,000 now guaranteed and all enthusiastic for the plan, the project seems a feasible one and comparatively speaking, easy of accomplishment. The writer was present Saturday evening last at the tent services of the Jumpers. The officiating preacher who is very outspoken, yet misleading withal, consigned all Spiritualists, Theosophists, palmists, fortune-tellers, together with most preachers and their duped members along with whoremongers, murderers, liars and drunkards, to an awful future of torment. He did not so plainly assert, but the inference of his language was derived that the Jumpers would be reserved for the abode of bliss. What a lonely endurance that will be with nothing to do but to jump up and yell, hallelujah! But the preacher landed fairly in the ranks of the liars for he misquoted and tortured the meaning of scripture to bear out his hellish creed."

Frank Collins writes from Ohio: "If ever our cause receives a new impetus to advance on higher lines, it will be given through the home circles. I am glad you advocate the home circle in your paper, for it is the only salvation for us, as fraud and deception is on the increase. I have a very extensive correspondence, and it is growing more and more every week; but I tell all my correspondents that if they are not now subscribers to The Progressive Thinker to subscribe at once. No good thinking, working Spiritualist will try to do without a live Spiritualist paper."

B. A. Hall writes: "I kindly ask permission to announce through your paper, the account of the very pleasant and refreshing spiritual lectures we are having from the very able guides of Mrs. L. J. Jaquet every Sunday, held in Van Buren Opera House, corner California avenue and West Madison street. Sunday, June 5, we had a most glorious meeting, with the very finest descriptions of spirit loved ones from Mrs. Jaquet's little Indian guide, Sunbeam. Mrs. S. J. Cutter's guides also gave tests which were most pleasing and recognized. On last Sunday, June 12, we enjoyed again a most beautiful and well-mastered lecture from Mrs. Jaquet's guide. We had also a beautiful and finely executed inspirational poem by Mrs. I. A. Hall, at both meetings. After the evening lecture, Mrs Jaquet's little Indian girl gave some fine and most pleasing spirit descriptions, all being recognized. Mrs. Cutter also gave tests which were much appreciated by the audience. We most cordially invite all earnest and honest people, Spiritualists or non-Spiritualists, to visit our meetings and listen to the grand truths of the philosophy of Spiritualism from Mrs. Jaquet's guides, and judge for themselves whether they are capable of giving truth or not on the continuity of life."

George W. Crawford writes: "The cause of Spiritualism is advancing here in Larned, Kansas. The Harvey Brothers are here in their sixth week stay with us, and interest grows every day. One noticeable fact is that two-thirds of the attendance has been Methodists; even after the minister preached a sermon on the Woman of Endor, in which he styled her a witch. The Harveys are two honest young men and genuine mediums. Otis, the boy, can only hold one or two seances a week, but the manifestations are good, and the forms much brighter and plainer than in any other medium's seance I ever attended."

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Dora Stanley, a gypsy girl, queen of a camp near here, was arrested on a charge of witchcraft. John Karaska, who made the charge, says that his father, who was supposed to be wealthy, died a year ago, and his heirs could find none of his wealth. A few weeks ago he went to the gypsy queen and for $5 she went into a trance and revealed to him that the money was hidden under a tree two miles from the house. For six days Karaska and his friends tore up the earth about the tree, but found no money. Disgusted, he had the gypsy queen arrested.

St. Louis, Mo.—An attempt to dynamite the church of St. Anthony, an institution maintained by Franciscan monks in South St. Louis, was frustrated because a candle, twice lighted, was mysteriously extinguished. It was the weekly day of special services in honor of St. Anthony, and the church was comfortably filled with worshipers. The lay brother had lighted all the candles on the altar but one. This one refused to be lighted from the taper carried in the brother's hands. The lay brother lifted the candle from the socket, lighted it and replaced it. Immediately it was extinguished. A second attempt had a similar result. Somewhat exasperated the lay brother removed both candle and holder. Then he discovered, behind the altar, a fuse which led to the candle from beneath the altar. Under the altar was found a quantity of dynamite sufficient to have caused the destruction of the church and the death of most of the congregation. The fuse was so arranged as to be ignited after the candle to which it was attached should have burned several minutes.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

E. J. Schellhous writes: "The above, published in the Kansas City Times of June 14, is worthy of consideration and of much interest to Spiritualists. There are undoubtedly many lives preserved by guardian spirits whose cause is never dreamed of; or is ascribed to special Providence. We should be ever mindful of the fact that we are under the watchful care of guardian spirits; and our recognition of them should inspire in us a sense of gratitude. The enclosed is evidently a remarkable instance of this guardianship."

Mr. Sherk, secretary, writes; "Attendants at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, had the pleasure of listening to an address by G. H. Brooks, both afternoon and evening. Mr. Brooks also gave good psychometric readings. Other demonstrations were given by Mrs. Shoemaker, a North Side medium, and by our president, Mr. Coates. Unusually fine music was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Seeley, also by Mrs. Newton. These singers render us an incalculable service and we hope they may be with us often. The wedding service in the afternoon (reported elsewhere) passed off very auspiciously. No more afternoon meetings will be held during the summer months, but the evening meetings will be held as usual. Next Sunday evening the address will be given by T. W. Sherk. Subject, 'The Need of Spirit Guides.' Excellent music will be furnished by capable professionals."

Mrs. H. Ericson writes: "I had the pleasure of attending a Spiritualistic meeting held in Mrs. DeLong's parlors at 962 Milwaukee avenue, Friday evening, June 17. There were about 75 persons in attendance. Mrs. DeLong, the pastor, spoke on Death. Each individual in attendance received a test and spirit message. She was assisted by her brother, Prof. R. S. Ray, of 207 Lincoln avenue, the well-known medium. Both he and Mrs. DeLong are doing much toward advancing the philosophy of Spiritualism. Mrs. DeLong holds meetings every Friday in her parlors."

Mrs. Nellie F. Noyes will lecture next Sunday for the Occult Society at 319 East 55th street. She will give horoscopic messages, and should attract a large audience.

Spiritualists of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will hold a Grove meeting at Harlem Park, two miles north of Rockford, Ill., on June 24, 25 and 26. Some of the most prominent exponents of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism will be present at this gathering. Moses Hull of the Morris Pratt Institute at Whitewater, Wis., who is the greatest debater on Biblical Spiritualism in the land, will be present; Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the Ill S. S. A.; Clara L. Stewart of the Morris Pratt Institute; Will J. Erwood, president of the Wis. S. S. A.; Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the Ill. S. S. A.; Madam Brunswick of Dixon, Ill., and Georgia Gladys Cooley of Denver, one of the greatest platform mediums in the country will be present for three days, and a number of other good test mediums. Interesting meetings will be held morning, afternoon and evening of each day. The best of music both vocal and instrumental, will be furnished by students of the Morris Pratt Institute of Whitewater, Wis. A small admission will be charged at the auditorium gate to defray expenses. Light refreshments can be had on the grounds. The best of car service from the city to the park. All are cordially invited. Madam Curtis of Rockford, and Mrs. Delia West, of Elgin, formerly of Rockford, and home talent, will assist in carrying out the program. Mrs. Ella J. Bloom, secretary of the I. S. S. A., will preside at all meetings during the camp.

Ada Rainy of Streator, Ill., sends us a large club of subscribers. Thanks, lady.

Dr. J. W. Cowan, a prominent Spiritualist of San Francisco, Cal., writes, expressing, like thousands of others, his high appreciation of The Progressive Thinker: "I could not get along without your grand paper. I have taken it for years. I would rather live on one meal a day than be without it."

Mrs. Clara Wagner writes from Defiance, Ohio: "The First Spiritualist Society of Defiance is doing as well as we could expect. We are planting in new soil. We have lecturing and tests on Sunday evening, and a lyceum in the morning. We try to give old and young a chance. If any of our neighboring towns wish my assistance to help them, I will gladly do so."

Parkland Heights Spiritualists Home and Camp-meeting Association will open its camp in the beautiful grove near Pioneer Cottage, on the first Sunday in July, by holding services both morning and afternoon. These meetings will be continued until the first of September. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates have accepted an invitation to be with us on the opening day. They are too well known as earnest, true workers in the cause of Spiritualism to need any further endorsement to insure them a most hearty welcome to our grounds. Other good speakers will be present, and we hope to make the day an interesting and instructive one to all who attend. There is a large hotel on the grounds beside several private homes, where guests may be accommodated. Parkland is on the New York branch of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, with several trains stopping daily. For further information address Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary, Floral Heights, Parkland, Eden P. O. Pa.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS.—During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Montana News.

Just a few lines to let you and the people through your valued paper know a little of what is going on in this far western state, Montana. I am glad to tell you we held our state convention at Butte, Mont., June 3 and 4. We had a very harmonious and successful meeting, and elected the following officers: Mrs. Lillian McCormick of Billings, president; Mrs. M. P. Hicks, Anaconda, vice-president; Mrs. Selbrede, Billings, secretary; Mrs. M. A. Logue, Butte, treasurer; Trustees: Mr. St. John Billings; Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Maude Holmes, Butte; Mr. A. Laurens, Livingston, and Mr. Mettler, Great Falls.

We had with us on that occasion Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa, as speaker and test medium. Her work needs no comment from me, as all who have ever heard her—and they are many—agree that she is one of our tried and true mediums on the public platform to-day. She journeyed to this far western country at our earnest solicitation. Myself and husband, W. J. Hicks, being well acquainted with her in the East, knew we could recommend her to the people of the west as a true medium, and all were delighted with her and her work.

On her way west she visited Billings, Mont., and made many friends and they are looking forward to her return in about two weeks. She also visited Livingston, and returns there also. Then on to Butte for the convention. She is now visiting at Anaconda, holding meetings and parlor circles and creating a lively interest among the people in our great cause. Spiritualism was almost unknown out here when we arrived about a year ago, but we have been able to stir up a great deal of interest in Spiritualism since our state association was started about a year ago by George W. Kates and wife. We have now good live societies in Billings, Livingston, Butte and Anaconda, and hope to have more in a short time.

Those desiring the services of Mrs. McCoy enroute East can address her in care of Mrs. F. D. McCormick, Cottage Hotel, Billings, Mont., as she is engaged there from the 5th to the 10th of July. MRS. M. P. HICKS.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give what ever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

J. Freeman: Q. Is there in existence to-day or has there ever been a race or tribe of human beings approaching the monkeys in having "caudal appendages"?

A. There is no more truth in the stories of ape-men, which have been set afloat, than in the fairy tales of folk-lore.

The finding of such a race would not be confirmatory of evolution, but rather opposed to that theory. The highest of the quadrumana (orangs, baboons, apes) are entirely tailless, showing the loss by atrophy of this appendage, even before the quadrumana had advanced even to the borders of the human realm.

The Negrillos of the Philippines, and the dwarf races of central Africa, are among the lowest races of mankind, yet they show no approach to the animal in this direction. The tailed monkeys are the lowest members of the quadrumana. There are all the higher members of the latter between these monkeys and man, and hence, such a race of men as the question implies, would not be a "connecting link" but a reversion.

W. L. Bellingham: Q. What is the difference between magnetism and electricity?

A. Magnetism includes all the phenomena of attraction. It is the property which causes the magnet to attract iron, or the field of the electric coil to do the same. Its cause has been supposed to be the circulation of electric currents but this is entirely theoretical.

In a wider sense the attraction of gravitation the pull all matter gives to all other matter in the universe is called magnetism. Iron is perhaps the only element which manifests magnetism. Other substances have faintly indicated this property but it is questionable whether the presence of an undetected portion of iron may not be responsible.

Electricity, either in the dynamic or static form, is as different from magnetism as it is from light or heat. It is, however, by means of the magnet that the strongest and most continuous currents are produced.

H. McA.: Q. I have recently developed as an automatic writer, and many strange experiences have come to me. I am, or feel that I am appealed to by spirits for assistance, and again I receive communications which may be telepathy, for they are not independent voices but as thoughts projected into my mind. How and what am I to understand?

A. It has been well-known to those who have studied the manifestations, that spirits often come to mediums and circles for assistance, and when met with helpful kindness received great benefit. Mr. McA. should congratulate himself that he is not misled by the "voice" into believing it to be a real voice. Thoughts are as he says, "projected," and come into his mind. He perceives the difference between them and when spoken. Many do not. The thoughts come with such vividness the mind by habit gives them objective source and deludes itself with the belief that it hears the sounds. Our correspondent does not need further advice. His "plain duty" is before him.

Horace E. Pitkin: Q. What is the cause of spotted fever, and cure?

A. Spotted fever, known by many names, as black fever, black death, purple fever, is now designated cerebro-spinal meningitis. It is among the most fatal diseases, and the physician called to its treatment well knows that he is helpless, and that every method of medical treatment that has been recommended has not lessened the percentage of deaths. The eminent authority, Dr. Stille, well observes: "The first symptoms of the disease are the first phenomena of death." In some of the weekly health reports of New York City the number of deaths are equal to the number of cases. The average of death is given at from 30 to 75 per cent, with the inclination to the higher number, and some physicians place the loss at even a greater ratio. It prevailed in this country from 1807 to 1816, and then disappeared and for a quarter of a century there was exemption. It then appeared and has since prevailed in different sections of the country, as an epidemic, isolated or sporadic cases being rare. It presents a great diversity of symptoms, and it may be preluded by general prostration lasting days or come suddenly in the midst of apparent health. It may continue for weeks, or destroy life in a few hours. It strikes at the very seat of life in the spinal cord and basilar brain, and the result is proportioned to the rapidity of the advancement of the lesion in nerve tissue. Of course, as an effect, all peripheral nerves with the organs they supply, are affected.

Of the many causes assigned, all fail to meet the facts. Food cleanliness, water, do not seem to have influence in inviting attack nor social condition, for the child of affluence is no more exempt than the street vagabond. It is contagious, though it does not appear to be directly from the diseased person. It is in the air, and taken in by the breath.

There is no doubt about its being caused by a special germ, a bacillus, belonging to the genus of the fever germs.

It must find in the system of these attacked a soil prepared for its growth. If this were not so, then when the air became filled with germs, and of necessity every one breathed them with the air, all would suffer from the disease. On the contrary the number affected, to those who are not, is not large. The same is true of all contagious or epidemic diseases.

There is always a portion of the people who resist the disease. Even in the most virulent small-pox, yellow fever, or cholera, some escape. They are immune and it may be inferred that such immunity may be had by all were the conditions and causes of such immunity understood. It is supposed that this resistance resides in the white corpuscles of the blood. These corpuscles resemble the amoeboid bacteria, in their multiplication and activity in the blood. One of their functions is to seize and absorb any and every germ that may be taken into the blood through the food, drink or air. They are constantly doing this work, for millions of various forms are being hourly taken into the body. When vigorous, all goes well. The victory is with them, and they grow strong in the incessant contest. But if by any means they became weakened, if their multiplication is disturbed so that the blood contains less numbers, then the invading host may gain mastery. There are degrees of resistance and when the air or food becomes swarming with germs they may become victorious by their overwhelming numbers.

As for remedies, all the methods of treatment which have been tested have been failures, and the death rate has not been materially affected.

Strictly sanitary conditions; pure air, pure water and sustaining food taken often, sponge baths to keep down the temperature, compresses, in short, hygienic nursing, is all that can be done, while the result is waited for.

Reader: Q. Is the story of Rip Van Winkle original with Washington Irving?

A. On the contrary it is a folk-lore tale which in various forms has been told by almost every race of people since the Aryans appear on the horizon of history or of myth. Some writers claim that the story was brought to Holland by the Dutch from Japan, by merchant traders, and thence to New Amsterdam (New York) where Irving heard it from the people. They would have the jolly Dutchman a transformed "Lu-wen," the Japanese sleeper, without taking the trouble to find out whether both were or were not, transformations of older tales.

One need not go to Japan or China for the source of the story, for German lore has many a tale of the "sleeping prince," who lies under a spell of some sorcerer, until by some happy event he is awakened. There is a story of the "Sleeping Beauty," and of the "Seven Sleepers." Irving gave the time-old folk-lore story a new name and local coloring.

FIGHT FOR UNIFORM TAXATION.

American Secular Union and Others Have Done a Grand Work.

To the Editor:—The contest for equal or uniform taxation which has been going on in different parts of the country has been carried on vigorously in this city. A strong effort has been made to have the church property taxed, which has heretofore been illegally exempted.

Some two years ago the movement was started by the American Secular Union calling public meetings in various parts of the city. At these gatherings we were met by representatives of the various Turner societies and afterward by representatives of labor unions. The Bohemian society entitled "Bohemian Guard of Freethinkers" also took a part in the movement.

These meetings having attracted a good deal of attention, and some of the arguments having been made public, the result was that a large amount of property which has been previously exempted was added to the assessment roll last year.

Encouraged by this success, this year, bolder measures were adopted. Mr. E. C. Reichwald acting for the United Societies, filed a petition for mandamus, to compel the assessors to place upon the rolls property which had been illegally omitted. This proceeding was commenced about six months ago. The attorney for the board of assessors filed a demurrer to the petition. The societies appointed a committee to take the matter in hand, and furnished them liberally with money to carry on the campaign. After the usual court delays, the demurrer was called up by the committee's Attorney. The attorney for the board now solicited an interview, and admitting that the demurrer had been filed for delay, he stated that the board was willing to place upon the rolls all the property which the committee would designate; leaving it to the property owners to contest their right to make the assessments.

Thus the matter now stands. In about three weeks the committee will make a report to the board of assessors and will furnish them with a list of additional property to be assessed.

This, of course, is a complete victory for the friends of equal rights and equal taxation, so far as the action of the assessors can decide the question. The credit is due to the Freethinkers, the Turner societies, and the labor organizations of this city. The Bohemian Guard of Freethinkers has been specially active, and liberal in the contribution of funds. C. B. WAITE.

MISSIONARIES' WORK.

Report of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague.

When May first arrived we were serving the society at Dana, Ill. This society we organized last September. It started with fifty-eight members and has been doing good work ever since. There is much interest manifested in our cause in Dana. Our meetings were well attended. On Sunday, May 1, we held a seance in the Spiritualists hall, sixty-nine persons being present. The tests and messages were numerous and of a class that could not possibly be gathered from "blue books" or books of any other color.

Mrs. Sprague has developed a new phase of mediumship within the last two years. She invites any one in the audience to speak the name of some person living in earth life when she gives a character delineation, physical diagnosis, describes mental peculiarities, incidents and accidents in the past life of the one named. She frequently comes in rapport with their spirit friends, receiving, and giving messages from them. Through the giving of the name she does what both of us, and many other mediums do, in reading from hand-writing, photographs, etc.

At Dana we both gave readings from hand-writings and photographs, and Mrs. Sprague read from names given by members of the audience; besides this, clairvoyant descriptions, spirit messages, and tests in abundance were given. Two hours and more were devoted to the spirit friends, and so far as we know, all present were entirely satisfied with the seance, many of whom heartily thanked the missionaries and expressed their pleasure at being able to be present.

We visited DeKalb, Ill., where we held three meetings and one seance. This place needs missionary work very much. There was once a flourishing society in DeKalb, but some of its members died, others moved away, and through adverse conditions it became weak. A few good Spiritualists still hold the charter, and they engage a speaker occasionally.

Several developing circles are being held and occasionally a medium visits the town.

At one time there was a good prospect of a Spiritualist church being built in DeKalb, but for some reason it was not done. The old enthusiasm may yet be revived, we believe, and a church may be built, if the state association can do some thorough missionary work in this town; for there are those who are able and would be willing to do much for such an enterprise if proper encouragement was given. It would require such evidence as would insure its being used permanently, that's all.

We next visited Rockford, Ill., and served the society that we organized in that city one year ago. We held two meetings in their spacious hall, taking part in the first anniversary services of this society. The platform was beautifully decorated with potted plants and a profusion of flowers, special music was furnished for the occasion. In fact everything was lovely excepting the weather. It rained all day and was a bad Sunday, which caused our audience to be lacking in numbers in the afternoon, but in the evening the large hall was well filled. We felt we ought to be willing to put up with one bad Sunday in Rockford since the Rockford people had been pestered with a bad Sunday ("Billy" Sunday, the howling evangelist), every day for about three weeks. This bad "Billy" Sunday had devoted one of his tirades called by him a sermon, to berating and abusing Spiritualists and misrepresenting Spiritualism. Very likely the Spiritualists would have felt slighted if this "Sunday" man had not noticed them, for, we were told that every class of people, nearly, including those of his own church came in for a share of his "bar-room" slang and abuse.

At our afternoon meeting the right hand of fellowship was publicly extended to a class of new members of the society.

The closing exercises of the evening consisted in the christening or the naming of the baby boy of Rev. I. S. Getchell and wife. Mr. Getchell is the very efficient and honored president of the Rockford society, and Mrs. Getchell is one of our best new mediums, both for platform messages and private readings.

The christening service was beautiful as it was unique, every detail having been planned and arranged by Mrs. Getchell. One feature of the services I will mention: Just as the name of the child was spoken, two little boys and two little girls dressed in white, completely showered the little one with rose petals as it sat smiling in its mother's arms.

The Rockford society is now one year old. It has done more to advance the cause of Spiritualism in Rockford than has been done in the last ten years before it was organized. The report of the work of the year was read at these meetings and shows that the society has held regular meetings throughout the year, collected and paid out nearly six hundred dollars, employed the best talent obtainable, has a Ladies' Auxiliary that look after the sick and needy, as well as to look after the social entertainment of the members and others and to help to raise funds to carry on the work. The society and the Ladies' Auxiliary have done all this and both have a snug little sum in their treasury to begin the new year with. What society can make a better showing for the past year's work in Illinois? We are proud of this society, and would say to other towns and cities "go and do likewise."

No public work of any importance had been done in Rockford for many years until we organized this society one year ago. Who can say missionary work does not pay? One thing more, there is another chartered society in Rockford that is the outgrowth of the one mentioned above, so the Illinois State Spiritualists Association has two societies in Rockford.

We next visited Lafayette, Ind., and held our services in the Universalist church which is occupied and controlled by the Spiritualist society that we organied in Lafayette last January. We found this society doing good work. This is the first society ever organized in Lafayette and from present appearances it will be the only one needed for some years to come as it fills all requirements at the present time. The services at Lafayette were well attended. A few new members were added to the society.

While at Lafayette we were called to Colburn, a near-by town to perform a marriage ceremony. Mrs. Sprague took charge of the services at the church in our absence. A report of this wedding, I believe, has been published in the Spiritualist papers. We closed our work at Lafayette by holding a very successful seance in the church.

Our next place of labor was at Peru, Ind., where we held three meetings. Mr. E. A. Schram, the president of the Indiana State Spiritualists Association, is also the president of the local society at Peru. A report of these meetings including the christening of a child has already been mentioned in a former issue of your good paper.

The society at Peru has full control of its hall, holding meetings whenever it pleases, it has a live president backed by a few good and true Spiritualists and the people of the town are getting the benefit of its good work. The hall was filled at our last service.

We visited Rochester, Ind., having been called there to reply to the Rev. Mr. Switzer, a Methodist minister who had maliciously attacked Spiritualism and Spiritualists.

We will not give details as this report is quite long. Through the reply of Mrs. Margaret Miller, published in the Rochester Republican, and our answer from the Spiritualist rostrum at Rochester, the Rev. Mr. Switzer has, no doubt learned a lesson that will not soon be forgotten. It is not probable that he will again rush forward at the first opportunity with his foul slanders, malicious misrepresentations, and wholesale condemnation of the great movement of Modern Spiritualism.

We held one meeting at Plymouth, Ind. The little band of workers there are full of enthusiasm and they make the very best conditions for Spiritualist meetings. The hall was well filled, every chair being taken, and a number of people remained standing throughout the entire service. The meeting was a grand success.

No public lecture on the subject of Spiritualism had ever been given in Plymouth until we went there. Since that time many people have heard the glad message of Spiritualism, and not a few of them for the first time.

On our way home, we stopped at Alliance, Ohio, and held three meetings in their lovely church. This society has been doing good and continuous work ever since we first went there five years ago last fall. During the few months that we served this society at that time, we added fifty-three new members, and though it had held only an occasional meeting for years before, it has been enabled to hold regular services during the lecture season ever since.

At every place we visited, where we had previously worked, we found encouragement, for the societies were doing well, and we could see the benefits of our labors.

There is no work so important as the missionary work, and we hope that every state association will organize systematically in order to keep missionaries constantly in the field. In this way societies may be assisted, encouraged, and made strong.

Spiritualists, you have nothing to fear. Our cause is safe in the hands of our organization, and is making such progress that it has already become the most popular religion of the day.

At some future time, near or far, the teachings of Spiritualism will be applied and lived, when the wrongs will be righted and justice will be done.

If every Spiritualist would join a society and do a little toward making the movement a success, Spiritualism would soon accomplish many of the objects for which it came.

E. W. SPRAGUE AND WIFE,
N. S. A. Missionaries.

The Recording Angel's Tear.

The man's face was neither heated nor angry. He had a cold, scrutinizing eyes and a straight, hard mouth. There was a line showing irritation between his eyebrows.

"I had rather hear no more," he said, quietly, as the girl paused for a moment. "The past is done with. It was not so pleasant that I should wish to hear it recalled. May we consider this interview at an end?" His hand went towards the bell. The girl was baffled, but she made one last effort. She had pleaded with tear-dimmed eyes and she trembled in every limb.

"Oh, can nothing move you?" she cried tremulously. "She was such a child when she married you, and you were always so cold. She couldn't live without love, and so she fell, but she always loved you. She has repented for years. She is dying, and night and day she moans for you, to see you and ask your forgiveness. Oh, if you ever cared for her, or you have not a heart of stone, send some message if you will not see her. She is dying."

The man turned on her sharply. "Dying is she, and you want a message? Tell your sister," he said slowly, "that I would to God she had died before I saw her, before she was able to ruin my home and drag my name in the dirt. Damn her!" he said with sudden violence, "let her die!"

Outside, the night stillness was broken by the hoarse, jarring shriek of the flying-foxes, the snapping of twigs and tearing of leaves as they threw themselves among the branches of the fig-trees, and the gurgle—like dropping water—of innumerable frogs. Inside there was a buzz of mosquitoes and the rattling, labored breath of a dying woman. Her body was already dead; only the head turned restlessly from side to side and the eyes in their agony told of the mind that would not die. The question in those eyes, as the door creaked and opened, was so imperative that the incomer could not choose but answer. Her hesitation ceased as she saw the restless longing.

"He was away from home," she said, trying to put truth into her voice. She drew aside the mosquito-net and fanned the hot, clammy face; but the question still remained in the dying eyes. "Yes, dear," she went on soothingly, "I wrote as you asked me to. He will get the letter to-morrow and then he will come." But her heart said, "Before then, please God, she will be dead."

The eyes closed, and the breath came pantingly through the discolored lips. The hands, lying powerless on the sheet, were blue and swollen. The hours passed wearily by. The doctor came in silently, saw the mark of Death's finger touch, and left her undisturbed. The flying foxes were silent at last. A large moth flew in and flapped its wings along the painted ceiling, and at last the eyes opened.

"Is he coming? I can't wait. Won't he come?" The girl bent over her.

"He is coming," she said in an agony of sympathy, "He will soon be here."

"Will he—ever—forgive?"

"Yes, that was his message; he forgives and loves you still."

"Loves?"

"Yes, he has always loved you."

The end was very near, and the eyes were glazing over. The watcher braced herself for the last lie. Very tenderly she raised the helpless figure.

"He is coming, dear," she whispered; "he is coming—I can hear his step upon the stair," and there was a smile of great joy on the dead face as she gently lowered it on the pillow.

A PECULIAR DOCTRINE.

Bringing Disgrace on the Spiritualists of Kansas.

"We hold that even liberty to do wrong is a personal right that ought to be deemed inviolate."—Resolutions of the Kansas State Spiritualists Association.

Can it be possible in this the twentieth century, that such a thought as the above could even enter the mind of any civilized, intelligent individual, much less find expression among a series of resolutions offered for acceptance to any American organization? I am amazed, shocked, astonished at the character of such an idea and the boldness with which it is introduced. I can now understand how it was possible for the "free love" idea to become regarded as one of the tenets of Spiritualism, to its almost utter disgrace and ruin. It was suggested by one claiming to be a Spiritualist, but who was entirely ignorant of the nature of true Spiritualism, or was acting in the employ of its enemies, bent on crushing it out of existence. Are there any such agents in the Kansas State Spiritualists Association?

"Liberty to do wrong, a personal right?" I deny it! Most emphatically do I deny it. No man has a personal right to do wrong. There is an unwritten law of conscience that prohibits any man from doing wrong. The word "liberty" has no such definition or meaning or intent in the interpretation of the law, or natural, ordinary, common horse sense. "Liberty to do wrong" was not thought of by the framers of the Constitution of the United States, or of the Declaration of Independence. Does the writer of that resolution contend for a moment that he is granted the liberty by the Almighty, by man, or by his own conscience (if he has any), to murder, to defile his neighbor's wife or daughter, to steal, to lie, to cheat, or do anything else that is wrong? A man has the "liberty" and "personal right" to thrust his hand into the fire and burn it to a crisp; to gouge out his eyes; to swallow prussic acid; to drink himself or shoot himself to death, but such is not the "liberty" contemplated by the letter or spirit of the term, and "personal right" has no such significance as here suggested.

No man has a "personal right" or the "liberty" to do himself or any other person any wrong. America is the land of freedom and liberty to do RIGHT, not WRONG, and what is right can readily be determined by an intelligent conscience. H. V. SWERINGEN.

Edgewood Camp, Wash.

The State Spiritualist Association of Washington will open their camp-meeting at Edgewood camp, on July 31 and will continue three weeks ending on August 22 and 23, with their eighth annual convention. We expect a good time this year as we have the promise of help from all over the state from mediums and campers, and the outlook is fine for the largest and most successful camp ever held in the northwest.

To prove that the Spiritualists are in earnest and mean business, a call was made for a picnic and clearing bee on the 30th of May, and over 80 responded, brothers and sisters, and the result was a lot of work was accomplished, as our ten acres are thickly wooded and of course necessitates a lot of work in getting it in order for streets, etc., but in the near future we are in hopes of having as nice a camping place as there is in the United States.

A number of spaces have been allotted and permanent cottages will be erected; also a boat house and bath house, as we are located on the finest little lake in the country, called Surprise Lake, and it seems a surprise to many to see it located so nicely with the giant firs and cedars all around it, so it looks more like a dream than a reality. You must see it to appreciate it. And we are in hopes the curiosity of many will get the better of them and force them to come and investigate both the location and the Spiritualist philosophy, which they can surely do in August.

Chesterfield (Ind.) Camp News.

The outlook for a large attendance at Camp Chesterfield is very flattering, as there is a great demand for cottages.

There are now about twelve families on the camp grounds, and new arrivals daily.

Improvements on the camp are being pushed along. The association is building six cottages for rent. Several more are being built by members.

The president of the camp, Dr. G. N. Hilligoss, is much improved in health and expects to be with us for the board meeting, June 23.

Mr. Louis Vestal was called to Dayton, Ohio, last week on account of the serious illness of his wife.

W. T. Lynn and wife of Atlanta, Ga., are on the grounds. Mr. Lynn is superintending the building of an addition to his cottage on Broadway.

W. C. Jessup is expected home from St. Joseph, Mo., this week. Mr. Jessup has been having good success in Missouri and Kansas for the last half year.

Mrs. Hedrich, her daughter May and nephew, George Vonderheide, are on the grounds for a few weeks. They will return soon to Cincinnati, but will be with us during the entire camp.

The annual meeting of the state lyceum was held yesterday and decided to disband for the present and give their funds for the use of the camp lyceum. LYDIA A. JESSUP.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

An Appeal for the Truth.

MEDIUMS' PARAPHERNALIA.

Crowns, Belts, Hands, Heads, Veils and Full-size Figures, all illuminated with the new Radium light. Will appear, gradually float about room and disappear. All work confidential.

The above is the card of a business man in Chicago, engaged in selling paraphernalia to tricksters, whereby they are enabled to deceive the gullible public, and produce "phenomena" excelling that of honest mediums. It adds impressiveness to Prof. Lockwood's article. The name and number of the card are omitted.

To the Editor:—I wish to commend the vigorous assault you are making in The Progressive Thinker, upon the deception that is so largely practiced by those claiming mediumship, and to be working in the interests of the spiritual philosophy. The situation to-day is truly one of peculiar character, aptly illustrated by the parable in the New Testament of the "wheat and the tares." Truly, the two phases of the representation of Spiritualism—the true and the false—have grown up together, and "the tares" could not be pulled without in a measure disturbing "the wheat" of truth, until now it seems that the sickle of popular approval, will separate the tares from the wheat.

There is a vast difference between the psychic impressions noted in mental and intuitive mediumship, and the commercial tests, so common with a large element now seeking the spiritual rostrum, and who by their acts lead one to think that they regard perjury and duplicity as personal virtues.

There is a vast difference between a knowledge of the psychic co-relations of invisible elements, by which nature materializes all of her visible forms, and by which principle a spiritual form may be evolved, and the rubber faces, gauze dresses and laces made of such thin and airy material, that several faces and costumes may be carried in the arm pit, or secreted in the folds of private garments, or in a fold of the hair.

The crisis is, that the popular mind do not understand the psychic character of nature in the expression of her phenomena, mental or visible; they are awed by the mystery of an appearing that to them seems incomprehensible, but which is taken as the link that unites the realm beyond the grave, to the mortal plane. That the integrity of the spiritual philosophy can ever be established by these pernicious methods is a proposition that can only be answered in the negative. That it can ever gain that ascendency and approval in the mind of consistent thinkers that it merits as the philosophy of life here and hereafter, until the data of nature upon which it is based is more fully comprehended than it is now, is also a proposition that can only be answered NO. To hear any of these barnacles of mental perjury declare when they are caught, that, "they are regularly ordained ministers of Spiritualism," "regularly ordained and hold ordination papers from some state association," to see them open their seances with prayer, to hear them call for the audience to sing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," while they are preparing some transformation in the cabinet, ought to make every honest man blush for the duplicity and heartlessness of the procedure, and every honest Spiritualist hang his head in the degradation of shame that the most valuable and far-reaching truth the mortal has ever known, can be simulated by the trickery of necromancy, and received by a large class, as the pure coin of nature's evidence of the continuity of life, and the close relation the disembodied spirit holds to the mortal plane.

Some Christ is needed at this time to scourge the bucket-shop fortune-tellers, the sellers of charms and stocks, and the money-seekers from the temple, for in the hands of this constituency it is a den where thieves masquerade in the guise of spirit messengers, and impose upon honest investigators, and arouse in their minds a sense of disgust for the very name of Spiritualism. Spiritualism offers to the world the greatest truth known in the history of human progress, and its greatness inheres in the fact that all of its data, including its phenomena, and its divine principles of natural philosophy, have their bases in the psychic character of nature itself, which can be fully demonstrated. That these proofs can be simulated by the fakir in his tricks of materializing, slate-writing and occult photography, is the idle fancy of those whose covenant with mystery, precludes common sense.

I am led to make these remarks by the reception of the enclosed exposure of the Howlands in Philadelphia recently. Decent people will not be in haste to unite with a movement that ordains under its banner tricksters to masquerade as its light bearers. It is time to think and act. W. M. LOCKWOOD.

The Origin of the Sabbath and of Sunday.

The letter in the New York Sun, signed "D. D. LL.D.," in a controversy as to Sunday, shows that even educated men will insist on the perversion of truth. After quoting various authorities, he says: "Thus all along through history this day was regarded, as Father Tiernan remarks, as a day of religious observance and not as a day of rest and recreation."

If he means the history of the church, he is right—possibly. But "the Sabbath" originally was not a church decree, nor was it inaugurated in the handing down of "tablets of stone on Mount Sinai."

Originally it was a decree of King Naram-Sim, son of the great Sargon I. of the Accadian-Assyrian-Babylonish line, 2,800 years (or thereabouts) B. C., 1,500 years before Moses and 2,500 years before Ezra and his collaborating scribes wrote the Law after the Restoration.

This law, ordinance, Assyrian or Accadian brick or tablet is now, I believe, in the British Museum. It gives the year of the reign of Naram-Sim. It gives the date of month and the name of the Magistrate. It recites in effect that "The king, seeing that his subjects were overworked, ordained there should be five days of rest in each month and that they should be called 'Sabutu,' which means a day of rest, and specified two of them, the 19th and 21st of the month (the others I have forgotten).

The Jews stole it, thinking when Babylon was utterly destroyed there was no record of the theft. Nor would there have been any but for the foresight of Assur-bani-pal, who commanded, in 732 B. C., the scribes and teachers and priests "to make copies of all the laws, history and learning of their forefathers and country, that they might be handed down to posterity."

He then had them arranged on the floor of the library and sealed them over carefully with bitumen. To him are we indebted for much of Babylonish history, customs, manners, etc.

The Christians stole it from the Jews and adapted it to suit themselves. Such is the history of the Sabbath-Sabutu-Sunday. GEORGE T. ADKINS.

THE TARES AND THE WHEAT.

As might be expected, a few of the readers of The Progressive Thinker cannot see the use or good of discussion of the fraud business in the matter of Blue Book tests, trick materializations, etc.

An instance of this view is exemplified in the following missive from an old Spiritualist:

To the Editor:—I noticed in your paper of May 21, that probably legal action would be taken by the Spiritualists of Danville, Ill., to prevent pretended spiritual mediums from practicing their calling in that city. This course of action seems to me to be in conflict with the accepted axiom, that "Truth left free, has nothing to fear in the combat with error." Jesus said, "Let the tares and the wheat grow together to the end, lest in pulling up the tares you pull up the wheat also." I have been forty years a Spiritualist; the frauds have been with us from the beginning, but Truth has been on guard, and I note its growth in spite of falsehood, fraud and lies. Let the frauds alone, give them a free hand. They will only brighten the garments of Truth.

Danville, Ill. DANIEL REED.

If Jesus said the words attributed to him, which is doubtful, we may be allowed to doubt the wisdom of his advice in the matter. We do not see any thorough-going practical farmer following this advice, and giving the chess, cockle, thistles, etc., an equal chance to grow and mingle their crop of injurious and poisonous seeds on equal terms of culture with the wheat. The writer of this has put in many a useful day's work with the hoe in hand eradicating the tares from the midst of the growing wheat in the field. No wise farmer will, by leaving the tares to grow unchecked, practically give them the same culture as he gives his grain.

The let alone policy would leave the Canada thistles to grow and multiply unchecked, without limit, till not only the fence corners and roadsides were infested but the whole farming country, hill and dale, upland and meadow, were overspread. If the wind-blown seeds alight and germinate in the garden and dooryard, among the useful vegetables and flowers, let them alone, give them a free hand. Their bloom and foliage may even outshine the roses, asters, hydrangias and geraniums.

To be consistent the same let-alone policy should be carried into all the affairs of society. The thieves, the embezzlers, the swindlers, the burglars, etc., should not be molested or hindered in their operations. The counterfeiter should be allowed to ply his business unhampered by legal prosecution and imprisonment.

Let the counterfeiters alone, "give them a free hand." They will only cause the genuine coin to shine the brighter.

Such is the logic of this modern Daniel.

The genuine golden coin, "left free, has nothing to fear," from the circulation of the counterfeit. Nevertheless, we suspect that our Daniel himself, if he were to have a base "eagle" passed on him, would demur to such a transaction.

And genuine spirit manifestations—are they not of greater value than gold?

Yes, Spiritualism has grown and will continue to grow, "in spite of falsehood, fraud and lies."

But how much more it might have grown, and how much higher its status in the world, if its shining raiment had never been besmirched by the frauds committed in its name by fake mediums, who have been encouraged in their nefarious work by a class of Spiritualists that stands ready to shield and protect them by the policy of "let-them-alone"—"give them a free hand."

It is a mere quibble to assert, as some do, that Miss Harlow and others who denounce blue book tests, "attack the phenomena of Spiritualism." If stock tests are phenomena of Spiritualism, then woe be to Spiritualism, for it is all fraud and deception, wholly without basis of truth, and unworthy of the notice of people in whom dwells a sense of honor and honesty. When mediums make such quibbling assertions they thereby bring a cloud upon their own claims of mediumship. JAS. C. UNDERHILL.

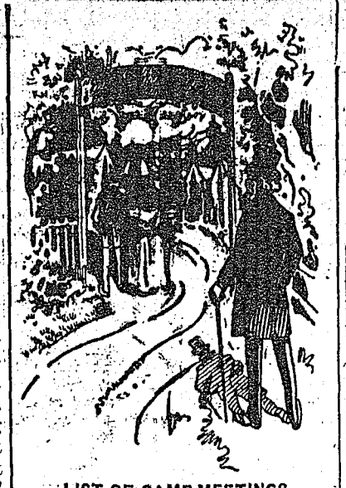
THAT "BLUE BOOK."

Nine Hundred and Ninety-nine Bogus Tests.



Whether or not the so-called Blue Book is or ever has been in existence, the number of intelligent Spiritualists who have been actually deceived by it is comparatively few in my opinion. I do not believe that Bro. H. D. Barrett was the "easy-mark" for fraudulent mediums, they represented him to be. If I am justified in judging the unwritten and unexpressed experiences of thousands of Spiritualists by my own, in what are known as "tests," platform or otherwise, their intrinsic value centers only in their original reception, when new, fresh and unexpected, under conditions in which the theory of fraud cannot possibly be entertained.

The same test may be given a hundred times by as many different mediums, in as many different places, and each time be genuinely given; this is possible, just barely possible; but after its first or original giving, its stock value declines very rapidly in the mind of the recipient, by reason of the facility with which it can be communicated and "watered." It is somewhat difficult for the recipient to invariably tell positively, when this is done, although he may feel very confident that he has been thus imposed upon, and he wisely concludes to govern himself by that magnanimous principle of law which teaches that it is better to allow ninety-nine guilty ones escape, than to accuse and convict a single innocent person. When mediums learn that to a wide-awake, intelligent Spiritualist or skeptical investigator, a "test," however remarkable, satisfactory and unquestionable it may be at its first giving, will bear but very few if any repetitions, they will not be so ready to repeat it on every occasion that offers.

So far as I am personally concerned, I am willing, if it should be necessary, to have nine thousand, nine hundred and ninety-nine bogus tests imposed upon me, and be included among Mr. W. F. Jamieson's "Weak Witnesses," if the ten thousandth test should prove true and genuine, and evidence or evince the fact of a future existence. Yes, I believe I could consent to be fraudulently imposed upon an even one hundred thousand times, if, by so doing, I could, by a single, solitary test, establish to my satisfaction, the fact of a future life, and the possibility of communion with the so-called dead. That fact, however, is established in my own mind by many proofs.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pills." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this first treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IF IS FREE. A WORD TO YOU!

Your Contribution To the Mediums' Fund in the N. S. A. Treasury, be it large or small, will do more good than a donation to any other fund upon the books of the Association. Every medium, every speaker, and in fact every man and woman who loves the cause of Spiritualism should swell this fund with their gift. The appeal of Mrs. Longley is just and timely. If our cause is worth sustaining these dear old pioneer workers who have become invalids at their posts are worthy of our sweetest kindness and tenderest care. Let us help our helpless mediums, and prevent their dependence upon the common charity of a cold and prejudiced world. Send your contributions to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pa. SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). What Does Spiritualism Mean? Who Are These Spiritualists?

What Is Spiritualism Doing for Humanity? What More Can It Do than Push Forward the Truth of Immortality?

These Are Some of the Questions that Are Discussed from Week to Week in This Paper. Are You at all Interested in Them? If Not, Why Not?

The Phenomena are all right, but the soul of man hungers for more light, seeks the Philosophy of the Phenomena, reads the truth from the occult side. These broad fields are searched by our scientific corps of writers every week, and if you wish to keep pace with the most advanced thought, you must read and study.

Life Here and Hereafter.

"We Should Not Complain about the Lack of Harmony in the Teachings of Spirits, When We Differ Among Ourselves About Matters of Equal Importance and Equal Simplicity."

It has been said that death is only change; but in many instances we are compelled to acknowledge that the change, if there is any change whatever, is very slight indeed. The individual is transported to the other side of life with the same desires, the same ambitions, the same intelligence, and the same biased opinions that he possessed while a resident of earth. He is changed in no essential particulars. True, he has more favorable conditions, greater opportunities for moral, mental and spiritual development, but he is entirely dependent upon his own efforts for any progress in this direction. If he sees fit to take advantage of his opportunities, his progress and unfoldment should be very rapid indeed; but because he has these advantages does not justify the claim that he will derive any immediate benefits therefrom.

Many people still upon this mundane plane of life have surroundings such as would enable them to attain to great heights of wisdom and spirituality if they so desired; but in the vast majority of instances they lack the ambition and interest necessary to advancement, and consequently they prefer to remain in a state of mental inactivity. They do not desire knowledge while incarnate, and there is no probability that they will desire it immediately after transition. This class, however, nearly always has strong opinions on any subject, and generally the less knowledge they have on any given subject, the more tenaciously will they cling to their preconceived opinions concerning it.

But sooner or later they pass to the other side of life, practically unchanged. Spirits can be prejudiced against the truth as well as mortals. A spirit who, while on earth, was prejudiced in favor of any given doctrine, would continue to note facts in favor of his theory and dismiss from mind those that contradicted it. Such spirits communicate with earth. They may be perfectly honest, but they are misinformed, and have erroneous opinions which they proclaim as absolute facts. Thus if a person dies a believer in reincarnation, he will still exist as a reincarnationist for a longer or shorter period of time, according to his stubbornness, before he reaches a point where he can see the error of his ways (Probably it is needless to say that reincarnationists will make this apply to the other side as well.)

Another factor to be taken into consideration is the influence of the medium in changing the meaning intended by the spirit, and unconsciously infusing his or her influence into the communication. It has been truly stated that as water assumes the shape of the vessel in which it is placed, so does a spirit communication assume, to a certain extent, the nature and individuality of the medium through whom it is given, and this is especially true when the controlling spirit desires to communicate an idea in direct opposition to one held by the medium as an individual. As a consequence a spirit may find that in communicating his ideas through the brain of a mortal, his meaning is partially or entirely destroyed; the thoughts he desires to impress may be so changed that they seem to imply a meaning contrary to what he intended, and yet the medium be perfectly honest and conscientious.

This would naturally lead a spirit to find a medium who is favorable to the ideas he wishes to express, and consequently we are brought face to face with the fact that a medium holding tenaciously to any opinion would attract spirits holding like views. Thus a medium who denies that animals have a spirit existence would attract spirits who, perhaps, without investigation, would confirm the medium's views. This rule, however, is not invariable, for it is often the case that where the medium is not too positive in maintaining his opinions, a spirit with contrary views may find an opportunity to express them. It has been said, though, that the exception only proves the rule, which it certainly does in this instance. In this connection another cause for the lack of agreement among spirits in regard to essential doctrines may be worthy of attention, namely the work of mischievous, evil-disposed, or obsessing influences. With an apology to my friends who believe in reincarnation, I desire to introduce a little evidence on this point by A. J. Davis. He states in "The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims," page 78:

"Probably, in the entire range of modern spiritual speculations, no more philosophically romantic farce than the sweet boon of being 'reincarnated' was ever played upon human imagination by the sportive Diakka (mischievous and undeveloped spirits). They puzzle spiritual philosophers by a mixture of alarming doubts about immortality. The endless progress of the soul (say they) will end in an abyss of conglomerated annihilation. They want you returned a few times to round you up, full-orbed, in the niches of personal experience, in every possible phase of being. You say, 'yes.' Diakka immediately give you oracular teachings in rhyme and prose. So they amuse themselves, and your seriousness in their sophistries greatly enhances their mirth."

Personally, I am inclined to think that Mr. Davis has placed too much stress on the work of evil-disposed and undeveloped spirits. I believe that there are other causes that exert a greater influence—the influence of the medium, as stated before; intelligent and well-informed persons on earth often disagree about very simple matters, and would continue to do so as spirits, and lastly there is another cause that I have not yet mentioned, but which should be considered, namely, the influence of mortals on the medium.

Spirits control by impressing their thoughts upon the sensitive brain of the medium. And being sensitive to the thoughts of spirits, the medium would necessarily be susceptible to the thoughts of mortals also. Thus when the influence of the circle conflicts with that of the spirit, results are often unsatisfactory if not an utter failure. If the will of the spirit is the stronger the communication will then partake mostly of the spirit; but if, on the other hand, the influence of the circle is positive and determined, it may exert a greater influence on the medium than is possible for the spirit, and consequently we find that instead of a spirit message, the desire of the circle is reflected back again; the question on the minds of those composing the circle is answered just as they desire that it should be answered. We should not forget that man is a spirit while embodied as well as after death, and is also possessed of the same powers and attributes before death as afterward.

Taking all of the above causes into consideration we are furnished with a logical and satisfactory explanation of the many inconsistencies to be found in the teachings of spirits. Take for instance the prevalence of the reincarnation theory in France. The teachings of Allan Kardec have caused the French Spiritualists to be somewhat partial toward reincarnation, with the necessary result that they have attracted spirits who believe likewise, while a spirit holding opposite views would find it very difficult to express his opinions in a cogent manner through a medium holding strongly to this theory. When it is remembered that reincarnation is accepted by more than half the people in the world, it is to be expected that they will occasionally return and teach this doctrine when they know absolutely no more about it than before transition. As long as we send people into the great beyond who believe assumptions unsupported by data or reliable evidence, we must expect that they will return as spirits and give us unsatisfactory and erroneous teachings. Therefore there will continue to be honest differences of opinion on the spirit side of life as long as such is the case on earth.

But because this is a fact is no reason why we should condemn or question the value of all spirit communications. Because mortals differ in politics, in religion, and hold different views on every subject where there is a chance for difference of opinion, we do not affirm that life is a failure. Out of our material differences ultimate harmony will result; and likewise the differences now manifested in the teachings of spirits will result in the elimination of error and the establishment of truth. In the meantime we are taught to use our own powers of observation, and reason upon these matters, which is precisely what we need for the further development of our intellectual faculties.

Taking into consideration the manifold difficulties in the way of arriving at a definite system of philosophy and there remains no reason for complaint at the progress already attained; and, as the laws of communication are better understood this progress will become even more rapid than in the past. We should not complain about this lack of harmony in the teachings of spirits, when we differ among ourselves about matters of equal importance and equal simplicity. And by pursuing our investigations with unbiased minds, and providing proper conditions for spirits to express their opinions in a more perfect manner, we can do much toward solving many of these perplexing problems.

GEORGE B. FERRIS.

DISEASE AND REMEDIES.

Pertinent to Existing Conditions in Spiritualism.

It was gratifying to me to read the article in a late Progressive Thinker from the pen of my old friend, M. F. Hammond, of Galien, Mich. I had lost track of his whereabouts since he left South Haven, Mich, some years ago. I think it was through my efforts that he officiated as chairman of Devil's Lake camp-meeting, some few years ago, with marked ability, and giving satisfactory results to the multitudes in attendance.

But, Brother Hammond, I wish to propound a question to you and to all others who have been cognizant of the Blue Book, why did you not proclaim such facts to your auditors, and give us a chance at least to flee from the wrath to come. Brother Hammond informs us that there is scarcely a public speaker to-day upon the rostrum that does not know of the Bue Book. Thank you for so much information. Brother Hammond quotes an old axiom, "In union there is strength," and then gives a formula for a remedy to entirely obliterate all fake mediumship.

Brother Hammond's remedy is for all honest mediums to register their names and then let every association petition the legislature to prohibit the practice of mediumship unless being in possession of such registration papers. But the casual reader of The Progressive Thinker is confronted with so many free prescriptions or remedies to eradicate deception that it is difficult to decide with unerring certainty which one will do the business. Some have proposed that a qualified committee be selected, to examine all mediums, and if found qualified they could get a permit to go before the people as mediums. Now on this committee rests as grave responsibility as it did in the days of Salem witchcraft, as well as in the case of Joan of Arc.

Now for the sake of harmony, and a reconciliation, we adopt the the remedies as set forth and the prescriptions filled out by a qualified committee, and Eureka! it is complete. But to-day forces and agitations are unfolding a larger faith and higher aspirations. The discussion of one view of a question only resolves its relations to others which lie just beyond in the realm of investigation.

Infinitude of space—the circumference everywhere, and the center nowhere! In the heart of man there is a constant yearning, but resting never when a point is gained. When we attempt to harmonize the world by securing an agreement in the realm of opinion, we shall all fall in one ditch.

I am of the opinion with many others, that this agitation of late about frauds, is like any other pent-up force in nature, as necessary to fortify and give Spiritualism strength, as the counter currents of wind are necessary to fortify and aid the mightly oak of the forest to obtain a stronger hold upon life.

In conclusion I wish to refer to the conciliatory article by Mary Webb-Baker. I hope all may read it. I am not apologizing for anything false in mediumship.

Farming has been my occupation, and there never ripened a field of wheat or other grain without some smut or poor kernels, and the principle holds good with our domestic animals. Go into the forest, and we see a majestic pine or oak tree. Standing by its side is a dwarf, with seeming equal opportunities of soil, watered by the same dews and rains, and warmth of sun, and swayed by the same breeze; and why the difference?

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

Rev. Chesboro in a lecture before the First Spiritual Mission of Los Angeles, made some excellent points.

"Advocates of the old theology, which was good in its time, make the distinction of natural and supernatural; they are, therefore, forced to the conclusion, which they are compelled to teach, that the natural or seen things are produced by the supernatural or unseen, which in my youth I was told was done by miracles in a very unnatural way. This could not possibly be. While it is true that the unseen things have been unfolded into external manifestation from the great deep silence of the unseen, yet it is not true that the supernatural ever produced the natural, because the supreme principle in the science of being teaches the irrefutable fact that nothing—no thing—can produce something wholly unlike itself. If there were a supernatural it would be wholly unlike the natural, and it could produce only its kind. Therefore the unseen source of all manifested existence must be just as much a part of nature as the seen things it has produced.

"Hence the element of power by which a person is brought en rapport with the unseen world as a medium between that world and this on the plane of physical consciousness is just as natural as it is for a kitten to open its eyes after it is nine days old. The only difference is that the kitten lives in perfect accord with natural requirements, while humanity does not."

But Rev. Chesboro does not believe in the manifestations known as "materializations," and holds that the only method of holding communion with the spirit world is through and by the development of the spirit power, the sensitiveness which every human being in some degree possesses, which may be cultivated to a full realization of this communion.

The clergy of nearly all the evangelical churches, if not all, are uniting in a crusade against the iniquity of divorce, and pledge themselves until the most restrictive laws are forced through the state and national legislatures, not to perform the marriage ceremony for those who are divorced for causes not recognized by the churches! The state has assigned several causes which in the wisdom of law-makers and mankind are considered amply sufficient causes for divorce. The church has only one, and that one was assigned when the wife was owned as a slave by the husband, and the offense was a crime punishable with death.

It does place the ministers in a delicate position, after they marry a couple and pronounce them by the grace of God one until death do them part, to have them furnish an object lesson showing the falsity and absurdity of their claim. Hence they are forcing the issue on the state and clamoring for laws that will make divorce impossible for any cause not recognized by the church.

No one having the best interests of the individual, or society at heart will oppose or in any way weaken the institution of marriage. The union of man and woman in the relation of husband and wife, with all that union implies, is, if there be anything holy and sacred, the most holy and sacred, and such are the duties and obligations assumed, that this relation should not be lightly held or broken. But in this imperfect life, mistakes are made, affection is met by brutal lust; the gentleness of love by arrogance, misunderstanding and hate, and married life which should found a home as an ideal Eden, becomes the reverse.

If there is dereliction of "marital duties," "you can have a divorce," says the clergy, "and we'll marry you again," but if the husband becomes a beastly drunkard, a foul and debased creature, coming home to whip and drive his wife like a slave from the house, and year in and year out give her nothing but coarsest insolence, she must bear it, because a clergyman in the name of God has riveted the chains binding her to the beast!

When they declare in convention that they will not perform the ceremony, after the state grants a license, what do they mean? They know if they do not, the state has provided officers for this function, and those who wish can marry legally. It means that they will not until the laws are changed, making them the only authority legally able to perform the ceremony! It means a most treasonable plot to unite the state with the church in a most vital function, making one of the most prominent events in the life of the citizens a religious instead of political act!

With the lobby the church maintain at Washington, which has been aptly called the "third house," whose manager boasts of holding both Senate and House of Representatives in his hand, the lovers of a free government of the people by the people cannot be too vigilant.

There is one thing about their contention that shows plainly what an impractical lot the hundred thousand "trained" preachers are. It is solemnly declared in convention, and published as a part of the program, to work openhanded, and in every insidious art, to have the general government enact a divorce law for the nation, and also to have the states have laws in common or alike. It is a dull laymen who could not tell these over-learned ministers that the general government has no right to enact divorce laws for the states. Such matters are left for each state to decide, and the constitution is so wisely framed that changes cannot be made to suit every passing whim or adjusted to the pleasure of cranks. There is no possibility of the states enacting common divorce laws. The wider freedom of the west holds less to tradition and superstition, than the east, and will never accept the domination of the church.

A "strenuous life" may be all right, but it may become too strenuous. A strenuous life that leads away from the spiritual; which places the achievements of the sleek, strong animal over the aspirations of the spirit, is better suited for savage than civilized man.

Parson Morris, of the Colored Baptist Church of Mount Horeb, became infatuated with this strenuosity. There was ill-feeling in his church, and he had every reason to think there would be a "rough house," at his Sunday appointment. He did not have faith in prayers, or in the inviolable sanctity which hedges in the pulpit. He slipped a Bible in one hip pocket and a revolver in the other. He drew the Bible first, and pounded it on the desk, for texts to hurl at his belligerent congregation. The texts hit the mark, and as a boy's well-directed stone, stirred up a hornet's nest. The colored brother had even a rougher house than he anticipated. Then his revolver came handy. He held those who clutched at him at bay until he could make a safe retreat. It was decidedly heroic, but he was haled into court and pleaded guilty. Well the bishops of the great Christian churches in many of the most decisive councils, furnished him "strenuous" examples. They met in holy conclave armed with swords and daggers, and when argument failed, the strong hand at the sword hilt decided what incomprehensible dogma should henceforth form a part of Christian doctrine. For "strenuous" Christianity, the early Christian fathers heavily discounted the moderns.

Is this the Microbe Age? From the exploiting of the pestiferous germs, one would so conclude. Medical theories held sacred are overturned; medical practice of a few years ago made obsolete, by the invasion of germs into everything. We have a "sterilize" craze, and are looking for deadly atomies in every corner of the house, in the air, water, food. We wonder how anybody lived to grow up when the existence of these swarming hosts of deadly enemies. Instead of showing how the health may be maintained at such a high standard as to insure immunity against all disease germs, there has been a flood of "sterilizing" agents and attempt to place every one in quarantine.

The following is not exactly poetry. It rhymes, and has sense, and shows the ridiculousness of a very serious matter as presented by the sensational newspapers:

He lived in daily dread of it,
Such awful things they said of it,
It filled him with despair.
All night he lay and dreamed of it;
So very much there seemed of it
It filled the very air.

It poisoned all the food he ate,
So in a fearful mood he ate;
To drink he was afraid.
A very frugal fare he took;
The very utmost care he took
The horror to evade.

No wonder that it frightened him,
For some one had enlightened him
With pictures on the screen.
It was a fearsome sight to see—
A creepy, grewsome fright to see—
That microbe was, I ween.

And so what with the dread of it
And what the doctors said of it,
He feared to draw his breath;
And, tired of sterilizing, it
Is really not surprising it
Quite made him welcome death.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Our Angelic Teachers.

Written through the Mediumship of John J. Lucas, Belleville, Ill.

Oh, ye who say that God's good angels
Do walk no more in mortal guise,
Bearing to earth the glad evangels,
Whose notes first woke in paradise,

Ye've read of old the wondrous story
How on bright Bethlehem's starlit plains,
They sang of peace on earth and glory
To him whose love eternal reigns.

And when the mild and loving preacher
Wandered on Patmos' lonely shore,
There came to him angelic teachers
Of weird and strange prophetic lore.

Through the long line of by-gone ages
Angels have succored human needs,
And through open historic pages
Ye trace the records of their deeds.

Ye cannot see the open portals
Where angels throng the pearly gate,
Nor yet discern the bright immortals
Who daily round your pathway wait.

Ye deem that from the fields Elysian,
Their footsteps nevermore may stray,
Still angels cheer our human vision,
Though clad in robes of earthly clay.

For noble lives give certain presage
Of holy lineage and birth,
And all who bear God's blessed message
Are his true ministers to earth.

They who the cup of consolation,
To pallid lips do kindly press,
And by their gentle ministration,
The couch of pain and sickness bless,

And they who help an erring mortal,
In firmer paths to upward move,
Need not to cross the shining portal
Their mission worthily to prove.

For all who tread the path of duty,
And patient strive for others' good,
Record in lines of living beauty
Their claim divine to angelhood.

Sometimes will come within our dwelling,
These sacred visitants so fair,
Even though no prescient voice is telling
We're sheltering angels unaware.

For all too oft our eyes are holden,
And cannot pierce their dim disguise,
Till they have climbed the pathway golden
And passed the gates of Paradise.

And then our hearts with anguish broken,
Recall the buried past in vain,
The hasty word so careless spoken,
Would we could blot it out again.

'Twere better far for us to cherish
The earthly angels at our side,
Before their mortal forms shall perish
And they have crossed the swelling tide.

Though all unseen an angel tarries
With all who walk the broad green earth,
And every soul within it carries
The germ of an immortal birth,

Whose mystic cord is firmer linking
The human heart to the divine,
When all its earthly props are sinking
And all life's radiant stars decline.

And then the soul from out the sorrow,
And darkness of earth's stormy night,
Exultant hails the brighter morrow
That dawns upon its clearing sight.

Let Us Fill Our Highest Mission.

Let us be ourselves, and perfect as we know we ought to be;
Let us retrospect a moment for the wrong our neighbors see,
And before we censure others let us always look within,
For sometimes the fault is plainer 'neath our own obscuring skin.

Let us cast a little sunlight where there seems to hang a cloud;
Let us rather raise the living than to offer them a shroud;
Let us act like loving brothers and like angel sisters here
And thus fill the world with pleasure while we live within this sphere.

There are downcast hearts now breaking that to heaven make appeal;
There are those about us starving while we take our splendid meal;
There are mothers and their children who are needing clothes and bread;
Let us aid our fellows living and let Nature aid the dead.

We have need to be more earnest and uplifting with the sad;
We have need to be more thoughtful and forgiving of the bad,
For we know down deep within them, 'neath the shadow that is dark,
There exists the Great Eternal, Nature's bright evolving spark.

We have need to be more perfect, wiser; wear a beaming face;
We have need to be unfolding, and to help unfold the race.
There are diamonds bright and sparkling, far more precious than of earth,
For the loving and forgiving, in the higher spirit birth.

There is much in life to live for, much upon this earth to do;
Much to sow and much to harvest on our transmigration through.
Here to gain the earthly wisdom; here to hold, advance and grow,
Let us fill our highest mission on this earth before we go.

IN ABSENCE.

Watch her kindly, stars.
From the sweet protecting skies
Follow her with tender eyes,
Look so lovingly that she Cannot choose but think of me.
Watch her kindly, stars!

Soothe her sweetly, night.
On her eyes, o'er wearied, press
The tired lids with light caress.
Let that shadowy hand of thine
Ever in her dreams seem mine.
Soothe her sweetly, night!

Wake her gently, morn.
Let the notes of early birds
Seem like love's melodious words.
Every pleasant sound, my dear,
When she stirs from sleep, should hear.
Wake her gently, morn

Kiss her softly, winds.
Softly that she may not miss
Any sweet, accustomed bliss.
On her lips, her eyes, her face,
Till I come to take your place,
Kiss and kiss her, winds!

Mrs. N. S. Baade at Home.

We completed our spiritual work in New Orleans and returned home June 3, but ours was a sad home-coming, for we found upon arrival that the life angel had entered the home circle and and removed our loved daughter-in-law who had given birth to a son and then passed on to the higher life. The child is living and being tenderly cared for by its grandmother and aunts, who will look after its interests; while our only son, though sorrowing over the physical loss of his loved wife, is comforted with the knowledge of spirit communion. We conducted spiritual services at our parlors at 1 p. m. to a large audience, hundreds who could not gain admission remained outside.

At 2:30 another service was conducted at the Presbyterian church, by request of her parents, they being members of that organization, and as our son's wife was also a member of the same church, never having withdrawn, but during the last two years of her life had, through our guides, became convinced of the truth of spirit return and with that knowledge we hope it will be of benefit to her in spirit life, so that in time we shall receive messages from her. Two days after she passed over we received a telegram announcing the death of our brother, so that the life angel has visited us twice in one week; but while our hearts are sad and lonely, still we know our earthly loss is their spiritual gain, and we look forward to a reunion of souls in the sweet sometime. Upon such occasions as this is when the knowledge of spirit return and spirit communion comforts us, and we fully realize that every cloud has a silver lining. We shall continue in the spiritual vineyard, sowing the seeds of the higher Spiritualism broadcast, realizing there are many others who need the staff of truth to support them in time of trial, who as yet have not become convinced of the truths of Spiritualism and refuse to be comforted. Hoping the friends will send us their best thoughts at this particular time, I remain a Spiritualist yesterday, to-day and forever.

OHIO STATE ASSOCIATION.

Annual Report of the President, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, for the Fiscal Year Ending May 28, 1904.

To the Spiritualists of Ohio, Greeting:—Another year has passed; we are once more assembled in convention, to review the work of the past twelve months and to outline the labor of the year that is to come.

At the opening of this convention I congratulate you upon the outlook for our state association as well as upon the results of the year's work.

I congratulate you also upon the progress our cause has made during the year and the increase of interest that has been manifested through all parts of our state. The people are recognizing the value of the truths of Spiritualism as they never have before.

Missionary Work.

The past year has been one of active work on the part of the O. S. A. It has had three missionaries at work during the past year and other helpers. Never was there the demand for missionary work in our state that there is at the present time. I found at the beginning of the year it was very difficult to restore the confidence of our people in the state being able to assist the local societies. We have stimulated the old societies, re-instated the sleeping ones and organized new societies.

Our state has never been able to report as active work in Ohio as at the present time. I wrote to all societies where I could find a name and address; a number of letters were returned unclaimed. I have mailed "circular letters" to all societies, offering them assistance; some did not respond, others have, and to those that have co-operated with the state, we have formed a circuit and have been able to do active work at a very small expense, saving of railroad fare and other expenses.

Mrs. Anna E. Baird of Elyria, Ohio, and Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo, Ohio, assisting in the work, they have rendered our state excellent service and endeavored to awaken an interest in organization.

Wherever they have labored no one can complain of their zeal or earnestness of spirit in the discharge of their duties. Their reports to be received later will give detailed accounts of the work, also the results thereof. We are also indebted to Mr. Martin of Elyria, Ohio, and Mr. Jenny of Oberlin, Ohio for their assistance in doing missionary work. Missionary work is always an important feature of the religion of Spiritualism. It can be made a tower of strength to the O. S. A., and to Spiritualism when it is properly undertaken.

The past year has shown in a small way what may be done; I am led to believe that we can accomplish more in the future.

In order to be effective, missionary work should be continuous, as has been shown by the missionary work during the past year, with all the opposition.

I have advocated the circuit system at our state convention, also at the National convention, and this year I have had an opportunity to try the system and find that it has proven a success. Our N. S. A. president, Harrison D. Barrett, has been in favor of the plan and urged that it might be put into practice.

I found some of our local societies discouraged. Their past experiences with missionaries and missionary work had taken all they could raise for traveling expenses and to pay the missionary, and the local society holding two or three meetings a year cannot expect to have the interest in our state and National; they are the ones that cannot see the benefit in organization. It is the steady, persistent work that tells in the end.

All missionaries should seek to fill the treasury of the local societies; they should not exhaust them, but they must if they only visit them once or twice a year.

I firmly believe in missionary work and recommend more of it for the coming year, wherever possible. I urge that it be carried on in co-operation with our National. And then upon the short circuit plan a worker can be engaged for a full year by the state and instructed to devote his time to the task of building up some six or more local societies within easy distance of one another. This can be done by frequent visits and by impressing their thought upon the people, thus leading them to be as liberal in their support of Spiritualism as they once were of the Christian church. By means of the circuit we have proven the expense of traveling has been greatly reduced, the matter of compensation has been small, but it will be adjusted in time.

Any missionary can make the work self-supporting in a short time and be able to aid the state and National. This plan will not drain the Association of its resources, for the O. S. A. would only be called upon to meet small deficits.

In place of the National expending the great amount it has each year in traveling expenses for missionary work, and sending two missionaries in a place, paying a salary of one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month and all expenses, I object to the system employed by our National, and being your delegate to the N. S. A. convention, and hearing the report given by one of the missionaries, stating that the N. S. A. had expended some eighty dollars in 1903 above expenses in Ohio, I asked of the National to assist the states and allow the state officers to appoint their missionaries, they understanding the needs of the state better than a stranger, who merely goes and holds a few meetings and travels to another state.

I believe it would be of less expense if the N. S. A. would appoint one missionary in each state, where it is organized, and co-operate with the state.

I appeal to the convention for action upon this matter and earnestly recommend the adoption of this method in the missionary work of the coming year. I also recommend that more missionaries rather than less, be put into the field. I also recommend that the convention provide a missionary fund that localities may be reached where there are no local societies in existence.

Usages.

At our last N. S. A. convention the report on usages was adopted. It was one of the most important issues of the convention. Its adoption has given Spiritualism a legal standing in every state and territory of the Union and has placed all Spiritualists who are members of organizations upon an equal footing with the followers of all other denominations. I most earnestly recommend this convention to the adoption of same.

Local Societies.

I am thoroughly convinced that the welfare of our cause depends on the local society. It is the duty of this convention to devise ways and means whereby more effective work for our cause as a whole may be done.

Very few of our societies have a surplus at the close of the year, and I ask you, as delegates, to consider how the membership of these local societies may be increased and their finances strengthened.

I sincerely believe that when the people see that the O. S. A. is not always speaking for money, they will voluntarily contribute enough to meet this expense.

One thing is certain, our local societies must be sustained or our movement must go down. Fellow-delegates, I ask your considerate action upon this matter on the part of all.

We are in hopes that the coming year there will be more lyceums organized. The missionaries have organized them, wherever there was an opportunity to do so. The past year Sandusky, Ohio, has organized a lyceum and great good has been accomplished through the leaders and scholars.

If Spiritualism is to prosper in the future Spiritualists of the present must interest themselves in their children, and give them a chance to know something of the principles of Spiritualism, instead of sending them to other churches to be taught that which embitters them against the parents' knowledge of the truths of Spiritualism. Great credit is due Mr. John W. Ring for his lyceum journal has been of great assistance in the lyceum.

Mediums' Home.

I would recommend that the O. S. A. assist the N. S. A. in establishing a pension fund. In my judgment it is a far better plan than a mediums' home. The N. S. A. has a number of retired speakers and mediums drawing twelve dollars per month at the present time. I urge this plan for your consideration. The pension system is the best method.

Conclusion.

I now return unto you the office which you entrusted to me one year ago. I hope my work in a small way has done some good. The outlook for our cause is promising. Success awaits it at every turn, providing the Spiritualists of our state will see the need of co-operation and make the state organization a power for good.

I bespeak for my successor in office the support you have given me. With good will toward all and malice toward none, I hope that the O. S. A. may continue to grow in spirit and in truth. Let us all work for the betterment of our cause. With this I close my annual report and bid you God speed.

Respectfully submitted,
CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN.

Report of Mass-meetings, March, 1904.

Thinking best to hold mass-meetings throughout Ohio, we engaged our National president, Mr. Harrison D. Barrett for the month of March, holding 23 meetings during the month. The first meeting was held at Sandusky, Ohio, March 6, the next meeting at Toledo, O., on March 13; from there we went to Elyria, Wellington, Lorain, South Lorain, Cleveland and Ashtabula, Ohio.

Mrs. Anna E. Baird, Elyria, Ohio, and Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, Toledo, Ohio, rendered valuable assistance.

All meetings were well attended; while financially they were not a success, yet great good was done; it showed the people the state association was at work and certainly gave it a claim to their support; it was also educational in the highest degree, and I believe should be continued to that end.

I recommend that an appropriation be made from the general fund to form the nucleus of a missionary fund to be used during the coming year.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN.

The undersigned committee on usages recommend the adoption of the N. S. A. Ritual as a whole, which was adopted at its recent convention in Washington, but recommend the adoption of the following amendment to the same.

Amendment:

All mediums desiring to be enrolled as associate ministers of the religion of Spiritualism, shall submit to an examination at the hands of the officers of the state association, or committee appointed by the N. S. A.; this examination shall consist of strict yet reasonable tests of the character of the phenomena presented by them; upon the finding of these facts judgment shall be rendered accordingly.

The above amendment and the Ritual were unanimously adopted, and a copy of the same to be sent to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., Washington, D. C.

Report of Missionary Anna E. Baird.

Columbus, Ohio, May 28, 1904.

To the Officers and Members of the O. S..—Since my appointment as missionary of the O. S. A. I have served the following societies: Cleveland, First Spiritual Church; Elyria, Progressive Spiritual Society; Wellington, Progressive Spiritual Society; Sandusky, Psychical Research Society; Ashtabula, Psychical Research Society.

Number of meetings held during October, 1903, 10; November, 1903, 12; December, 1903, 8; January, 1904, 11; February, 1904, 10; March, 1904, 25; in which month March I assisted our National and state presidents in holding mass-meetings. Number of meetings held during April, 1904, 7; May, 1904, 5. Total meetings during year, 88; conducted individually, 63; assisted at 25.

Respectfully submitted,
ANNA E. BAIRD,
Missionary.

Report of Missionary Elizabeth Schauss

Toledo, Ohio, May 26, 1904.

The missionary work of the O. S. A. was initiated Dec. 1, 1903, at which time I was appointed missionary for Ohio. I began work at Sandusky on Dec. 6, 1903, going thence to Elyria and Cleveland on the 13th and 20th respectively. From Jan. 1 to May 22 inclusive I delivered twenty-nine lectures in my official capacity as follows. At Sandusky seven; Cleveland ten, Elyria two, Wellington two, Ashtabula six, Toledo two, besides numerous parlor meetings at different points all of which were both instructive and enjoyable.

The first year of missionary work has in every way been most pleasant to me. The respectful and intense interest of the people in the message of freedom that Spiritualist ministers and missionaries bring is inspiring to say the least. the more I work the more I appreciate the value of true honest labor; the more I revere the sacred mission decreed to me by the spirit world. The waving folds of the banner of Spiritual Truth that for fifty six years has been floating o'er the hearts and souls of a people whose recognition of religion is to abide by the Golden Rule, is spreading itself o'er all the world to-day, and the world accepts its protection gladly.

Respectfully submitted,
ELIZABETH SCHAUSS,

SPECIAL.

To the Officers and Members of the N. S. A.:

Knowing some of the needs of a more practical system in regard to ordination, christenings, marriages, missionary work, etc. I would suggest that each society be governed the same, so that there might be a universal system, no matter where we perchance to go, it would be the same; that the N. S. A. provide such by-laws; it would be much easier for the workers who are called upon to serve such societies.

We have scattered enough. Let us come together and work and know our work. Let us not be fearful that we might be like some other organization. It is not necessary to follow the creed of Methodism or Catholicism, but we might profit by their experience in doing business; they have rules and each one thinks it their duty to contribute and sustain the organization; they differ personally as to their God and how they are to be saved, but they do not argue their religion, but comply with the rules of the organization as far as progression is concerned and could do the same.

We might say that as long as they use "Roberts' Laws of Ruling" they would be imitating Methodism or Catholicism.

Now brothers and sisters, to me this is a serious question. Many have lost interest in the local Societies, state and also N. S. A., and are working with the Mental Scientists, and Theosophists; we are losing time and opportunities, fearing we may imitate some creed.

I would suggest that all applicants for ordination be laid on the table one year; that the applicants be obliged to be engaged in actual service for not less than one year, and their recommendations be from said societies, that they are of good moral character to be first considered.

Also I believe that there should be a system of missionary work. My experience has taught me that the local societies are not deriving the benefit they should. The missionary is only with them for one or two meetings and the railroad fare and other expenses, such as hall rent, music and entertainment, and allow the missionary to have door fee, what can we expect; but our local societies will say that they had a nice meeting but could not see the good they had derived from the missionary, until it is difficult for a local society to exist.

My plan would be to have the N. S. A. donate to each state society what the state has cost the N. S. A., and let each state furnish their missionary; the state knows the needs of their locals, and it saves in railroad fare enough to keep one missionary at large.

I think it is a mistake for two missionaries to travel together, for there might be four societies furnished, while there are but two.

Form a circuit, say for example, Cleveland, Sandusky, Toledo and Findlay, O., and let there be two missionaries, one giving the phenomena and the other the mental. One commence at Cleveland, the other at Findlay; that would, I believe, give better satisfaction to all concerned. Remain, yours in the cause,

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH CURRAN.

Spiritualism Vs. Spiritism.

MR. MARSH STEPS TO THE FRONT AND BOLDLY ANNOUNCES HIS POSITION. HE IS EMINENTLY ICONOCLASTIC, THINKS ALONG LINES HE HAS CONSTRUCTED FOR HIMSELF, AND STANDS FORTH BOLDLY ON UNIVERSAL LAW—NATURISM—AND THERE ASSERTS HIMSELF IN LANGUAGE THAT CANNOT BE MISUNDERSTOOD. IN HIS OPINION THERE IS A TENDENCY IN OUR RANKS TO SECTARIANISM, AND HE DEPLORES THAT FACT, AND WISHES ITS STATUS COULD BE CHANGED IN THIS RESPECT. HE THINKS THAT THE GREATER SUCCESS OF OUR CAUSE DEMANDS THAT THERE SHOULD BE DEVELOPED A CLASS OF MEDIUMS WHO WILL SCORN TO MAKE MERCHANDISE OF THEIR GIFTS.

At the last monthly meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists' League, held at 615-617 N. Clark street, the writer was requested to deliver an address on the subject, "The Better Development of Mediumship," and twenty minutes only allowed for the delivery.

Now every intelligent person knows that a subject of such vast importance to the cause of Spiritualism, requires very careful consideration in laying the foundation upon which to build.

Therefore a good share of the allotted time was thus consumed, which it is needless to repeat here, as all who were present will remember it.

I first referred to a postulate made by one of our most prominent members at a South Side social a few weeks previous. On that occasion he stated: "A person can be a good Christian and a Spiritualist at the same time." Which I know and every honest Spiritualist knows is false, and I would have liked to have time to give my reasons for saying so, and also what bearing those reasons have upon the more perfect development of mediumship. But time was up.

Thus my reason for asking you, Mr. Editor, to favor me with the requisite space in your paper. Members were allowed three minutes to discuss the address, two of whom only will I refer to, then to my subject.

One declared most positively (the one who made the postulate above referred to) that all it required to become a good Spiritualist was, "To believe in the continuity of life, and intercommunion between the two states of consciousness."

The other one stated that he manages a developing circle on the South Side, and is very successful in turning out (?) mediums, and that his modus operandi is to demand of all guides "that they shall be believers in Jesus Christ as the Savior of mankind."

Now as to that postulate, or an assumption without proof, "that a person can be a Christian and a Spiritualist at the same time." We will first analyze a Christian: One who believes in Christ and all his reputed teachings, and in the Bible as the only inspired word of the only infallible being, individual, or God in the universe.

Mark you, now! Only believe! You are not required to know anything, but only believe that eternal life is "the gift of God through his son, Jesus Christ." You must repent and be baptized, and thou shalt be saved; believe not and be damned.

Spiritists can swallow that dose; but Spiritualists never! Christians must accept the miraculous conception of Jesus, and the doctrine of vicarious atonement, also the Trinity, God the father, God the son, and God the Holy Ghost—three in one and one in three.

Spiritists of course can believe all this, but Spiritualists never. All that a Spiritist is required to do is to simply "believe in the continuity of life and spirit return," so-called.

"Christianity an infidel system,"—if Noah Webster is to be taken as authority for definitions of English terms. The term infidel means only unfaithfulness. Now, then, if a person is unfaithful to his vow, pledges or obligations, then he is certainly an infidel. You see, then, that the term has no reference to unbelief in the Bible, the Christians' God or anything else.

Now to become a member of any of the Christian churches, a person pledges or obligates himself to believe in Jesus Christ as the Savior, and to follow his teaching in all things.

But they one and all admit that they do not follow his example in all things.

If he as a personality, ever existed, he certainly taught that his followers should love one another, be truthful, just and humane in all things; not to steal, lie, cheat or hoard up treasures here upon the earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and many other things too numerous to mention here. Now Christians in general admit that they cannot do all these things under present social conditions; but we must not forget that Christians themselves have made the present social conditions just what they are by their infamous laws. They claim that this is a Christian country; if that is so, then the laws are Christian laws; present social conditions are just what they have made them.

So out of their own mouths we must condemn them. They have left a trail of blood behind them ever since they became powerful enough to do so, and why should they not? For the chief cornerstone of their whole system is a human sacrifice and shedding of blood, and it has been blood! blood!! blood!!! ever since, and they are still at it, and why not? They are naught but a great politico-social system, utterly devoid of all spirituality.

Now, as by their own admission they have violated every pledge and obligation, made to follow the example of their Lord and Master, they surely stand condemned as infidels; but they are good Spiritists, for do they not "believe in immortality and spirit return? Of course they say that the ones who return are evil spirits; the devil and his imps, if you please.

But every Spiritualist knows for a fact that life is eternal, and that the excarnate not only can, but do come back and communicate with us under proper conditions.

They know also that they are not indebted to anyone for life, for life is a natural principle, and therefore eternal. We are, therefore, now living the eternal life, and are not indebted to anyone in the universe for it, but is ours by right of inheritance. To me Spiritualism is infinitely more than to simply "believe in the continuity of life and spirit return."

It means Naturism, and comprehends the universe, including all of our social relations, conditions and environments, and the realization of this as a fact brings us into rapport with that supreme or superior force or intelligence that rules and governs the universe, and called God by the superficial students of nature. But those who dig deep into eternal truth, know that the almighty power everywhere manifest is simply the sum total of all the intelligence that exists in the universe, and yours, dear friends, and mine, is a part of it.

It is impossible to comprehend how a power or force can be capable of governing the universe or possessing the qualities of omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence on any other hypothesis.

Because of the aping of the manners and customs of the Christian churches, adopting their formalities and religious ceremonials, in the ordaining of ministers, christening of children, etc., etc., the cause of Spiritualism has been disgraced, not only in the eyes of the world, but in those dwelling in the celestial spheres. Those who pose as Spiritualists and devote their time to trying to harmonize Spiritualism with the Bible, are doing the cause more harm than all other influences combined.

How does this affect mediumship?

A young medium made the statement at a social on the South Side a few weeks ago: "I always have been a Methodist and am one now." And here let me say that the proper place for all such is in the church, for all Spiritualists know that the Christian churches hate the very name of Spiritualism for the truth it contains and teaches, because it has positively demonstrated the truth of immortality, a thing they were never able to do.

But while they cannot destroy it or bring it into disrepute with all their forces combined here in the body, they carry their hatred with them into the unseen state of consciousness; also all of their bigotry and intolerance, their craftiness for worldly gain, fame and human glorification.

They dominate the greater portion of our mediums and many others here designated as Spiritists. Thus we know whence comes the conformity to church formalities and religious ceremonials in vogue in nearly, if not all of our public meetings, circles and socials.

Do you suppose for a moment that any intelligent denizen of the celestial spheres would ever seek such conditions to communicate with us? I dare to make the statement that at least seven out of every ten of the public mediums in the country are permanently obsessed, temporarily controlled, or to some extent influenced, by those who in earth life were members of some branch of the Christian church.

Now when they, as they often do, make our media appear ridiculous or disgraceful, either in public or private, they have done an injury to the cause, if not dealt it a death blow. If it goes on the way it is going now, inside of twenty-five years, our National and state associations will become as sectarian as any of the younger Christian churches. That you may have some idea of my reason for such a conclusion, I will give you one case out of many by quoting from the Journal of Sandusky, Ohio: "Harrison D. Barrett of Boston, now filling his eleventh term as president of the National Spiritualists Association of the United States and Canada, delivered his first lecture at the Spiritual Science Hall, Sandusky, Sunday afternoon and evening. Mr. Barrett says that the National Association is composed of 21 state association, the societies in the United States numbering about 300. The estimated membership of all the organizations in the United States and Canada is 250,000. Michigan has more legally organized societies than any other state. Ohio has only 25 societies. The association is now recognized as a religious body; it has a licensed ministry, and is building churches throughout the country. Over 110 structures are now owned, and 20 of these erected during the past five years. There are at present 325 ministers. There are about 10,000 mediums."

No one can fail to see—if they analyze the above carefully, that it is a sectarian body already with its licensed ministry and church edifices, and will soon be "a closed shop," and no unordained or unlicensed workers need apply.

It has turned out just as I predicted it would when I was written to from Washington, D. C., (I was then in Boston) concerning the advisability of holding a conference in this city with reference to the organization of a National Association. I then plainly stated my reasons for opposing its organization, to Mr. Barrett's agent. I then conferred with Mr. Luther Colby, the veteran editor of the Banner of Light, and he held the same opinion as myself.

Now, where all of the old guard, those who have outgrown all forms of belief, those who rather know one thing certain, having learned it by experience, than to believe a million and have a million doubts, as every belief on any subject implies a doubt; those who take the truths of nature for their Bible, their invocations, their benedictions, their Lord's prayer, and their doxologies; those who desire something more substantial than sentimental gush and glittering generalities to feed their spiritual natures; those who are ready to assist in organizing all those who love the truth better than earthly gain, fame or even bodily existence here; those who will pledge their best interests to the task of organizing every honest and fearless medium into a harmonious band, and then give them every aid possible in developing their best spiritual gifts—not by demanding that their guides shall be believers in a mythical Jesus, but encourage those who have acquired great knowledge or power through many experiences.

The greater success of our noble cause demands that there should be developed a class of mediums who will scorn to make merchandise of their spiritual gifts. At least one good thing has been accomplished by the organization of the Chicago Spiritualists' League. IT HAS PROVEN THAT THE SPIRITUALISTIC CHAIN HAS MANY WEAK LINKS IN IT, and as no chain is stronger than its weakest link, it is then important that the weak links should be repaired. Who will assist in this noble work? It must not be delayed.

IMMORTALITY OF ANIMALS

Animals Show Intelligence—Have They Souls?

In a very interesting article in La Revue Rose Ernesto Mancini, under the somewhat singluar title of "Animal Arithmetic," advances some novel ideas regarding the ability of animals to reckon time and to count accurately.

Most savages, he says, are unable to count beyond four, or to distinguish, except confusedly, any number of persons or objects beyond four. Many animals, on the other hand, especially those that work, can and do really exceed this number.

For example: In the coal mines of Halnaut each horse is required to make thirty trips as a day's work. Some work faster than others, and each one, without exception and entirely of his own accord, goes directly to the stable after completing the thirtieth trip.

In India the elephants that act as transports and carry very heavy loads obstinately refuse to work further when the signal indicating the cessation of the day's labor has sounded.

Montaigne relates that at Suse, a seaport of Tunis, the oxen attached to a pulley for drawing water used for irrigation and the like invariably ceased work after the hundredth bucket was drawn.

A certain Mr. Tiniotieff was the happy possessor of a dog that was able to calculate with precision. One day, having been fed a large platter of chicken bones, he found twenty-six left over when his appetite was satisfied. These he proceeded to bury carefully in different places, as all dogs do. The day following he dug up and ate twenty-five, went to sleep, suddenly woke up, apparently with something on his mind, hesitated a moment, dug up his twenty-sixth bone, ate it and went to sleep, this time soundly.

Birds count well. They usually know the number of eggs they are hatching. Here is something odd: A half-tamed nightingale was always given three beetles as a sort of dessert. If he received but two he waited impatiently for the third. If the three were given to him he ate them up and flew away without waiting for more.

Monkeys and magpies are, singularly enough, bad mathematicians. Neither can count beyond four, and the men who make it their business to catch them profit by this knowledge. Five or six men march openly toward the animal and then hide themselves. A short time after four men come out into the open and go away. The animals, believing all have gone, are readily caught by those who remain.

Some animals calculate time and distinguish the days of the week with marvelous accuracy. Mancini relates the case of a Protestant minister whose congregation was shocked by a big Newfoundland dog belonging to him that came to the church each Sunday at the usual hour of the ending of the service. If there was any delay he barked loudly, and as soon as he saw his master would gambol about, bark and play, and then accompany him home. To stop this the minister locked him in the house one Sunday, much to the dog's chagrin. The following Saturday the animal disappeared from home, spent the night outside and at the accustomed hour was at the church.

A similar instance is that a dog belonging to the translator of this article, was greatly terrified by firecrackers and fire works generally, and invariably ran and hid itself in the cellar the evening of July 3, each year, and could not be induced to come out until the morning of the 5th—New York Evening Mail.

Have They Souls?

I would not be a good Spiritualist did I not differ from other equally well posted Spiritualists, and I must assume the right to think and write strictly from my own point of view, and upon the matter of animals having souls the wisest in our ranks diverge.

I think, if intelligence has anything at all to do with spirit, or towards indicating the possession of spirit, or soul, the horse, the dog, the hog, the seal, or any animal capable of receiving instruction has the same right to such possession as man.

Why should man inherit or be any more entitled to immortality than anything else in the universe when the same law or creative principle lies back of each?

Why should man carry his individuality over into futurity and leave behind other individualities?

Degree of intelligence is only the indicator of the height of unfoldment of the power of thought, the power to reason, and weigh, and measure.

For some months past I have been housed with friend, Mr. and Mrs. Yenni, who have a water spaniel that can do almost everything but talk, and he seems to understand nearly all that is said to him, and no doubt if his feet were made like hands he might express himself on paper as well as a deaf and dumb person, and is there no chance in the future life of the spirit of the deaf mute? or the dog?

Because in man is expressed the highest earthly unfoldment, and in him is reposed the management of affairs of this little sphere; because his form is perpendicular, and he has knowledge, cunning, shrewdness, ingenuity, etc., in their higher forms, has he any greater claims to a monopoly on the immortality principle in nature?

What right have we to claim that anything that has life, growth and unfoldment is not as immortal as man?

Without flowers, and birds, and music spirit life would lack the ideal for me. Without her pet cat or her pet dog or parrot many a loving woman and man would turn back towards the earth for a heaven.

My soul of souls would be lonely in a heaven composed of human souls only; no green grass or fragrant flower, no little kittens, no pretty little warbling birds.

Are these but rudiments that aid in the lessons of a beautiful life, that melt away from our desires and aspirations, and give place to higher and loftier attractions as we pass on? Then as nothing is ever lost, and all that is, ever was, are not all things eternal and immortal?

The water spaniel previously referred to will get his master's slippers for him when asked to in plain words. He also seems to know when Sunday comes, and asks his master for extra favors upon that day. Mr. Yenni is a barber and is only at home Sunday afternoons, all other days being occupied in the shop. He will tell the dog, if he wants to go for a walk with him to "ring the bell," and he pulls a cord that is attached to a bell and then jumps up on his master in a playful manner, as if to express his delight at the prospect for a walk. There are many ways in which Rex expresses real understanding and forethought as to his own welfare. But these are sufficient to illustrate the point of discrimination made by some in their wisdom (?) upon the subject of futurity or continuity of animals.

It certainly stands to reason that the same grinding, evoluting principle in Nature has as much regard for the perpetuity of one production as for another and has no choice that will favor man more than other evolved beings, and each occupies its own particular sphere or station in the machinery of life.

If there is spirit as the great force in Nature all things are of the spirit and in proportion as they are unfolded into the positions of highest use and intelligence they are endowed with that spirit they are of, and if spirit is immortal their spirit must also be immortal according to the individuality.

It is a clumsy philosophy that presumes to discriminate on the grounds of higher unfoldment who or which shall be immortal.

THE HOUSE BY THE SIDE OF THE ROAD.

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the place of their self-content;
There are souls, like stars, that dwell apart
In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where the highways never ran—
But let me live by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban—
Let me live in a house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead
And mountains of wearisome height;
That the road passes on through the long afternoon
And stretches away to the night,
But still I rejoice when the travelers rejoice
And weep with the strangers that moan,
Nor live in my house by the side of the road
Like a man twho dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by—
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish—so am I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

A PRACTICAL COURSE

FOR

Physicians and Students

of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Neuropathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to Psychic Light. Maud Lord-Drake's Book.

A Brief Review by George W. Lewis, A. M., San Francisco, Cal.

"Psychic Light," by Mrs. Maud Lord-Drake, the well-known medium, is a work of 600 pages, dealing in a masterly manner with many of the profoundest problems in psychic and scientific philosophy. It is handsomely bound, neatly printed and most ably edited. It is a work of most thrilling interest from preface to conclusion. It is as fascinating as the best written novel, even while it demonstrates the laws and phenomena of psychic philosophy with scientific precision. It is free from technicalities, and is attractive in every feature. It is intensely religious, hampered by no creed, restricted by no form of priestcraft, exemplifying the plenitude of eternal laws; and, at the same time, it is profoundly scientific.

The facts and phenomena manifested through her own mediumship, and therein recorded, are abundantly verified by witnesses still living in this country and in Europe, whose names and addresses are given. Few if any books have appeared so rich in psychic and Spiritualistic philosophy. On every page are found recorded facts and phenomena of the profoundest character, and the most absorbing interest. It is impossible to give a full review of the work within any reasonable limits of an ordinary newspaper article. It can not be expected, therefore, that in this article, I can do more than to consider one or two of the strange occurrences recorded in this wonderful and absorbing book.

The subject, "A Blasted Life," on page 407, presents some of the strangest and most marvelous facts of spirit power. Judge George W. Knox of Los Angeles, California, writes:

"I have known Mrs. Drake for 34 years, and can verify many of the instances in the book, especially, the chapter headed, "A Blasted Life." I know the circumstances related in this chapter to be true. At that time, Mrs. Drake was living on Park avenue, Chicago. Her control, Clarence, told me at that time that they, the guides, had the power to shield her, and punish any one to death, who would stand in their way, in their efforts to use her spirit power for the good of mankind; and they, likewise, had the power to reward and assist, in a material way, those who helped her in her mission.

Valleur Dupree, one of the principal characters, who figures in this chapter, both as mortal and spirit, was a man of Spanish descent, a resident of St. Louis, Missouri, and well known to many now living in St. Louis. He was tall, commanding, black-eyed, swarthy-faced, quick, bold, passionate and intellectual. He was a lawyer by profession, and possessed most of the traits of character, form, feature, physique and mental make up, that usually attract and charm the hearts of women. He became most devotedly in love with Mrs. Drake—then Miss Maud Barrock—and was subsequently engaged to her. He finally became involved in a quarrel, while in attendance at court in the northern part of the state, and was shot and killed.

Valleur Dupree, better known to the public as "Val," is, and for a long time has been, one of Mrs. Drake's most powerful controls.

After Dupree's death, Dr. S—— of St. Louis, a talented man, eminent in his profession and endowed with great wealth, but a non-believer in Spiritualism, became greatly attached to Miss Barrock. For obvious reasons the name of Dr. S—— is omitted in the book, and he is therein designated as Paul Bradt. He subsequently went to Europe, and on the 22nd day of December, 1879, he wrote from Paris to Dr. Benard, one of his most intimate friends, and enclosed in the letter a statement of most weird and marvelous import. This letter with the card on which Dupree had written his name, together with the statement was delivered to Mrs. Drake, and constitutes the foundation for this chapter. In this statement, he says:

"My life, up to the time of my arrival in St. Louis, in 1865, was uneventful. * * * The dreams of my ambition had become realized. I wanted for nothing, nor did I realize that my bachelorhood required the sympathy and love of woman to make my life more complete.

"It was in 1867, that I first met Maud Barrock, at the Art Gallery, in company with my old friend Levey. * * * While distant and reserved, she seemed to be a world of tenderness and love, and at times, all sunshine and life. The first look of those eyes so soul-speaking, has haunted me ever since. * * * Yes, I believe I loved her from the very first meeting, yet I did not tell her, unless maybe my furtive eyes, at times, spoke the words I suppressed until many months after our friendship commenced. I would have done so, * * * save for something on her part that appeared unconsciously to repel the disclosure of my love. * * * Every repeated attempt on my part to break past this barrier between us resulted in the same manner. * * * I, at last, insisted on knowing the reason. I did not ask her for her love. I told her that she must know that I loved her, and why was I not permitted to tell her of this, which to me was the richest possession of earth or heaven. * * * She paused a moment in deepest emotion, and then replied: 'Paul, do not blame me that I have tried to defer this moment, or to keep you from knowing what you now force me to disclose. A terrible power I cannot control seems to bear me onward to an end I cannot foresee. God and the angels know how precious love would be to me. But a dread, an awful fear for you, has made me try to postpone this avowal, and to avert it, even entirely, if possible.

"'Are my words mysterious to you, Paul? Then listen, and you shall fully understand. Before I ever met you, or heard of you, even, I had a lover, Valleur Dupree, whom I called Val. * * * I never really loved him, but, with my girlish fancies, proud of such a handsome lover, I imagined I did. We became engaged. He was imperious, jealous and dictatorial. I chafed under his unreasoning jealousy and dictation. * * * I told him our paths lay apart; that I could never be happy in a union with him. He became furiously angry, maddened at my decision. He then took a dreadful oath that no man living should ever hold me to his heart, or possess my love; that living or dead, he claimed me as his; neither the powers of heaven or hell should tear me away from him, and that should I ever bestow my love upon another, he would forever blast both him and me, even if he should arise from the grave to do it.

"'When, a few days after this, he was called to the northern part of the state on some professional business, he became entangled in a sudden quarrel, in the midst of which he was shot dead.'

"How I laughed at Maud's fears! I called them girlish fancies and nervous whims. I ridiculed the powers of the dead to interfere with, or control the destiny or happiness of the living. * * *

"Maud showed me, now, for the first time, a photograph of this passionate man, this unyielding lover. It was the picture of a man whose face I had occasionally seen on the streets of St. Louis. * * * I parted from Maud that evening with her benediction. Drove away from my mind all thoughts of Valleur Dupree. In this spirit, therefore, I left her and returned to my apartments. A little fire was smouldering in the grate, just sufficient to throw a pleasant glow and warmth about the room. * * * I wheeled my easy chair before the grate, and lit a cigar.

"How long I sat there, I cannot tell. When suddenly I felt a presence in the room. The door had not opened. It was self-locked, and no one but myself had the key. * * * I partly arose from my seat and turned around. The light was sufficient to easily distinguish every object in the room. In the centre, under the gas chandelier, stood a large marble top table, well littered with papers, ink, writing materials, etc., and upon the opposite side of this table, with one hand resting thereon stood a man wholly unknown to me. * * * I gazed at him in a half-dazed sort of a way. * * He said not a word, but lifting his hand from the table, he crossed both arms upon his breast, and took a few steps towards me, from the other side of the table, not, however, going around, but to my consternation advancing right through it, as if it had been invisible. When a few steps away he stopped, the light from the grate flared directly in his face—a swarthy complexion, dark and piercing eyes, with a light of lurid hate. What! Great God! It was the face of Maud's lover, Valleur Dupree. * * * Here, gazing into my eyes with fiendish hate, was a visitant from the spheres of the dead. * * *

"So, standing up again, erect and firm, I accosted the determined spirit in these words: 'Know you, Valleur Dupree, spirit of evil. I surmise what has brought you from your place in the world beyond; but let me tell you at once that your jealous hate and wicked persecution can never tear Maud away from my love. Were you in a mortal body, I would defy your hate to come between us and our happiness; but dead and belonging to the world of spirits, you have no part to further concern yourself with the affairs of mortals. Go back to the realms from which you came, and leave the world of flesh to its own pursuits.'

"With mocking laugh he replied: 'Fool, you are rushing against your fate, and to your own destruction. Maud is mine, by her own sacred pledge, from which I have never, and shall never release her. She belongs to me. In a mad passion she bade me leave her, arousing the ugly devil in my nature. I quit her sight to carry in my heart a burning hell. 'Twas in this mood, caused by her, that I met the untimely death that hurled my unbidden spirit into an unwelcome realm. * * * A power that you know not of, I possess—a power to control your destiny, a power to thwart your every plan and purpose, and to ruin or upbuild. I came not to ruin you, but to upbuild and save. You must relinquish Maud. You must abandon her. She is mine. I swore it in my body. I swear it again in the never-ending world of spirit. Bid her farewell forever. Swear this to me, and I will guide you into fortune and fame, beyond your wildest dreams. Laugh not at my promises, for by a law that feeble man knows not of, the unseen intelligences have it in their power to shape man's fortune, his fame and happiness according to their own superior wills.

"'Ask me not why this is so, but know that it is a great truth, and that I, Valleur Dupree, can make you or thwart and ruin you. Do you agree to my proposal, or will you rush headlong to your own destruction, and destroy her life as well?'

"'Valleur Dupree,' I said, 'I defy you and your infernal powers! Either in hell or on earth, I oppose my will, and my purpose to yours. And in this contest I invoke the aid of all that is true and good against you and all that is bad. Go hence to the world where you belong.'

"'Mistaken man!' he replied, 'Be it as you wish! Yet, ere I go, I will leave you a token of the offer I have made. In the light of to-morrow's sun, you may say that this is all a wild dream. But that you may remember the demand that I have made is a reality on which shall hinge your destiny, I leave you this tangible evidence of my wish and will.'

"Here he bent over the table. I saw him use no pen. He apparently picked up one of my blank cards, on which was my monogram, and then dropped it. It was the act of but a moment. Yet, when it fell from his hand I saw a written message with a signature. The falling card rattled upon the table as it fell, while the form of my visitant dissolved into air before my eyes. I reached for the card he had held, the ink was not yet dry. Upon it were the following words: 'Be it as you will. Remember. Valleur Dupree.'"

Following this remarkable occurrence Maud was taken suddenly and alarmingly ill. No medical treatment seemed to relieve her. Dr. S——, or as he is called Paul Bradt, became reckless in speculation. The bulk of his fortune began rapidly to disappear. All of his investments yielded him only a loss in return. His fortune vanished. He was soon reduced from affluence to penury. And swift upon the heels of this one species of ill luck succeeded another. Some four or five of his patients belonging to the best families in St. Louis died. He was unable to account for it. The usual remedies were applied but with no success. He was accused of murdering his patients. Indictment, prosecution and conviction followed. He was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary. He was subsequently pardoned through the efforts of some influential friends. But as he stepped from the prison, and walked upon the streets, he was pointed out as convicted felon. He was shunned by the rich and poor, by former friend and foe. He ran the downward road to drink and dissipation. All that remained to him was "A Blasted Life." He could stand it no longer, and resolved to take his own life. In his letter to his old friend, Dr. Benard, he said, "I had taken the few mementoes and letters received from Maud and placed them on a table before me. Inadvertently my eye rested on a card in the midst of these mementoes. It bore the inscription, 'Be it as you wish. Remember. Valleur Dupree.'"

* * * "He threatened to blast my life, my fortune, and to bring me to ruin. * * * Fool that I had been, that I have not seen your hand, Valleur, in all this work of destruction. Even now I was about to complete it by giving up my life. What terrible, what awful power is this that enables you to shape and to control our destiny? Do with me as you will. I am powerless against you. I have given up Maud. Is not your awful rage yet glutted? Take your hand off me, and I will go far away, where I shall never see her more. * * * I was startled to hear a voice make answer: 'You now know our controlling power. Yet, I would not take thy life. Keep it. You have now promised. You shall how know that our power to upbuild is equal to our power to blast and destroy.' I looked upward at the swarthy face of Valleur Dupree, but in a minute it had faded into a cloud of mist, which, in its turn, vanished and was gone. * * * I can not tell you how changed I was, when I arose from that table. The intended farewell letter to Maud announcing my proposed death was changed to announce my departure for Europe. I told her now of both interviews with Valleur Dupree, and sent her the card. I showed her that my downfall, my ruin, were the result of Valleur's work. I showed her, too, how idle it was to further contend against his will. I informed her of my final purpose to go away from her forever. I told her of my renewed ambition, how I hoped to regain my former good repute, and of my determination to seek a foreign land, for the renewal and upbuilding of my career."

He went to Europe—to France—where, in Paris, he soon arose in his profession. There, too, in brief, he gained honor, fame and wealth. He more than regained his former influence, honor, wealth and prestige.

These strange occurrences are recorded at length in the chapter of Psychic Light headed, "A Blasted Life," and are fully known to men and women still living in St. Louis, Mo., Los Angeles, Cal., and Paris, France. These facts present to every philosopher and Spiritualist, a problem of the deepest and most absorbing interest. Does the power claimed by Valleur exist in the hands of decarnate beings?

In the light of science and sound philosophy can decarnate beings wield such potent influence for weal or woe over the destinies of men on earth? Are these assertions of Valleur Dupree founded on facts, or can they be minimized or denied? It must be accepted as a fact, that the transition from this to the realm beyond, through the change called death, works no marvelous change in the mental, or spiritual characteristic of the departed. The departed picks up the trend of life there where it leaves off here. It carries into the world beyond its likes and dislikes, its passions and appetites, its revenge and its benedictions, from which it can alone escape by the process of growth and development.

It is not strange, then, that Valleur should have returned with such malignant hate and vengeance.

As to the power claimed by him over the destinies of men, it is but the enunciation of a principle entertained and believed by men in all ages, and among all nations in the world's history. It lies at the foundation of all mythology and all religion. It runs through the Illiad and Odyssey of Homer. It lies at the foundation of Greek mythology and Greek religion. It forms the central idea of the immortal tragedies of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides. In recognition of this principle, Agamemnon, the leader of the Grecian hosts against unhappy Illium, sacrificed his daughter, Iphiginea, to appease the wrath of a goddess—a spirit, who, by adverse winds had detained the Argive fleet at Aulis. It was in recognition of this principle, that, when Orestes slew his mother, Clytaemnestra and her paramour, Aegisthus, for the murder of his father, Agamemnon, that the Erinnyes and the Eumenides, the avenging spirits who held the power of life and death, of prosperity and ruin over mortals drove him insane. The same principle underlies the Semetic and Christian mythology, the Hebrew and Christian religion. God, the Hebrew decarnate being, holding communication with the Israelites, said: "To me belongeth vengeance and recompense" (Deut. 32:35) In like manner God—Elohim, the decarnate spirit—struck Uzzah dead, because he touched the ark (II. Sam., 6:7).

The word Elohim is the plural of the Hebrew word Eloha, meaning the strong, the powerful, the mighty one. And the plural Elohim is translated God, gods, deities, angels, spirits.

For instance when Saul attended a seance at Endor at night, although some of the scientists to whom Dr. Funk of New York, submitted the incident concerning Dr. Beecher and the widow's mite seemed to disapprove of manifestations in the dark, the medium said: "I see Elohim—spirits—ascending out of the earth."—I. Sam. 28:12. Job, also, encountered the same power that was claimed by Valleur Dupree.

So, too, St. Paul in affirming that "vengeance and recompense" belonging to the decarnate God, said: "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."—Heb. 10:31.

Is entirely immaterial whether ancient mythology, the religions of the world, the writings of Homer, the Greek tragedies, the Hebrew Bible or the Christian New Testament be true or false as far as this question is concerned.

The fact remains, that in all ages, and among all peoples of the earth there has been and still is, a deep-seated conviction, a fundamental belief, that decarnate spirits have the power to control the destinies of man for good or evil. And this seems to be corroborated, not only in the life history of Dr. S——, but in the deeper facts of human life. In earth life, the fact exists, that many a man has risen to honor, power, fame and fortune through the influence of friends or fellow being. And it is equally true, that millions of our race have been driven to poverty, degradation and ruin with naught remaining, but a blasted life, through the baneful influence of man. And if we hold the power of influence over our fellow man, much more have decarnate beings power over us. But, whatever be the ultimate conclusion, or final deduction this chapter of "Psychic Light" brings us face to face with one of the profoundest problems in physical or psychic philosophy.

A Few of the Many Testimonials.

CHICAGO, January 10, 1901.

TO WHOM PRESENTED:

This is to certify that my sister, Miss Louise Schoepf, of Highland Falls, New York, was injured three years ago by a blow on the back of the head, which caused her great pain and suffering and resulted in hemorrhages from the nose and mouth which baffled the skill of a number of the leading physicians, who failed to give her relief. Having heard of the healing power of J. W. McAllister, East 63rd Street, I consulted him and he gave her absent treatment which resulted in her hemorrhages ceasing at once. It has been about eight months since her last hemorrhage and from this remarkable cure I consider him a most able healer. Very respectfully,

J. B. SCHOEPF.

WOODLAND PARK, COL., May 8, 1890.

Your welcome letter received yesterday and was very glad indeed to see your hand writing once more. Well, Mary has seemed to be some better now for about ten weeks. That is, she has not suffered so much, but on Monday night following the Sunday evening when you say the faith doctor began to treat her she was so free from pain she did not have to take any morphine and slept well all night. Then it stormed, and she always feels worse when it storms. Then on Thursday she got up to dinner and did not go to bed again until eight o'clock that evening, and felt better than she had for months; could straighten up and her back did not hurt and was not in pain anywhere. Said she thought to herself that now she was going to get well. Then it stormed again and she had not felt as well until this a. m. She is up, sitting at the south window in the sun, yet she does not feel as well as she did last Thursday. Mary says she don't know of course what the man's belief is, but if he thinks he can cure her she will try hard to believe he can do it.

The above is an exact copy of a letter received from my sister regarding the other sister's illness. She had been given up by doctors who stated her case hopeless. She has since been treated by J. W. McAllister and when last heard from was as well as the average woman of her age, which is 56 years. J. F. BROWNING.

J. F. BROWNING, personally known to me, makes oath to the above statements as being true. Witness my hand and notary seal this 3d day of June, 1900. PETER NILAND,

CHICAGO, ILL., June 21, 1900.

TO WHOM PRESENTED:

This is to certify that for four consecutive weeks prior to being treated by J. W. McAllister, of East 63rd Street, Chicago, Ill., I was unable to walk about for even a half hour at a time without great suffering from pain in my lower limbs and feet. I could not wear my shoes, having been more or less distressed from varicose veins on my lower limbs and feet, with discoloration of the surface. Great soreness and swelling for a period of eight years. No one who knows of my condition fails to express their surprise that I could walk at all. After many and continuous efforts to obtain relief, I am most happy to testify that after four weeks' treatment, mostly absent treatment, I can wear my shoes with comfort and walk from two to four miles per day with ease. Respectfully,

BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

An Orthodox Explanation of the Death of Judas.

The Christian Standard, a religious paper published weekly, in Cincinnati, in the interest of the Campbellite or Risciple or Church of Christ, as the de-Disciple or Church of Christ, as the department in it devoted to "Biblical Criticism" which is conducted by Rev. J. W. McGarvey. In its issue of June 11, Brother McGarvey is called upon to explain the contradictory scriptural statements in regard to the manner of the death of Judas. And it is a "beaut;" in fact I may say it is a "daisy" among explanation "daisies." Really, it "takes the cake" if not the entire bakery. It would take the prize at any World's Parliament of Bible Commentators. Get in a proper frame of mind, dear reader, to grasp it, for I am going to introduce it without further ceremony. Here it is:

"Another brother asks me to explain the evident contradiction as to the manner of the death of Judas, as found in Matt. xxvii:5 and Acts 1:18. There is no contradiction. Luke says that Judas fell headlong and burst asunder, while Matthew says that he hanged himself. If he had not hanged himself, he would not have burst asunder when he fell. I have never heard of a man bursting wide open because he fell from stumping his toe; but if a man were to hang himself in a hot climate, and remain hanging for a day or two, and then fall, he would be almost certain to burst asunder. So the two accounts are not contradictory, but the one explains the other."

So it appears from this explanation that Judas hanged himself first, before he fell "headlong" and "busted his self." If he fell "headlong" after performing the hanging act, he must have hanged himself by his feet, with his head down. Of course, he could not have fallen and "busted" first, and then hanged himself, for we cannot conceive of him running around with his entrails dragging on the ground, rope in hand, looking for the nearest limb on which to do the strangling act. Any person of ordinary, common sense would hesitate a long time before suspending the functions of his bowels preparatory to a general suspension, an indefinite suspension of all the functions of all the organs in the body, by hanging. No, if Judas did this thing at all, he must have suspended himself first, before his suspenders, pants, etc., "busted," and his bowels "gushed out." This is the only way to reconcile the contradictory Bible statements, and shows Bro. McGarvey to be a most astute commentator.

But, seriously now, is there an atom of common sense in Bro. McGarvey's exposition of this problem? Does he really have any confidence in it himself? The abdominal cavity may be enormously distended in life, without rupture, as any physician well knows, and it is not likely that a fall after fatal strangulation, of ten, or a hundred feet, could produce this result.

About fifteen years ago, a Methodist preacher died in Fort Wayne. In order to settle a question concerning his life insurance, it became necessary to make a post-burial examination. The body was exhumed ninety days after interment, and the examination conducted at the grave. I venture the assertion that even at this time, it could have been thrown over Niagara, upon the rocks neath, without rupturing the abdominal walls, so strong were they. It may be said in reply to this, that thousands of people are walking the streets with rupture, wearing trusses to keep the bowels within the abdominal cavity, but the two conditions are not to be considered together at all. They are not parallel in any sense. A rupture or hernia takes place through the inguinal rings and is never external—never breaks through the skin.

"And he (Judas) cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself."—Matthew xxvii:5.

"Now this man (Judas) purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out."—Acts 1:18.

Now, it is difficult for me to believe that Judas' abdomen was such a "gusher" as is here represented. The height from which he fell is not stated, nor the number of days he hung there before he fell, nor how he came to fall at all, whether the rope broke, or whether somebody cut it simply to see him turn a somersault (so as to fall "headlong") and his bowels "gush out" from such headlong fall. If it was "in a hot climate," whoever cut him down, must have been (like Bro. McGarvey) almost certain" to see him "burst asunder" by the fall.

Bro. McGarvey it is observed, is of the opinion that only "a day or two" of decomposition was sufficient to render Judas' abdomen inclined to "burst asunder" by the fall, but he does not depose whether the susceptibility to such a result would be more marked by a fall head-first ("headlong") or foot-first.

But it will be observed by the reader that the mode and manner of Judas' death is not the only problem to solve in the conflicting Bible statements in relation thereto. We must reconcile if possible, the difference thereof, as to the disposition Judas made of the "pieces of silver." In one it is stated that he "cast them down in the temple," and in the other, he "purchased a field with them." Which, if either, is correct? Certainly both cannot be. It will tax Bro. McGarvey's ingenuity to the utmost to dispose of this discrepancy. He cannot do it any more successfully than he has harmonized the other statements noted. His attempt at doing so has only added stupidity to nonsense.

REMUNERATION.

"The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire."

To the Editor:—In your issue of May 7, No. 754, I see a protest by Mary A. Ingalls of Antwerp, N. Y., against my recent article on healers, etc.—that they should render their services without making specific charges. She quotes "The laborer is worthy of his hire." I do not dispute it; we maintain that they should be suitably rewarded by free-will offerings.

I write, as a rule, under inspiration. In that article a great truth was expressed, one upon which so much depends to bring about a truly healthy, prosperous, happier state for all humanity. As workers in the Lord's vineyard for humanity's upliftment, it behooves us to learn divinely established rules and to work in accord with them, not contrary thereto, in order to truly render our parts in this beneficial work.

I am well aware from quite a number of years' experience personally, that free will offerings, as the world's ways are, as yet, are not sufficient to support even one person, saying nothing of a family; but I also know that to keep on in our efforts to do good and serve others brings finally its full reward and keeps us in more intimate rapport with the All-Life and thus enhances our individual progression.

Dear Sister Ingalls, you are laboring under a mistake if you class me with the wealthy of earth. I have never worked for or even craved earth's wealth. My one strong desire has been and is for wisdom and truth. Through privations I have learned true appreciation of even small things and small favors. I learned causes and sequences by earnest effort to know whys and wherefores of all things that were perforce, parts of my experiences. I have learned that life's true object is to be useful in humanity's welfare, and that the law of compensation is just. All our services are sometime and somewhere fully rewarded in life's unending march. You cite Brother Francis as being a success and that he could not be if he depended on free-will offerings; but his work is on strictly business lines; moreover he succeeds because of his clear insight of human nature and needs. Others in the same business of sending out life's lessons from a printing plant, have failed because they could not keep in the vibratory ratios with the people. Even so is it with the medium's you mention that are now dependent upon public charity. They would not be in such straits had they been students of life's problems and of their own selfhood and its vibratory connections and correspondences. They they would have beheld and avoided dangers. I have studied much on these lines and especially mediums. They—that is most mediums—need to do physical labor to balance their life forces by change of vibration.

To be continuously active in the practice of mediumship or healing is such a sameness of vibratory activity that there is a constant draft on the organism. The mechanism cannot generate and imbibe the requisite quantities and qualities of magnetism and electricities used in such services. When more is given off than can be generated in the system or indrawn from extraneous sources, then the equilibrium is disturbed and the results are before us in sad object lessons.

I for one, so far as my observations and experiences have aided me, would say the number of healers and well-equipped mediums for public services, is comparatively small. The majority should practice their gifts more in private and for self-improvement.

By being equipped for public and general service as healers and mediums I mean those whose psychic and physical or physiological vibratory relations are such that they can generate, also draw in these supplies of magnetism and electricities as fast as they give them out, then there is success and no harm to anyone.

Yours for truth and humanity's welfare. MRS. M. KLEIN.

Interesting Experience.

Mrs. Edmund Robbins gives the following interesting personal experience:

"Physical and spiritual clairvoyance, automatic telegraphing and writing has been mine for years, at different periods, since childhood, but never at my command. I have never been able to 'train myself to mediumship.' One of my experiences—I sat at the bedside of a loved sister who was sick. Across the room—and it was a large room—I saw a white burial casket, without cover, placed on a white rug in front of the piano. I went to the object, placed my foot upon it. My foot rested on the white satin and lace of the casket lining without destroying an outline. I examined the quality of satin and pattern of lace. While I could not feel any substance with foot or fingers, I saw the plainer the closer I bent over the object. This illusion was presented many, many times during the period of ten months or during the time my sister lay sick, and always on a white rug in front of the piano—her piano. I told nurse and friends; no one could see anything but myself. The friends and I felt worried because the only member of the family for whom a white burial casket would be used, in case of transition, was a lovely child, our Lilian. The third day after the transition of my dearly loved sister, I entered her room and there stood the conductor of funeral services laying a white rug in front of the piano, and his attendants waiting to place a white velvet-covered casket thereon. My sister's transition was in October, 1896.

"Is this power, be it hereditary or not, to throw forth 'shadows of coming events,' the result of patterning our brains with pictures of past and present events, as it is said, 'All your past, every scene of it, is impressed in the curious little brain particles that lie in their various cells.'

"My experiences in clairvoyance are as unlike my experiences in second sight as transmitted thoughts are unlike materialized thoughts—words. I have tried to train this power into so-called mediumship under the instructions of W. J. Colville and many others, without result. Psychic phenomena come and go in my life without any control."

Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. Jerusalem From a Sunday-School Teacher's Standpoint.

A correspondent of an Illinois daily, who accompanied the late World's Sunday-School Convention to Jerusalem, in his "Farewell to Jerusalem," gives a gloomy picture of the Holy City and its people, ascribing all their woes to the government under which the people live. Let us quote him verbatim, for he wrote as an American, and a member of that Sunday-School Convention, and a believer in all the absurdities Catholic monks have told of the ancient glories of Palestine. We quote:

"Except for the general outline of the country, its hills and valleys, rocks and streams, and the customs of the people which will remain the same, this is not the same Palestine as existed during the time of David or Christ. Where once were prosperous cities, there are now but heaps of ruins; where once the hillsides were covered with vineyards and olive orchards, now the vineyards are vanished and the earth has been washed away down into the valleys, leaving the rocks standing out like the bones of some great monster bleaching in the sun. The people themselves were also different in those days. Then they were industrious and energetic, with some idea of cleanliness and morality, but to-day they are a nation of beggars, with little or no regard for decency."

This is clearly a faithful picture of Palestine as the American Christian traveler saw it; and its past is what Catholic monks wrote of it; but he who is well read up in the history of that country finds nothing to boast of in its past. If there was ever a period of prosperity there, it antedates its invasion by the marauders under Joshua, who, if Bible narratives can be trusted, found the country filled with cities and a prosperous people, and he left it in desolation and ruin, "leaving nothing alive that breathed." See chapters x and xi of Joshua:

"Every man they smote with the edge of the sword, until they had destroyed them, neither left they any to breathe. * * * So Joshua took all that land, the hills, and all the south country, and all the land of Goshen and the valley and the plain, and the mountain of Israel, and the valley of the same; * * * and all their kings he took, and smote them, and slew them. Joshua made war a long time with all those kings. There was not a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save the Hivites the inhabitants of Gibeon; all others they took in battle."

The sites of many of those desolated cities have been determined by recent explorers; but there is no evidence that the country ever regained its old-time glory. The descriptions of Solomon's wealth and prosperity carry on their face evidences that they are fictions, so far as relates to a people known as Jews. What is told of them is evidently compiled from Phoenician and Babylonian records and related of other peoples than the Jews. The ancient temples of Jerusalem never existed—at least long years of arduous labor, by the Palestine Exploration Fund, could find no traces of them, and they abandoned the search, claiming they were possibly covered by the Mosque of Omar and its Court, and until leave can be gained from the Turkish government to make research under them, further explorations must be abandoned. "A poor excuse is better than none," says the proverb.

And as to the people of Jerusalem this correspondent describes them as "Itinerant shop-keepers whose stock in trade consists of a few dozen strings of multi-colored beads said to contain marvelous properties of warding off the evil eye; and half-naked shabby children with sore eyes, their hands extended in a long, lingering appeal for baksheesh."

Food From Electricity.

Readers of The Progressive Thinker are of that class of thinking people who are interested in all matters that indicate advancement in matters pertaining to the welfare of humanity physically, mentally, socially and spiritually.

Spiritual development may be more intimately associated with physical well-being than many, perhaps, may suppose; and an advance along the line of physical welfare may herald, or be co-operatively conjoined with, development in moral, intellectual and spiritual attainments.

A hint of this fact may be found in the following account which is taken from Pit and Post, a magazine of the markets, published in Chicago. It will be found worthy of study by our philosophic Spiritualists, who will find it a subject full of marvels. The article is headed "Food From Electricity." We quote in full:

Among the most remarkale claims of this age of marvels is one contained in the specifications of James N. Alsop of Owensboro, Kentucky, covering his invention of a novel process for the purification and enrichment of flours. An enterprising contemporary, "Modern Miller" of St. Louis, in a recent issue printed the details of the new patent, and at least one particular is of importance and novelty such as to warrant brief mention in this magazine.

Mr. Alsop's patent is supposed to be basic as to the use of atmospheric products for the treatment of flour, though this claim is certain to require tedious litigation for its complete establishment, since other inventors of various devices have succeeded in producing several useful chemicals from the air by electrical energy. The striking claim, however, is that the Alsop process "causes a reduction in the carbohydrate (starch) contents of flour treated by it, and an increase in the quality of the protein (gluten, etc.) contents thereof." And this is of startling interest, if it be true, because it has been believed hitherto that the elaboration of atmospheric nitrogen could be brought about only by the activity of living organisms. Absolutely in contradiction of this belief stands the assertion of the Kentucky inventor that he is able by his process to add nitrogen to starch, and produce the muscle and nerve-making proteids, from which the thought and energy of the universe seem to be derived.

A certain amount of skepticism as to this remarkable claim would seem to be valid, notwithstanding the analyses printed in the specifications, which seem to show an increase of nearly 12 per cent in proteid content, and a corresponding decrease of 12 per cent in starch content, the slight difference, 0.14 per cent, being accounted for by a decrease in the quantity of ash shown in the flour after treatment. Analyses attributed to a chemist of the Columbian University, Washington, compare as follows:

	Before Alsop Treatment.	After Alsop Treatment
Water	9.84	10.13
Starch	74.11	62.24
Proteid	14.99	26.71
Ash	0.44	0.30
Fat	0.62	0.62
	100.00	100.00

Another analysis of flours before and after treatment, attributed to the professor and assistant professor of physics at Princeton University, showed an increase of ultimate nitrogen per gramme of flour from 0.054 grammes to 0.075 grammes per gramme of flour.

Mr. Alsop takes no uncertain position in the matter, but asserts that there is "chemical combination" of nitrogen with the flour in process of treatment, and that this chemical action results directly from the production of "ion-ized" nitrogen by the electric arc.

Such in brief is the remarkable claim of this inventor. It calls for no extended argument to show that the complete proof of his theory, if it shall be forthcoming, will open up an endless vista of possibilities.

Once it is demonstrated beyond question that the most elementary of foodstuffs and the cheapest can be treated by a simple continuous process, and converted at a trifling cost into one of the complex organic substances, it would seem as if the "food question" had been settled forever. Not only that, but the question of civilization too, since culture is essentially a matter of brain feeding, or in one sentence, a matter of cheap, edible nitrogen. Rice may have produced a few great metaphysicians, but nothing to compare with the physicists, mathematicians, and organizers of the wheat and meat-eating races. But rice with 10 per cent of protein due to electrical treatment would be a different breadstuff, and would produce a different kind of civilization in the countries where it is the staff of life.

The matter sounds almost whimsical at this stage; but so did the earliest talk about telephony and submarine telegraphy, not to recall the very recent achievements of Mr. Marconi and De Forrest. We can only hope that Mr. Alsop can fully prove all his claims, and make his process a commercial success. Food by electricity will then be among the staples of our dietary, and a new source of wealth.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

Dr. Isaac K. Funk, the eminent author, divine, and publisher, thus unqualifiedly endorses the Arcana of Spiritualism:

"The more I read the Arcana of Spiritualism the more I admire it. It is a book to be studied. It is an admirable presentation of what seems to be the most correct view of psychic phenomena."

Progressive Politicians.

For the first time in the history of Illinois, one of its two larger parties has gone on record as favoring woman's enfranchisement. The Democratic convention passed without opposition the following:

"Whereas, Illinois women are an important part of the citizenship of the state, bearing and rearing its children, obeying its laws and paying its taxes, we believe that not only these duties of citizenship but the privileges as well, should be exercised by them, and recommend that our next legislature extend to our women further suffrage rights."

This same convention nominated for trustee of the state university, Mrs. Hannah G. Solomon of Chicago. Mrs. Solomon is an active member of Chicago Woman's Club and Political Equality League, and is president of the National Jewish Women's Council.

The Invisible Life.

B. F. Underwood was called upon to speak at the funeral of an old and well-known citizen of Quincy, Ill., Adam Christ. The assembly was made up of family and friends of various religious beliefs, orthodox and heterodox. Mr. Underwood's concluding remarks as reported, were as follows:

Adam Christ's religion was of that practical kind which shows itself in regarding his fellow-beings as his equals, as possessing natural rights, and entitled to equal opportunities in the social system; in being just in his dealings and helpful to those in need; in being true to his family, friends and country; in adding to the world's wealth by honest labor and making the earth brighter and better for his having lived.

Although death has removed him from us as a personality, he lives in the influence of his character and conduct in all who knew him, and this influence will continue, as his psychical contribution to humanity, as long as the race shall endure; for our acts influence not only those we have known, but through them multitudes we have not known, and through all future generations.

We do not deny ourselves the hope which is so general that the life which disappears here reappears in some form and under conditions beyond our present vision. Man is the product of an evolution which has been going on for inconceivable periods of time. It is not strange that so many refuse to believe that man, the highest outcome of this process of development, is to be blotted out of existence. It is our privilege to look at this process as one which has supplementary significance in an invisible order in which those disappearing from this earthly stage, continue as progressive beings with, we may believe, greater powers in a larger life.

They who take this view will contemplate our departed brother as having passed through a transition from this visible world to another which, though invisible to us here and now, is just as real and just as natural as is this world of physical birth, growth and decay; of vanishing forms, of uncompleted development, and of those desires, hopes and aspirations, the explanation of which is sought in the conception of a post mortem state of being upon which we enter when we "shuffle off this mortal coil."

At the grave, Mr. Underwood said:

In this silent city of the dead, we now commit the body of our departed brother to Mother Earth. Suns will rise and set, moons will wax and wane, and all the sweet influences of blossoming trees and fragrant flowers, of summer's golden days and night's jeweled heavens, of songs of birds, and all the myriad sounds of Nature—these will be with our dead. Green be the turf above his tomb. The spirit of the departed will be with his surviving friends as a peaceful memory of happy days now gone, and as an incentive to earnest and honest living.

Bavaria's Demented King.

King Otto of Bavaria, has been a captive at the chateau of Furstenried for more than a quarter of a century. His uncle, Prince Leopold, the regent, is an octogenarian, who though urged by Kaiser William and other sovereigns of the German states to proclaim himself king, persistently refuses.

Otto at the age of twenty-one fell deeply in love with the young Countess L. At a memorable picnic on the shore of the Tegern Sea the couple wandered away and spent an afternoon picking strawberries. His father, the king, punished him by sending him off to Munich, while the girl was at once placed by her parents in a convent, where she remains to this day. Otto threw himself into every kind of dissipation. After four years his condition became such that he was declared a lunatic. In his confinement, when least troublesome and most tractable, he spends hours in hunting for strawberries, enormous quantities of which are grown for his sake.

When last year the Countess L. lay for several days at the point of death, although no one outside the convent walls was aware even that she was ill, he apparently became cognizant of the fact. He sobbed, wailed, screamed for hours together and refused food. On the fourth day his attendants found him in the morning with tears running down his cheeks, quiet and seemingly happy, repeating "She has had a better night; she is out of danger," as he gazed upon the contents of a little silver box, holding a few dried strawberries, which is his greatest treasure.

It was only afterward that his physicians heard of the Countess' illness. But how the King could have learnt of it, and of her passing out of danger into convalescence remains a mystery.

The above narrative is abridged from an article in the Washington Post of June 19, written by an "Ex-Attache." If the writer had had experience in spirit phenomena, would he have regarded such telepathic communication between two lovers as a "mystery"?

Spiritualists in Olden Time.

"'Tis true, 'tis certain; man though dead, retains
Part of himself; the mortal mind remains;
The form subsists without the body's aid,
Aerial semblance, and an empty shade!
This night my friend, so late in battle lost,
Stood at my side, a pensive, plaintive ghost;
E'en now familiar, as in life, he came,
Alas! how different! yet how like the same."

Thus Pope's rendition of Homer's Iliad, Book xxiii, lines 122 to 129. Homer is generally reputed to have lived and wrote some 900 years before the Christian era. Some critics have found indications of his living and having written so late as the 8th century of our era; but we apprehend the passages indicating such late date were interpolations of monkish copyists.

If the Iliad was written at the earlier date, with the above quotation, then Spiritualism as now taught, was believed by the author. This cannot be controverted.

It was the shade of Patroclus who appeared to Achilles, while the funeral rites were being prepared. 'Twas then

"When lo! the shades before his closing eyes,
Of sad Patroclus rose, or seemed to rise;
In the same robe he living wore, he came;
In stature, voice, and pleasing look, the same."

No medium of modern times has written or spoken more forcibly of the "immortal shade" than did this reputed pagan author. We challenge Bible readers to find any passage in the Old Testament which approaches this in positiveness of continued life.

A VOICE BEYOND THE GRAVE.

Warns a Chicago Woman of Approaching Blood Poisoning and Enables Her to Save Her Son's Arm From Amputation Even After a Clinic of Surgeons Made an X-Ray Examination and Insisted There Was No Danger—How a Promise Made Before Death Was Fulfilled After Death—Cold Facts for Thinking People.

Why believe without question stories of the supernatural said to have happened in some far distant foreign land nineteen centuries ago and refuse to believe stories of equally remarkable events that occur in our own native land and at the present day? Especially where there are living creditable witnesses to testify to the facts?

Not nineteen hundred years ago and not even nineteen hundred miles away, but right here in the heart of Chicago during the present year, 1904, occurred one of these events which proves—if facts prove anything; 1st, that the life of man does continue beyond the grave; 2, that man in this life beyond the grave can influence persons in this earth existence by projecting impulses (thoughts) into their minds and so produce action; 3, that man in this advanced existence, is gifted with much higher powers than in the earth state; for instance, his vision far exceeds that of the much-lauded X-ray machine of science, as evidenced in this article.

Mrs. H. Hild is a business woman who keeps the store at 202 East Chicago avenue, where she has been established for over six years and is well known.

Like all professing Christians she believes in the life beyond the grave but also always felt that our departed friends could return and communicate with the living. For years she prayed that if this belief was true, that she might have conclusive evidence of it.

During a casual conversation with a neighbor, Mrs. Hild mentioned this belief and her desire for proof. Mr. X, as we will call him, was much interested and said:

"If I die first, and such a thing is possible I will certainly return and talk to you. If I don't come back, you will know that spirit return is a myth." The speaker was then in the prime of life but not long afterwards died suddenly. How he fulfilled his promise is told by Mrs. Hild as follows:

"January 23, 1904, my only son Eddie, accidentally shot himself, the bullet lodging in the palm of his left hand. The doctors at first said it would be necessary to extract the bullet without delay, but later deemed it advisable to wait for an X-ray photograph to disclose the exact location of the bullet. Like any mother under like circumstances I was much worried and feared that Eddie might lose his hand. Seeking relief from my anxiety, on Jan. 24, I attended the regular Sunday evening trumpet seance at 492 North Clark street, given by Ellen A. Pennau, trance and trumpet medium. All persons present were strangers to me, and could not by any possibility know anything about my private affairs. Two trumpets about three feet long were placed in the center of the room. All present including the medium, sat in a circle facing the trumpets, and the gas was turned out, leaving the room in total darkness.

"The seance began by repeating the Lord's Praper in unison, followed by the singing of sacred songs. Presently sounds indicated that the trumpets were moving. They could be heard rattling on the chandeliers overhead, and soon each one present was lightly tapped by a trumpet in greeting. Soon after there came a voice calling me by name through the trumpet. I answered, 'Who is it?' and the reply I received was the name of Mr. X., who had promised to come back after death and talk to me if such a thing were possible. He mentioned names of my family and friends; recalled past occurrences which could not have been known to anyone else but himself, and otherwise convinced me beyond the shadow of a doubt that he was Mr. X. He also said, 'Eddie shot himself yesterday in the palm of his left hand; now don't worry about it; it will come out all right, for I will see that it will.' Every incident that he mentioned was absolutely true. Why, then, should I doubt that the message came from my departed friend? I knew that he had kept his promise and that spirit return was a fact.

"On Thursday afternoon, January 28, four days later, I suddenly felt an uncontrollable impulse to go at once to Miss Pennau for a private seance. It was a very busy day with me but the impression was so strong, so urgent that I dropped everything and went, and it was well that I did.

"The seance was strictly private no one being present but the medium and myself. Almost immediately after the room was darkened I felt a trumpet tap me gently and then came this message from Mr. X.:

"'The doctor is waiting too long; if he does not operate on Eddie's hand before to-morrow (Friday) afternoon, your son will lose his hand.'

"I replied that the doctor said it was not necessary to operate on his hand for the next six weeks, as there would be no danger.

"Mr. X. said: 'The doctor cannot see it as we can. Our sight far exceeds that of any X-ray machine that was ever made. We can look through the human body as if it were a pane of glass and we see that unless an operation is performed by Friday afternoon blood poisoning will set in.'

"I said: 'What can I do? I cannot make the doctors operate unless they wish to.'

"He said: 'I will go with you to the doctor, and I will influence him to operate by Friday afternoon. I will also be with Eddie during the operation, and so magnetize his body that he will pass safely through the operation; this I promise you.' Other messages came through the trumpet, from my father, mother and son in the spirit world, and they all told me to do exactly as Mr. X. advised, and all would be well.

"I went directly to the doctor, told him I wanted an immediate operation performed on my son's hand. He protested that under the existing circumstances an operation would be exceedingly dangerous, if not fatal, saying also that the other doctors agreed with him on this point, and reiterated that there could be no danger to the hand, even if the operation was delayed for six weeks. Still I insisted; I knew in my own mind that the trumpet message must be true, and I continued to insist, and told him.

"I felt deeply impressed that all was not right with the hand.

"'Well,' said the doctor, 'there may be some truth in your impression. I will call and see the boy in the morning.'

"Then I went home, and that is the time when I did doubt spirit power, for I could not see how the spirit forces could make the doctor see the necessity of an operation. But the spirit forces were working just the same. That same evening the doctor came into my store and said: 'Bring the boy over to the Polyclinic Hospital, East Chicago avenue, at 8:30 in the morning, as I have other doctors to examine him and we will then decide what to do.'

"While I still believed implicitly in the spirit message, I still had wavering doubts as to the result of the operation, consequently I resolved not to tell any one, not even my husband, of my strange experience, but to stand the test and see how near I could trust spirit promises.

"Promptly at 8:30 the next morning (Friday) I appeared with my son before the surgeons at the Polyclinic Hospital. As I expected, the surgeons again declared that there was no danger, and an operation not necessary for six weeks. As I continued to insist on an immediate operation, one of the surgeons, taking me to one side, said: 'My dear madam, under the boy's present condition we do not dare to operate. We have had an X-ray examination of the hand; the photograph shows that the bullet lies imbedded in a mass of muscle and nerve in the palm of the hand, and near it a piece of bone is also indicated in the photograph. The hand bears every indication of being in good condition, and an operation is not advisable at the present. Not until your son has gained more strength. To operate now, would be dangerous, exceedingly dangerous. His kidneys are enfeebled, and his heart is weak. Under these conditions it would be impossible to give him anaesthetics. The only recourse is chloroform. If we give the boy chloroform, the chances are against his ever leaving the operating table alive. If, however, you insist on an operation, we will perform it, but we advise against it, and you must take all the responsibility.'

Only a mother can understand what a conflict of doubt and faith raged in my mind at this crucial moment. Here were eminent surgeons, flesh and blood, standing before me telling me that there was no danger at present, and an operation likely to prove fatal; on the other hand I had only the remembrance of spirit voices telling me the pressing necessity of instant action.

"This was the final test of my belief in spirit power which I hope no one else will have to face. Feeling the full force of the tremendous responsibility at this moment, I seemed to feel the presence of invisible beings about me, and I could almost hear a voice telling me to tell the surgeons to operate. Obeying this admonition, I told them to proceed and I would accept all the responsibility.

"The surgeons performed the operation and were successful. They began at 8:30 a. m. When an incision was made into the hand the surgeons were very much surprised. No one could doubt the symptoms. Imbedded in the delicate mass of nerves were little pieces of bone and other foreign substance and blood poisoning was on the verge of setting in, exactly as predicted by Mr. X. in the trumpet message. It took the surgeons over two hours to pick out the pieces of bone and dress the hand. As one of the surgeons has since expressed it, 'It is very lucky that you insisted on the operation as you did, for if it had been delayed a few hours longer, the boy would not only have lost his hand, but very likely his whole arm.' During the long hours that my son was undergoing the operation, I was alone at the hospital, for not even my husband or anyone else knew of it. I did not feel one bit nervous, for I placed all my confidence in my spirit friends. I knew I was not alone, for I felt their presence around me. At 2 p. m. my son was so recovered from the operation as to be able to go home with me.

"On the next Sunday evening I attended the seance at 492 N. Clark street again. Mr. X. came to me with a trumpet message and described the operation and incidents just as they took place, which was not only surprising, but also convincing to all, as no one present, not even the medium, knew anything about the operation.

"I asked Mr. X. how he was able to bring all things to pass so successfully, just as predicted, and he said: 'I have the power; everything that happened is for the best, and you will see that it is for the best later on.' I have attended these seances every week, and each time Mr. X. spoke through the trumpet and told me the condition of the hand. One night I felt impressed to go and see the hand dressed. I asked him why he wanted me to see the hand, and he said, 'So that you would not doubt any more. So that you would see that I was telling the truth.

"At this date the hand is all healed, and all has turned out just as predicted."

Mrs. Hild says if any one wishes to investigate further she will be pleased to give satisfactory proof of all this, and will also give the name of Mr. X., as he was well-known in Chicago.

A Suggestive Vision.

RUSSIA FINALLY TO BE HUMBLED.

In an old book published in 1853 by Andrew Jackson Davis I find a prophecy which in this age of mysteries and scientific discoveries may be of interest.

According to this book a great congress of the leading spirits of all nations of the earth convened near Boston thirty miles up in the atmosphere. The object of this great congress of the wise spirits and patriots of earth was to consolidate the spiritual forces and devise plans the working out of which would benefit mankind. An "exordium" was dictated to each individual nation. I will give the one sent or dictated to Russia by the spirits of John the leader, Falieri the warrior, Claerfayt the commander, Ochlenschloder the dramatist, Derzbavine the officer, Luther the reformer, Wolvensteiner the informer, Bonnawaski the magnate, Beirbaur the serf, August Harndenberg the plenipotentiary, Fezzan Heirrbstein the composer, Michaelovitsch the czar and fraternizer among other nations:

"We listen, O Russia, we listen for one note of harmony from thy palaces. But we hear naught but the loud roaring of the practicing warriors. The rugged earth echoes back these songs of death. Their imperial strength is contrasted with plebeian weakness; the first had wealth and artillery, the latter poverty and love of liberty. To the former we may add nothing, but we can diminish. To the latter we can diminish nothing, but can add a torrent of power. Russia, thy soldiers will fail thee in battle. Their hearts shall beat for the downtrodden. Thy officers shall fall in death before thine eyes and thy cunning shall depart.

"Russians!—Noblemen of the north! Spurn your glittering swords and commence the education of your youth. Ignorance lowers heavily over your habitations. Crime hath sealed your despotism—hath consigned them to decay."

May not this old prophecy be significant of the result of this war between Russia and Japan?

The exordium to Japan given at the same time is very flowery by comparison.

DR. FUNK AND THE SCIENTISTS.

To the Editor:—Without wishing to intrude an opinion upon the prejudiced or unwilling consideration of scientists, nor wishing to provoke a discussion of psychic laws and ethical principles in new and unexplored lines, I, for one, would like to thank Dr. I. K. Funk, the editor of the Standard Dictionary, for what he has done for the cause of aggressive Spiritualism in giving to the world in "The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena," the replies received from college and university professors and other scientists relative to the return of Dr. Beecher's spirit and the widow's mite incident, or the hypothesis of spirit return.

With the exception of two or three naturally great thinkers, the consensus of opinion of these scientists is against such a theory. The labored argument made by some of them to account for the incidents submitted to them by Dr. Funk shows how useless and disappointing it is to submit to scientists a correlation of facts concerning which they have very little, if any, empirical knowledge. These replies when carefully considered show the experience or amount of thought each has given to the transcendental principles and facts involved, and their knowledge of the laws necessary from which to form an opinion on the incident as submitted.

In the light of the facts of even modern material science these men with intellectual titles will, a little later, look with curiosity upon their own opinions. Some more cautious than others withheld their names from their screeds. Others specifically showed their prejudices.

Had Dr. Funk desired an intelligent opinion upon a chemical question he would very naturally submit his questions to those having experience in chemical substances, laws and affinities.

The answer to the questions submitted by Dr. Funk involved vibrations beyond the ultra-violet colors in the spectrum of these learned scientists. It involved facts just beyond their experience and their sense development; and their replies are therefore exceedingly amusing, and are instructive as showing thinkers on the advanced line of Spiritualism the kind of work to be done for the rank and file in the rear. While none of these great names are from Missouri, there is, however, a necessity that they be "shown."

The majority of these opinions show the desire to contradict the only logical theory—that of spirit return—upon which all of the facts, as submitted, can be explained. Some of these great men seem to fear the deductions of their own logic and fell over each other in their haste to evade the only logical line of inquiry, because, as they say, the incidents submitted appeared to them to be too trifling to come from Dr. Beecher and spirits in the next stage of existence. Indeed! Since when has science failed to note trifles? The falling of the apple was a trifle, and yet Newton did not fail to consider it.

Trifling as the Beecher incident may seem to these savants, the question involved is of more moment to the race than all other questions in the solution of which the world has grown gray.

It is doubtful if these scientists can conceive of any manifestation of force or intelligence independent of matter as they understand matter. "Man without a brain"—a material brain—a brain of gray matter, as they understand gray matter, is to them an unthinkable proposition. It probably is such to them, as their gray matter is composed. Matter must be refined—spiritualized, before it is adapted to the higher vibrations of spiritual intelligence—of thought. The more refined the matter, the more perfect the manifestations of the electric current over it, and still more refined must be the matter for the manifestation of currents magnetic and telepathic for psychic intelligence.

That matter as we understand it is always essential as a vehicle of manifestation of the force called intelligence—of thought is not yet a demonstrated fact. While it is a fact that the quality of matter regulates the quality of the force transmitted, and that the quality of the matter composing the brain determines the kind and quality of the intelligence—of the thought formulated, yet this does not establish it as a fact that brain is necessary for the formulation and expression of intelligence—of thought.

The psychic phenomena submitted by Dr. Funk point in this direction. Will the scientists tell us that man can not think without a brain composed of matter as they understand matter? If not, will they tell us why not?

Will they tell us that gravity is not, and cannot manifest in inter-stellar space where matter is not, as they understand matter? Will they tell us that so trifling a thing as an apple will remain suspended in inter-stellar space?

Dr. Funk, we thank you for "The Widow's Mite" and the questions submitted. You have written wiser than you dream. These great scholars and scientists representing their great and mysterious temples of learning—acting as prophets explaining to the multitude from the innermost shrine of their Delphic temples—will not attempt to answer any more of your questions. Some of them may do a little thinking, and yet, science is too dogmatic to permit any expression if, peradventure, they should indulge in any such unexpected consummation.

A Revelation of Healing Power.

An Interesting Account By Thomas H. B. Cotton.

On Friday, November 5, 1897, there appeared in the Oakland Inquirer a statement regarding the experience of Mrs. Lilian A. Wimble, in the following words:

"Religious Monomania."—Some Remarkable Ideas Which Possess the Mind of Mrs. Lilian A Wimble.—Mrs. Lilian A. Wimble of 1309 13th avenue, was committed to the Nappa State Hospital for the Insane this morning by Judge Hall. She imagines she has had communication with Daniel Webster, George Washington and other great men. One night while suffering from asthma she says she saw a light appear before her and was cured. This light she says is due to spirit power; and this power told her that she is to put forth powers to open the gates of heaven and send out forces for good all over the earth. The case was diagnosed by Dr. J. C. S. Askerly and Dr. J. L. Milton as one of religious monomania. The husband testified that she told him she had five children in heaven, and that he was to marry Florence Blythe Hinckley, and has set the time to be taken to spirit land."

This narration was carefully copied by me, and on the following Sunday I carried it to three different halls in Oakland where Spiritualists met in their respective societies, at nearly the same hour in the afternoon. My object was to advise with the leaders concerning the proper steps to be taken to have the case investigated and see that the sufferer should have justice done. Failing to get tangible encouragement, I made up my mind that stranger though I was, this case must not be left unnoticed.

One week later Madam Florence Montague made emphatic mention of the case in her regular Sunday lecture in Fraternal Hall, Oakland, an account of which appeared next day in the San Francisco Call. She pronounced it merely a case of religious exaltation, in which the patient had need to be brought for treatment, to an experienced psychic who would have been able to relieve her of the obsessing symptoms. She further declared that she regarded the act of her so-called friends in depriving her of her liberty as being far more serious than a sad mistake. It was a flagrant injustice to the lady, and utterly inexcusable. Inquiries were pushed still further among the intimate friends of Mrs. Wimble, with the following general results:

Mrs. L. W. Knott of 1011 Linden street, perhaps the most intimate friend of the patient, having been educated with her in music, singing together in operas, etc., declared that the act was a piece of unmitigated persecution. That the partial obsession was no true insanity. She agreed entirely with Madam Montague that the unpleasant symptoms could have been perfectly cured by the intervention of a strong and intelligent medium. Mrs. Lena Golden of East Oakland, in whose house Mrs. Wimble had developed and who developed with her, and was also quite subject to the trance condition, gave it as her firm belief that to incarcerate one in Mrs. Wimble's condition as an insane person, meant an appalling menace to all Spiritualists, herself included; and no one ever thought of accusing her of insanity.

On Sunday, November 21, I penned the following paper regarding the case, signing the single name "Benton" (a part of my own name) and offered it to the Oakland Enquirer: for publication:

"Editor Oakland Enquirer:—Every one who understands himself is an advocate of justice. If he is not, he should be placed behind the bars until he is brought to his senses. That the so-called friends of Mrs. Wimble should be incensed at the direction of the interest taken by Madam Montague, cannot be a surprise to any one. When the supreme object is to hold justice enthroned in a community, the occasional struggle required in carrying out this object is sure to offend somebody.

"It so happens that the account in the Enquirer of the 5th inst., relating to the symptoms of the case, gives not one scintilla of evidence of the presence of insanity, much less of the presence of violence. On the contrary the essence of the entire account mentioned is to broadly declare that every outspoken Spiritualist in the state of California is technically or dangerously insane, and liable to be ground through the same mill of "examination" and placed in an asylum for the insane to remain there until 'cured.' At this rate the state would be speedily bankrupted to provide room for all the cases. The absurdity of apathy or indifference regarding the case is therefore sufficiently manifest. If Mrs. Wimble gave proof previous to being deprived of her liberty, of violent or dangerous insanity, then her real friends have a right to know it. If on the contrary she manifested nothing more serious than ordinary indications of what is well understood as developing mediumship, as intimated in the details of symptoms given in the above mentioned report, then it is so clearly a case of persecution, as to naturally arouse the righteous indignation not only of Spiritualists, but of all lovers of justice in the community. Everyone who is true to himself is ready, regardless of who is offended, to demand in the name of humanity, let justice be done though the heavens fall. (Signed) Thomas H. B. Cotton; M. C. Price, Secretary Oakland Psychical Society; J. S. Loveland, Lena Golden, Dow C. Golden."

The above signatures were none of them attached to the document when first offered for publication. The editor however agreed to publish it provided I would sign my full name. Being then practically a total stranger in the city, I concluded to give other friends an opportunity to share this responsibility with me, and so I hunted them up and secured their signatures along with my own. The last two signatures being obtained on Sunday, December 5. On the afternoon and evening of that day I was at Greer's Hall at the mediums' meetings, and saw such evidences of development in Mrs. Josephine C. Smith as to convince me that a little advice from her guides would not be amiss before offering our paper for publication. Accordingly on Monday morning I repaired to her place at 504 Fifteenth street, opposite the city hall. I was pleased to find this lady and husband at home. After brief explanations of my errand, the guides of Mrs. Smith assured me that the punishment of this unfortunate woman in being deprived of her liberty was a flagrant outrage the farthest remove from justice. Their indignation was very emphatic to think that human beings should be guilty of such violent and outrageous injustice. Instead of subjecting her to the charge of some tender and intelligent medium who would be able to give her speedy relief, they shut her up in a prison cell where the very worst association possible would exercise daily influence over her, rendering her case more and more wretched and helpless each day. Her guide then said to me, "After tendering you a vote of thanks for your deep interest in this matter, we offer you the use of this room one night in each week for the purpose of holding meeings of mediums whose combined powers of concentration of thought and wish will, we trust, result in permanent benefit of the unfortunate lady." We were further informed by the guides that the case was one of partial obsession, that the undeveloped spirit that held control of a large part of the time, did not even know that he was out of the body.

It was, however, then and there prophesied that within six weeks from the time of our first regular meeting, the patient would undergo a marked and definite change for the better.

After giving me the names of certain mediums whose temperaments were thought suitable to blend in such a work, we bade good-bye and I went in quest of those mediums. Madam Florence Montague, then lecturer of the Oakland Psychical Society, was first mentioned in the list; and to her it was left to appoint the evening of the first meeting. She appointed the following Saturday night, December 11, at 7:45 for the meeting, and 8 o'clock precisely for the formal work to open. Some ten mediums were mentioned and invited but four of these were too much engaged to meet with us. The six who responded were Mrs. L. W. Knott, Mr. Charles Gunn and wife, Mrs. C. T. Gunn, Mr. Thompson, Professor J. S. Loveland and Thomas H. B. Cotton.

We sung a stanza of "Nearer to Thee," Mrs. Knott leading, and at once commenced the work of concentration. The time of concentration was by instruction of Mrs. Smith's guides, to be divided into two parts, each 15 minutes. The first half to be devoted to persuading the keeper at the asylum to be humane and considerate in his treatment of the inmates; the second 15 minutes we were to bring to bear our united mental powers for restoration of the patient, Mrs. Wimble, both spiritual and physical. In an astonishingly short time I heard Mrs. Gunn half whispering the word "Come! come! come!" repeatedly in measured emphasis. Very soon she reported that the disturbing spirit that had so distressed Mrs. Wimble was present in the room. I responded, "That spirit is welcome here, as are all other spirits that need to come." Almost immediately afterward the spirit so far impressed Mrs. Gunn as to speak to us saying: "I want to know what you folks want with me. I was doing well enough. I had good board and comfortable room. What do you expect me to do now-"

I replied, "We mean to ask you to cease to annoy that woman and destroy her peace of mind."

He then said, "I do not have any disposition to oblige anybody. I think I prefer my own way. Suppose you do want me to quit; that is no reason to me for complying with your request. No one ever did any favor for me. My life was very dark." Then in very dramatic tones he fairly shouted: "My mother was a woman of the town! Who cares for me? My life is all darkness!"

I then said, "There will come a flood of light to you from the higher spheres by our aid."

"Light," he said, "What do I want of light?"

I replied, "Light is the very thing you do want."

He then asked in the same dramatic tones before mentioned, "Do you mean to say you will make a man of me?"

Once more I replied, "That's just what you are; the only trouble is you have not yet found it out."

Then the guides of Mrs. Smith spoke in beautiful and gentle remonstrance, telling him that now he had left the physical body, it would be far more becoming in him to seek to live a noble life, to aspire for better things; to seek for the legitimate comfort of true spirit existence on the higher plane of life. He had no right to remain in that darkened state and hold that woman a victim of his unhappy experience. It was not only pain and torture to her, but a hindrance to his own advancement.

Then came a flood of light accompanied by the person of that undeveloped spirit's angel aunt. She came with her blessing for us who were present in the circle. She remained a few moments, throwing over that unhappy spirit the spell of angelic love. Then with their joint promise that he would go with her for the present, and never again hold the patient (Mrs. Wimble) as before, she bore him away.

A sense of sweet relief came to us all and especially to the sensitives who actually felt the condition of the patient in her padded cell at Napa, fifty miles away! This report coming telepathically and very distinctly, this feeling of great relief, the patient saying: "Why, I'm myself again; I'm all right!"

Then by direction of Mrs. Smith's guides we all concentrated our thoughts on the superintendent of that asylum, that he might be constrained to treat the inmates with more humane consideration in every way and become enlightened as far as possible by the powers of truth, impressed upon him by the spirit world respecting the real condition of the victims in his charge, and the injustice being practiced toward many, well known to be sane.

Soon we appointed the time of the next meeting, namely the following Thursday night, December 16. We dispersed, feeling, (I speak for myself) that a glorious revelation had come into the world; which meant the gradual but inevitable revolution of the whole system of the treatment of the insane (so-called) throughout the civilized world! Moreover, the thinking reader cannot fail to note a marked improvement in the method of "casting out devils" (demons) over that of 1900 years ago. Instead of sending him into the swine, or into the sea to be "choked," we first turned on this unhappy waif the searchlight of love from a higher sphere. As he became gradually accustomed to its influence he was next introduced to a foretaste of angelic love, the ecstasy of which he had never dreamed possible. This simply made it impossible for him to return to the old life, because he was filled with a longing for better things.

When Thursday night came, three of the members of the former circle were absent on account of indisposition. There were present Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Knott, Mrs. Thompson and the writer. The guides of Mrs. Smith commenting on the situation remarked that it is always the case in any enterprise; certain ones are to be looked to as the ones to be depended on, while certain others who might be just as faithful in spirit are kept away unavoidably or otherwise. The guides further informed us that besides the principal spirit, the one who had been chiefly instrumental in obsessing the victim, there were three others who had been about her from time to time, who were known to annoy her a great deal. We all focussed our thought upon the sufferer as on the former occasion, and very soon these three came with the one who acted so prominent a part on the first evening. This latter had gained so much by the happy influence of his spirit aunt that he was intensely anxious to tell us of the deep humiliation he felt at having so long disturbed the peace of that harmless woman. He said he never could be able to express his grief, his humiliation and profound regret for the harm he had done to her, and would henceforth do all in his power to undo the evil of his past course. This we accepted in good faith.

We were then informed by the guides in control of the meeting that the other three disturbing spirits would be detained by them for three nights and days at the home of the medium (Mrs. Smith). Mr. Thompson was requested to concentrate his thoughts from time to time during the period, on the patient, Mrs. Wimble; and the rest of the guests to fix their minds in like manner on the medium and the three spirits who were to be detained at her home during the same three nights.

The time for the next meeting was not fixed that night; it being thought best by the guides to leave it indefinite, and notify all the members when the evening should be decided upon later. This was finally arranged for Monday night, December 27. The various members of the circle were duly notified.

Two of the members on that evening were absent, namely Mrs. Knott and Professor Loveland. The other six including Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Gunn, Mr. Thompson and the writer were present.

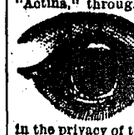
The spirit friends seemed already waiting for us when the hour of 8 arrived. The four who had once been so troublesome to the patient were on hand, and the explanation made that the one was there who had retired so gracefully after that short remonstrance on the first night. Two other spirits had been with Mrs. Wimble from the first of the trouble, and are too stubborn to be persuaded to leave. The fourth was one who had passed out from the asylum where the patient is incarcerated, and under very darkened conditions. The first spirit could not say enough to prove his loyalty to our cause and his anxiety to aid us from this time on in undoing the evil he had helped to do in the past. His two former comrades, however, who were brought into the circle as above stated, proved to be Catholic monks. They stood on their knees on the rug, their heads bowed under their hoods, their faces buried in their hands, the most complete picture conceivable of abject slavery, together with the absence of all character save one single element, that of dogged stubbornness.

The usual elements were brought to bear to induce them to change their life and leave the patient free; but they were simply incorrigible. Then silent concentration was resorted to for a few minutes. During this time those two spirits remained crouched down, their faces being buried in their hands. Presently I remarked, "The eternal power of truth and love will undo this damage." Very soon Mrs. Gunn said, "I see the spirits now bowed over and a stream of light completely envelops them, and they refuse to look up." Another brief season of silent concentration was followed by the announcement by spirit friends, that these two would be detained by the power of force of the higher spirits, and would remain in the home of the medium, Mr. Smith, for some days.

This promise was fulfilled, but at very great sacrifice of the medium's energy, who was up and pacing the floor the greater part of two nights (immediately following that of the meeting herein recorded), talking to them, remonstrating with them, and finally convincing them that all further effort on the part to remain with that patient as they had been doing, would be utterly fruitless, and they would simply render themselves doubly miserable by continuing the struggle. Besides, she argued, the opposite course would bring them a happiness which they themselves had never dreamed of as possible, and finally after these two days of desperate struggling with these darkened waifs, they yielded to that higher influence, so gentle yet so superior. From that time on their power to harm the patient was gone forever, and with it all disposition to further trouble her was at an end.

The same evening that it was announced that these two souls were to be detained by force, the sensitives (Mrs. Gunn, Mrs. Smith and Mr. Thompson) all testified to the sweet relief of the unhappy patient; her head being free, her brain clear, and a restful, happy feeling possessing her. There was however one unpleasant symptom remaining. That was a pain in the back of the neck. This may have been caused by restlessness and loss of sleep. Another fact was mentioned by the guides of Mrs. Smith on this occasion that was very interesting in its way. There were many other spirits who accompanied these four already made prominent in this narration. This company were content to remain near by as visitors, without intruding upon our deliberations.

Again it was decided by the guides that all these—the three who had found the better way, together with their company of visitors (spirits), should remain at the home of Mrs. Smith both day and night for a time. She would have no fear or dread of them, as her band had sufficient power to take proper care of her and them.



Monday night, one week from that date, was fixed as the proper time for the next meeting; and the friends separated with feelings of great joy at being permitted to engage thus successfully in a work so like a miracle on a grand scale!

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all affections of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My house opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T. P., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

THEISM VS. ATHEISM.

Diversity of Gods and Theists—Nothing New in Theism—War in the Name of God.

If some folks of the intolerant, selfish type could have their way, the Atheist would not be allowed a hearing or chance to express his sentiments. Their idea of religious liberty is liberty for religious people but not for Infidels and Atheists. The cause of such hostility is, the Atheist has solid facts, sound arguments that the myrmidons of error cannot meet and refute.

There should and would be a greater number of useful workers in this field of labor if a greater number of bright minds would exercise the moral courage to face the popular frown and scorn usually hurled at such opponents.

I regard Theism as the greatest impediment and obstruction in the way of human progression, and I claim to be actuated by philanthropic motives, in honest efforts to lead people out of the darkness of error into the light of truth. I want to help them throw off their shackles, for they are blinded by creedal errors of idolatrous faith, paralyzed by old-time customs and prejudices so ingrained in their nature.

Some folks believe that Theism is a fundamental doctrine of Spiritualism, and conceive it their duty to teach it, and so they talk or write about God. What can they teach on this subject which they admit is unknown, unknowable and incomprehensible? The wisest God-believers confess this, and therefore can make no affirmation pertaining to it with any degree of certainty; yet they descant on the subject with a vast assumption of knowledge and make claims that rest entirely upon their own assertions. Their best arguments amount to nothing more than wild speculations and conjectures of an imaginary fabrication.

According to the fundamental principles of Theism, God has a two-fold character—one part good and the other part bad. He has attributes of goodness, love, mercy, benevolence, wisdom and the like—on the other hand he is a God of wrath, revenge, malice, malevolence, vindictiveness—dealing punishment, wrath, damnation to all people whom he dislikes.

Now we have observed that Spiritualist writers and speakers have shown devotion and allegiance to this God by retaining in their sentiments and belief all his good qualities, while they reject all his bad attributes; and so the God is one-half defunct. We do not know by what authority they thus change the face of Theism, nor by what arbitrary rule they retain the good and reject the bad; nevertheless this is a hopeful, encouraging sign of progression, and we rejoice to learn that one-half their God is obliterated. We may compare it to a man with his head cut off.

God-believers have nothing new in the line of Theism, but perpetually repeat the old trash like a parrot—chewing the old sectarian husks; aping ecclesiastical customs; talking much about a god they admit is unknown and unknowable. In defiance of reason and consistency they claim to understand much about the Unknown, and they talk or write on God's love—God's will—God's laws—God's wrath—God's mercy—God's goodness—and they say he is all-wise, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, all-seeing, limitless, changeable, changeless, jealous, revengeful, good, infinite, eternal, unknown, incomprehensible, undefinable.

The above-named adjectives, in whole or in part, applied to a thing is proof of its unintelligibility. The incomprehensibility of it alone is sufficient to teach people the folly of trying to teach anything on the subject. The human mind is lost in bewilderment and confusion in contemplation of such baseless, unprovable ideas; and in some instances the mind has been unbalanced and insanity the result.

The word God has many synonyms, equivalents, substitutes, cognates, counterparts; and Theists are divided and subdivided into hundreds of distinct bodies and orders. We will glance at the most important divisions. The Monotheists claim that God is a unity or one, a male personality and they call him Creator, Father, King, Ruler and other nicknames; and their system of belief is Unitarianism.

The next in order is Dualism which teaches that God is a duality, of two-fold nature, composed of two parts, male and female, and they call it Father-Mother God. The Dualist claims that the Unitarian doctrine of one god is false.

The next is Trinitarianism which teaches that God is composed of a trinity or three parts, three male persons, they have named Father, Son and Holy Ghost. These three individuals make one god, so that three times one are one, in this case.

Now, something should be done to outrival and surpass the abominable Trinitarians, and we are looking out sharp for a new sect of Theists to spring up, who will divide God into four equal parts and call it a quadruplicate or a quartet or a quadruped—any word will do after we get used to it. That would be no more surprising than other things even more foolish, done in the name of religion. The question as to whether this fourfold god will be all male or all female or a mixture of both can be settled by a Grand Council. They might name it the Great Supreme Rig-dam-bo-le-met-a-ki-mo, with a newly invented definition and interpretation of the word to fit this new quadruple deity.

Then they can do things on the square. This is only a suggestive name, but perhaps it might make Trinitarians tremble.

The next grand division of Theism is Polytheism which teaches many gods, and in the higher branches hundreds of gods. We refer the reader to the latter part of Webster's Dictionary to a list of names and definitions of divinities, gods, goddesses, sons of gods. It is an interesting study.

We finally come to Pantheism which is belief in a very large God—the biggest one ever invented—so big that he includes and absorbs all the other gods combined, together with everything else, both animate and inanimate, on the face of the earth. This is the highest attainable degree of folly and absurdity in religious beliefs, and we call it confusion confounded. When a person reaches this altitude he or she is graduated and qualified to enter a lunatic asylum.

Of all the gods of history there is one that approaches some degree of consistency—that is the Egyptian trine god Osiris, Isis and Horus; representing father, mother and child; symbolized by the triangle. This is a trinity that is natural, practical, reasonable; within the limit and scope of comprehensibility.

The Christians tried to imitate this trinity with three male persons; but made of it a pitiful farce. The intent was to rule out the woman; for that did not agree with their ideas of a deity. It is true they believe in and recognize "The Mother of God," but she does not belong to the "Holy Trinity." That would spoil it.

We are truly glad that woman is getting her eyes open to see how religion degrades and enslaves her.

Theists have no facts, no proof of a god but have sought to carry their point by assumption, vehement assertion and have worked upon fear, awe and credulity of humanity to force its acceptance, by persuasion, by threats of dire disaster, by punishments and curses for disbelief; and have charged opponents with infidelity, blasphemy, sacrilege. If they prove a god to their own satisfaction by such means, which god is it? The Mohammedans aver there is only one true and living god—that is Allah. Christians say there is but one true and living god—that is Jehovah. Spiritualist god-believers declare there is one true and living god—that is —— blank. They are non-committal on this point; but after careful examination we have come to the conclusion it is an ideal image, as variable as human minds are.

The Turk says Allah is the only god. The Christian says "You lie. Jehovah is the only god." And so they fight and kill each other, leaving the question still unsettled and open for discussion.

Every statement pertaining to a deity by one class of Theists is disputed by some other class of Theists. The averments and explanations kill each other by conflict.

I will repeat a few thoughts expressed by Hudson Tuttle that should be repeated and remembered. They are an epitome of history.

"The rudest fetichism has its fable, and perhaps as near the truth as the more pretentious. The Christian God or creator is only an enlargement of the savage's ideas. He creates as a man with unlimited powers. He is the ideal of man, projected from the mind and from a subjective thought made a personal being. Labored explanations have been verbosity, incomprehensible to man. These views, ideas, beliefs originated when man was a savage. They are conclusions from essentially erroneous understanding of nature. They have matured into dogmas which fetter and prevent reason.

"The God question, in the very mystery of its unsolvability, has sharpened the sword of antagonism, and what the reason failed to maintain has been the contestant on the field of battle. The plains of Europe and Asia have been whitened by the bones of bigots fighting for the misconceptions of ignorance; cities have been leveled in ashes; populous countries reduced to deserts; every atrocity wreaked on poor humanity; fagots' flame, dungeons' horror, massacres and crime in the name of God, by the supposed command of God to maintain his glory.

"It has passed like the murderous dream of the night. Man is supreme to the God of his imagination. He has broken the shackles of his theology, and is free."

Do You Suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the Kola Compound before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

Mr. J. B. Ayle, Estherville, Iowa, writes Feb. 28th, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after 28 years suffering, could get nothing to even give relief. Miss Eva Preston, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, suffered beyond words for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma until cured by the Kola Compound. Physicians told her she could not be cured. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., a very bad case was permanently cured of Asthma after many years suffering.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Company, No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

SPRING.

To the Editor:—Occasionally we see a poem on "Spring," possessed of more than ordinary merit. Here is one by Mary D. Brine, which evinces some study of Nature. It ought to be set to music. H. V. SWERINGEN.

There are blossoms in the garden sweet and fair;
There's a sense of wondrous sweetness in the air;
And the meadow grass is swaying, the fickle breeze obeying,
And the daisies rear their white heads everywhere.
There's a twittering in the tree-tops, when the earth
Rejoices at the morning's glorious birth,
As the little birds awaking, their leafy nests forsaking,
Fly hither and fly thither in their mirth.

And the bees about the buttercups fly round
On lazy wings, with humming, droning sound,
As they gather in the sweetness of the summer day's completeness,
Where the fields with clover blossoms must abound.
There are fleecy clouds above me soaring high,
Lightly, lazily across the azure sky;
There are shadows shifting lightly as the sunbeams follow brightly,
And the day in peaceful beauty passes by.

But the sweetest of all sweet melody
From within the grand old forest comes to me!
'Tis the woodland brooklet gliding beneath the trees, half-hiding
The while it ripples out its song of glee.
And when day is done, the distant evening bell
Rings out, while echoes soft the sweet tones swell;
Till stars, their bright watch keeping, from shadowy skies are peeping,
And silence comes at last with us to dwell.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, the noted lecturer of San Francisco, Cal., was in the city last week. She has engagements to lecture at Port Huron, Mich., North Amherst, Ohio, Lake Brady, Ohio, Clinton, Iowa, and Chesterfield, Ind., during the entire camp. She is in great demand at the present time.

Arzelia C. Clay writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "On the memorable day of June 17, Mr. Samuel Smith, the veteran medium, celebrated the anniversary of his birthday, at 395 North Lafayette street, Grand Rapids, Mich. Friends greatly enjoyed the day, and while we shared the spiritual crumbs Father Smith's controls gave us, we felt to extend an invitation to others to honor the grey hairs of the medium, who has now lived a little over seventy-five years. Letters of cheer will find a welcome at his fireside."

There are thousands who highly appreciate The Progressive Thinker. Here is one among the number, Mrs. D. Cetti of New Orleans. She writes: "Yesterday being Wednesday, and The Progressive Thinker being a regular weekly visitor every Wednesday since I first became a subscriber, I very naturally awaited the postman's appearance with impatience, for I usually feel as if I had missed a real nice dinner if it should be just a day late—I do feel so famished to devour its contents. So you may imagine my disappointment when the postman handed me my mail, but among it there was no Progressive Thinker. I just felt as if some dear friend had forsaken me, and then came the thought, I wonder if my subscription has expired, and would have written immediately, but for the fact of my not having some of the late papers, I having loaned them to friends to read and return; but as soon as I received the latest one, I turned immediately to the designated 'number,' and found the solution of the mystery. I then hastened to send you a money order, which you will find enclosed, and for which you will please renew my subscription."

That sudden death and sorrow would come into the home of John A. Roney, whose brother was killed Saturday by being thrown from a wagon, was foretold to the former last week by a dream and by an amateur fortune-teller. According to Mr. Roney, who is foreman of the Rockford Lumber & Fuel Company, he had a dream Thursday night in which he saw grey horses, which he says is a sign of death. During the week a friend called at the home and told the fortunes of the members of the family. In giving the lumberman's life, this friend said that he would soon suffer some affliction and that sorrow would enter into his home. Both of these were remembered by him when he heard of his brother's death, and were repeated to friends who called at the house. He said he paid little attention to these statements as he did not believe in superstitions. The inquest over the remains of Robert Roney was held Saturday evening at Coroner Marsh's office. The verdict was that he came to his death by an accident, and the examination by a surgeon revealed the fact that his neck was broken. As his heart was also weak, it is believed his death might have resulted from either the breaking of the vertebrae or the shock of the fall.—Rockford (Ill.) Republican.

The management of the Wonewoc Camp Meeting, Wis., wishes to call the attention of all who wish to combine pleasure and profit with their summer outing, to the many excellent features of the Wonewoc Camp, and to invite them to consider the same. The camp grounds are situated in one of the most beautiful towns along the main line of the C. & N. W. Ry., and are located within easy walking distance of the principal hotels, business houses and the depot. From its very pleasing elevation a fine view can be had of one of the most beautiful valleys in the country; the water is fine, shade ample, and healthfulness unsurpassed by any camp-ground in the country. This, combined with an excellent array of talent, makes this camp one of the most desirable to visit. Look at the array of talent secured: Georgia Gladys Cooley, Rev. Moses Hull, Mrs. J. A. Murtha, Edna Ford Pierce, Mrs. Catherine McFarlin, Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, Will J. Erwood and J. S. Maxwell. Other mediums and workers will be in attendance. No one can afford to miss the opportunity to hear these workers. The dates of camp are from August 4 to Aug. 22, 1904. Write for further information and programmes to Miss Gertrude Spooner, secretary, Wonewoc, Wisconsin.

N. A. St. Clair writes from Toronto, Canada: "Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes has completed a three months' engagement with the Toronto Spiritualist Association. Her lectures are followed by tests and astrological data, which proved very interesting. Mrs. Noyes has a pleasing personality and is popular with her audiences: She gives private readings interspersed with astrological delineations, which gave excellent satisfaction to her numerous patrons here. Mrs. Noyes has some open dates, including a portion of the camp season, and will be pleased to hear from societies and camps desiring her services. She can be addressed care of The Progressive Thinker, 40 Loomis street, Chicago."

Quite a stir was caused last evening at the First Spiritualist church on Boquet street, Miss Margaret Gaule, who is the medium and lecturer for the month, was giving a number of "tests." While she was in the middle of the center aisle, Miss Gaule suddenly stopped and retreating to the railing near the pulpit, said: "I am now impressed by seeing a man draw near who holds a bible in his hands. It is open at the gospel of St. John. He is a Lutheran minister and is looking for some one." Miss Gaule then went to the right aisle of the church and stepping up to a woman said: "Madam, this minister comes to you." The woman at first disclaimed any knowledge of any deceased minister. "Well," said Miss Gaule, "you do know him and he says that four members of his church are here. He gives me the initial F. and then I get D., and then R." The woman still shook her head, as if sure that she did not know the spirit visitor. "The minister tells me that he does not like to give his name, but will do so if necessary, in order to let you know who he is," continued the medium. Still the woman persisted in the negative replies. Miss Gaule then said, "He was a Lutheran minister and his name is Ruoff." This reference to the late Rev. Frederick Ruoff, pastor of the German Lutheran church, at Sixth avenue and Smithfield street, caused quite a stir and it was some time before the medium could resume her "tests." Miss Gaule then referred to some other spirit visitors and later went to the woman to whom "Rev. Ruoff" had come. She asked the woman concerning a piece of jewelry, stating that the minister wanted to know about it. To this the woman replied that the jewelry was in her possession. She then appeared to give credence to the message that was given to her by Miss Gaule.

Correspondent writes from Hartford, Conn.: "The annual state convention met in Unity church of this city, Saturday and Sunday. J. C. F. Grumbine was the speaker, and Mrs. May Pepper the clairvoyant psychic. She excelled herself. Mr. Grumbine lectured on Saturday evening on 'Radium and the Astral Light,' before a crowded house, and on Sunday at 7:30 p. m., he lectured on 'God,' before at least 1,500 people who paid admission at the door. He never spoke better and held the vast audience from beginning to end. Mr. Grumbine has accepted a few engagements on the Spiritualistic platform because societies now demand his teachings, and are not afraid to accept the truth of the spiritual movement. He expects in the early winter to visit the Southwest and would be glad to hear from his old friends. Address him, 1285 Commonwealth avenue, Boston, Mass. Mr. Grumbine was engaged to give the Installation Lecture in Harmony Hall, Boston, Mass., Sunday, May 29, when Dr. Smith was installed. He spoke on 'Spirit and Spirits,' to a crowded house. Mr. Irving F. Symonds, general manager of the Banner of Light, writes, after listening to the lecture: 'I was anxious to know how you would adapt your ideals, and be able to feed the audience. I am gratified at the result of my observation. I cannot close without a word of tribute to your wonderful powers as a teacher.' Mr. Grumbine closes his work in Boston in Pierce Hall the first Sunday in July. He goes to Cincinnati, O., the middle of that month for a short vacation. He opens in the lecture rooms of the Metaphysical Club, Boston, the first Sunday in September."

Prof. Wm. Hamden writes from Wichchita, Kans.: "As your valuable paper has been a welcome visitor in the home of my sister for 9 years, and guarded with a jealous eye, I feel at home in its columns. I want to say to Spiritualists and societies, if they want an honest, sincere speaker and message bearer, they will find it in Mrs. Virginia Bryan, of Ohio. I have heard her at several points in the state, and find her eloquent, forceful and logical, leaving no ground uncovered for argument. She is second to none in this state and carries with her a modest and charming personality, which is fast winning the hearts of Kansas hearers. Wish more were like her."

Virginie Barrett writes: "I am keeping house, and will give rent free to a medium or Spiritualist. Address me at No. 28 Gladstone avenue, Indianapolis, Ind."

D. W. Brown, of St. Joseph, Mo., writes to this office and enclosed one dollar, but does not say what it is for, nor does he give his street number. Please state your wishes in regard to it. He speaks as follows of Mr. Jessup and Mrs. Tiffany, trumpet mediums: "An impetus has been imparted to the cause of Spiritualism in this city during the past season through the labors of W. C. Jessup and Mrs. Hattie Tiffany, two first-class trumpet mediums. Mr. Jessup has held seances in all parts of the city with a large attendance and has made many converts to the cause. Mrs. Tiffany's mediumistic powers are of the highest order. She has been holding seances daily for the last nine months, with a good attendance, and at almost every seance the most surprising results have been obtained. Many highly moral lectures have been obtained from spirit friends exceeding anything ever heard from the pulpits of the world. Her mediumistic powers attract spirits of a high grade of moral and intellectual development and very many comforting messages have been received from the dear departed friends who long since passed onward to what has always been considered before the advent of spirit communication, 'the great unknown.' Gone to that bourne from whence no traveler e'er returns,' is an obsolete old saw for which future generations will have no use."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Morton Hartwell writes: "There are perhaps a few people who have at some time in their walk of life been guided by this great power which has been made manifest through the Psychological sciences, and when we stop and consider the causes of this great phenomena, we are more fully convinced that 'all things are possible.' The fact that spirits influence human beings has been demonstrated thousands of times and as we delve deeper and deeper into these marvelous sciences we are impressed more and more by the multitude of daily incidents which occur to us and others about us. Psychic knowledge and power can only be attributed to good or bad spirits, as it were, to the one influenced. The medium would be powerless if unassisted by these myriads of invisible beings, who are ever striving through these sources to bring us in closer rapport with the good by aiding us to climb the ladder of success with a sure and firm step. If we were unassisted many would now be stumbling over the roughh road of life in absolute darkness."

Geneva, Switzerland.—The sensational trial of the editor of the Swiss journal, La Lutte, for slandering a young woman of Fins-Haut, named Henriette Gay, whom he described in an article as being possessed of an evil spirit, has led to very curious comments upon the case in other papers. The Genevois relates how the priests for three whole months endeavored to drive the spirit from the girl's body by means of exorcism. She was taken barefooted on repeated pilgrimages to the convents of St. Maurice and St. Bernard, and as none of these attempts was successful, a priest, one Jean Paillet, determined on a grand effort. One Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, he caused the church bells to ring an alarm. When the church was filled by an astonished, wondering crowd, the doors were locked, and the priest proceeded to exorcise the spirit without ceasing until Sunday morning. During the exorcism the poor girl was dragged by the hair round and round the church, while the priest every few yards stopped to strike her on the face and body, proclaiming to the congregation that in reality it was the evil spirit he was beating. This was only one of many attempts at public exorcism which were endured by the poor, helpless girl, whose real malady was a form of epileptic hysteria. The editor of La Lutte, who has been heavily fined for giving full publicity to the affair, seems worthy of praise rather than blame, for, owing to his revelations, it is not likely that a repetition of such barbaric practices will be permitted even in the superstitious Swiss highlands.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

C. J. Barnes, the pioneer trumpet medium, and his sister, Mrs. Hamilton Gill, will be in Warsaw, Ind., for a week or ten days. They will be pleased to meet the friends.

Dr. Louis Freedman, the celebrated Australian healer, will atend the Chesterfield camp.

Mabel B. Pace writes: "I think everyone who has notice of meetings in The Progressive Thinker should be sufficiently thoughtful to notify the public of the summer changes. I traveled quite a distance last Sunday to attend an afternoon meeting, only to find that it had been discontinued for the summer."

William D. Noyes writes: "Mrs. Noyes and myself opened spiritual meetings at Bacon Post hall, Charlotte street, Utica, N. Y., and will hold Sunday meetings during the summer for those who cannot attend camp. We are permanently located at 128 Mary street, Utica, N. Y."

A. A. Averill writes of Unity Camp, Mass.: "Sunday, June 19, was celebrated as 'Haverhill Day.' The members of the 'Helping Hand' of Haverhill, accompanied by friends from Lawrence and other towns, visited the Lynn Spiritualists Association on that date and if the visitors enjoyed the occasion as well as the members of the association and their friends did, it was a very enjoyable day all around. Two chartered cars were filled with the excursionists. A conference meeting was held at 11, at which Mrs. Ham spoke briefly, followed by Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Arthur B. Shedd. At 2 and 4 the exercises were conducted by S. S. Ham, the president of the visiting society, and the exercises were participated in by many. The visitors left for their homes at an early hour, after which an evening service was held under the direction of President Caird, at which tests were given by Mrs. Caird and Mrs. Helyett; remarks by Mr. Scarlett and Mr. Allan. The grove is lighted in the evening, making the evening service as agreeable to attend as the afternoon. Refreshments are served at the society's restaurant. Admission to all meetings, both Sundays and Wednesdays, free."

Mrs. Hattie Beauchamp writes from Spokane, Wash.: "Through the efforts of the Rev. Mrs. Frances Sheldon, of Tacoma, who is also our state president, and the united efforts of the members of the First Spiritualist Society, we have been having quite a boom. Mrs. Sheldon has been with us as our pastor since April 24, lecturing for us each Sunday evening. She is a clear, logical speaker, with a very charming and pleasing personality. On Sunday, June 12, 37 new members were received publicly into the society. Under Mrs. Sheldon's directions those received formed a horse shoe in front of the altar with two very beautiful little girls robed in white, with the innocence, confidence and sweetness of childhood beaming from their little faces, representing the Fox sisters, welcomed the participants into the society by pinning a cluster of beautiful snow-white flowers on the bosom of each. Then Mrs. Sheldon gave each a few words of welcome, clothed in an eloquence that only comes from the inspired. On Sunday, May 22, a lyceum was organized with a goodly number present and we have a good regular attendance. Mrs. A. A. French is our president, a lady who has the best interests of the society at heart, and who never leaves a stone unturned to better its condition. Our Ladies' Aid, with Mrs. Cornelius as president, the right person in the right place, is doing much good in a social and financial way; in fact, we are on the road to success, and in line for one of the most active societies in the Northwest, and hope ere long to have a home of our own in the Inland Empire, and to help scatter the seeds of true Spiritualism that they may bring forth the golden grains of Truth, Progression and happiness."

Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud writes from San Diego, Cal.: "I have just concluded a very successful two months engagement with the Second Spiritual Society here. Each Sunday found with us those to whom Spiritualism was new and strange. We were always encouraged by their thanks and appreciation expressed for both the helpful truths of the lecture and the messages received afterwards. Several new members have been added, and the society is now giving socials and entertainments once a month. Conditions are very harmonious, and a good work is being done by this society. I have worked continuously either for the First Society or the Second and given private readings during the week. I shall rest this month, taking a trip into the mountains. I will attend the Harmony Grove Camp-meeting at Escondido, Cal., in July. During the three years I have labored here I have witnessed a growing respect upon the part of those who are not with us. The desire of my heart—namely, a temple for the First Spiritualist Society, has been realized. For some time yet the society will need to concentrate on paying the debt remaining on the temple, but having careful officers and with the great delight they one and all feel in the beautiful auditorium of the temple, they will surely succeed. It may be necessary for me to leave San Diego for the benefit of my health, for higher inland location; yet if so, my thoughts will often turn to these good people here. My interests have been closely knit with the First Society in the building of their temple and in placing Spiritualism before the public as commanding respect. It is with a great deal of pleasure I read in your paper the reports of the work being done in my home state, Indiana, both in regard to the state association and also at the Indiana camp, Chesterfield. Through The Progressive Thinker permit me to send greetings and good wishes to my many friends in the east."

Rebecca Still expresses her high appreciation of The Progressive Thinker and premiums: "Having been a subscriber since July, 1898, and having all the premium books except the last one, that I send for now, I want to thank you for the instruction and pleasure I have had the reading the paper and books. I know of no better way than to keep in the ranks where light is disseminated."

Dr. Beverly writes: "We will hold a celebration Saturday evening, July 2, at Arlington Hall. We invite everybody to come and have a good time. There will be a fine program; sketches by Prof. Tutt, member of Slayton Lyceum Bureau Other talent has been engaged. Free lemonade, Ice cream and cake will be served. Our fine music and dances have been the delight of all. Tickets 25 cents a couple. Walter DeVoe will be with us every Sunday evening and the people are coming to enjoy these meetings, afternoon and evening. We get the best talent that can be procured and many are becoming interested in these wonderful phenomena. We have just returned from the World's Fair and have new vibrations for all who attend."

Mrs. Schott, secretary, writes: "The next monthly meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists' League will be held at Boysden's Hall, 42d Place and Cottage Grove Avenue, Monday evening, July 14. Walter DeVoe will deliver the address of the evening, followed by free discussion. Topic, 'Spiritualism and New Thought.' High-class music has been provided and the messages will be given by Mrs. Burland, Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Noyes of Boston, and others. All workers and sympathizers in this truth are invited to join the league and help to unite the forces for strength and harmony. These monthly meetings are growing in the true spirit and power. Great good will result to the cause in this city, so we desire the co-operation of all. Don't forget the date."

T. W. Sherk writes: "At the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, Mr. H. F. Coates, president, the address last Sunday evening was delivered by Mr. H. F. Arnold; the music by Mr. and Mrs. Seeley and Mrs. Pearce. Mr. Arnold's lectures are always freely commented upon as being so helpful and instructive, and what higher compliment could be paid them? Next Sunday evening, July 3, Rev. Harry J. Moore will give the address, the subject by request, being Joan of Arc as a Medium and Savior. Mr. Moore will be with us two Sundays and we hope he will be greeted by large audiences and that he will find spiritual conditions in our society favorable for an outpouring of divine blessing. Messages by Mr. Coates and other mediums, demonstrating the wider, more abundant life proclaimed by Spiritualism, and a special musical programme at each meeting."

Mrs. Nellie Turner, secretary, writes: "The First Spiritual Society of Niagara Falls, N. Y., is still alive. We still have Mrs. A. G. Atcheson of Buffalo as pastor and president. She has worked hard for this society and deserves the highest praise. We are slowly but surely adding to our list of members. The past two Sundays we were favored by having with us Mrs. J. B. Harris of Chicago, a grand medium who sheds abroad the light of truth wherever she goes. Messages were given by the pastor and Mrs. Harris, all of which were recognized. Mrs. Harris gave a trumpet seance last week which was well attended. Another will be given this week. She is en route to Europe and is stopping here for a short time only, on account of a member of her party being taken ill."

J. E. Bower writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The First Church of the Soul held its closing services Sunday evening, June 19, the Society of Earnest Workers uniting. It was a feast of good things. The mediums and officers in both societies are indefatigable workers, opening the eyes of the blind by their explanations of truths and moral teachings and demonstrating this to be a superior age in spiritual and intellectual development. Mrs. Jenkins of Canada was with us, and many others. Truly those in the crowded hall all seemed to appreciate the bread of life in words of love. We expect to open services again in September. The Earnest Workers expect to close their meetings next Sunday evening, June 26, for a time, this society uniting with them."

L. H. Kingsbury writes: "The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission famous for its grand entertainments, have arranged for a day's picnic on the Fourth of July, at Reissig's Grove, Riverside. Particular care has been taken to make this a grand success, as all kinds of games have been arranged for both young and old, with valuable prizes for the winners. Dancing from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. Hot dinners and other refreshments served on the grounds, so the friends can leave their baskets at home. Everybody is invited to this picnic. Tickets on sale at the hall and on the grounds."

Flora Marston writes from Dana, Ill.: "Grand lectures, full of beautiful truths were delivered under the auspices of the Dana Spiritualist Association by Mrs. Margaret E. Skeels, a trance medium of Onarga, Ill., a lady who once known, will never be forgotten; one who all her life has devoted her time to the good of others. The lectures were well attended and appreciated."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND—THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. Clara writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The First Church of the Soul closed its doors for the summer, with a union meeting, inviting all chartered societies to take part. The hall was packed to the doors to listen to the closing address by Mrs. Laura L. Crawford, who has proved to be a great favorite with this society. Remarks and messages by President Martin and officers and coworkers of the Spiritual Earnest Workers. We wish to publicly thank them for uniting with us on this occasion, for in unity there is strength; also wish to thank Mrs. Minnie Sharlow, president of the Sunflower Club, which is an auxiliary to the First Church of the Soul, for the effort put forth in making the social features a grand success. All officers and members of this society have proved loyal to the obligations they have taken, and perfect harmony exists, and much good has been done for our philosophy. This society will resume its meetings in September."

C. Kirchner, president, writes: "The noted speaker and scientific lecturer, Mrs. Irene Smith of Tacoma, Wash., will talk every Sunday afternoon at the Rising Sun Mission, until she leaves for the West. Our good sister has formed another developing class, and invites scholars to attend. Her teachings on development are of a very high order, and her studies should be taken up by all Spiritualists who are interested in the work. She holds her classes at the home of Sister Kirchner, 697 W. Madison street, Tuesday and Thursday evenings. Special class Friday evening."

Mrs. LeSieur writes: "The fourth benefit Band of Harmony (of the series) at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dexter, June 23, was well attended. Good music, recitations and fine speaking made a pleasing entertainment. We are all invited to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, for our next meeting, Thursday, July 7, 402 Orchard street, North Side."

A. S. Hudson writes: "Abolish hanging as a capital punishment. Let the life exit road be by way of carbonic acid gas, a swift and painless method. Let me relate an incident for argument and illustration. In a winery, perhaps in California, stood a large open tub, 12 to 15 feet deep. One day a workman put a ladder down inside and made the move to descend to the bottom. A little over half way he fell to the bottom dead. Another workman essayed the attempt to go down likewise; he fell lifeless to the floor. A third man concluded to take a lighted candle, and where the others fell the candle went out. This admonished of the presence of the deadly gas. Life was saved. Now, in place of the grewsome rope and gallows, why not adopt the improved plan of execution?"

Correspondent writes: "Mr. T. C. Kennerson and Mrs. Nellie M. Huntington were married by Rev. Josie K. Folsom at her home in St. Louis, Mo., last week—Wednesday. A number of people had assembled at a seance, and after arranging the circle, Mrs. Folsom requested the candidates for matrimony to arise, and then she proceeded to unite them in marriage with a beautiful ceremony. C. W. Stewart offered an appropriate invocation, and after the congratulations were extended the seance went on, and a number of the spirit relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Kennerson manifested and gave kind messages. Mrs. Kennerson's spirit husband came and gave them his blessing in a most beautiful manner. Mr. Kennerson had charge of a camp in Maine for several years, and was at Onset a long time, and four years at Lily Dale. Mrs. K. lives in St. Louis."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society were especially favored by a lecture from Mrs. Irene Smith on June 19, on the subject, 'Duality of Forces,' and I will say it was a lecture long to be remembered. Every man and woman should hear it, and profit by it. She and her guides are doing a great work. On July 3, Dr. Geo. B. Warne will lecture for us. No comments needed for him, as we all know we will get some thing good. Come out and let us fill the house. We have regular Sunday evening service all summer, at 8 p. m., in our hall at 319 East 55th street. Mrs. Kline will give messages. All will receive a cordial welcome."

Charles M. Jessup writes from Chesterfield, Ind.: "We regret very much the serious illness of Dr. G. N. Hilligoss, which compels him to send in his resignation as president of Camp Chesterfield. He was an able and willing worker for the camp and his many friends are sorry to hear of his resignation, but hope to have him with us a part of the camp at least. The vacancy will be filled by the vice-president, Judge Levi Mock, of Bluffton, Ind. Mr. P. B. Millspaugh was elected vice-president to succeed Judge Mock. The dining hall will be under the excellent management of B. G. Patterson, of Alexandria, Ind. Mr. Patterson is an experienced man in this line, which insures all who come first-class accommodations."

Harry J. Moore closed his engagement with the Englewood Spiritual Union last Sunday. Large and appreciative audiences have greeted him every Sunday evening. Several new members were enrolled and a debt of long standing has been liquidated. The Englewood Society is one of the best in the city of Chicago. It is chartered under the State Association and none but the best of speakers are employed and the mediums who give messages from time to time are considered reliable.

LIFE'S TRUE MEANING.

Is it happiness you're searching?
Then first free your soul,
For it may be still in darkness,
Though you're standing in the sun.

Learn that song, "The voice within me,"
Sing it—sing it every day,
Till at last you feel you need it,
Then you're on the crowning way.

What can always make me princely
And forever lead me upwards,
Is this blessed truth I realize:
I'm the child of the king of kings,
God, my Father always loves me.

But you ask, "How did I learn this?"
Not by books, but just by feeling.
Just a word in kindness spoken
May enlighten souls in darkness.

Think of that little violet
With its sweet and mighty fragrance,
What it does when you're discouraged;
Wonder, if it feels its maker.

Hate and worry are but symptoms
Of a wayward, foolish mind.
God is the Love that never dies
Therefore love that you may find Him
And be crowned with life immortal.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mrs. W. L. Pendleton: Q. I greatly desire to procure the works of Dr. Seiss, "Gospel of the Stars," and "Miracles in Stone." Where can I obtain them?

A. The first mentioned volume can be obtained of the publishers, Lutheran Pub. Society, Philadelphia, Pa.; the second of Henry T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., or the author may be directly addressed, 1338 Spring Garden street, Philadelphia, Pa. Doctor Seiss is a doctor of divinity, not of medicine; a voluminous writer and pastor of a church.

O. M. L.: It is not essential to join hands in forming a circle. Of course, if two members play the violin during the seance they form no part of the circle and should sit as far away as the room will permit. The other members can join hands without them. On the whole it would be better to omit the music, than to leave them out. When sitting around a table, it is preferable to place the hands with the palms on its surface, and touching hands is quite optional.

R. S.: Q. What is the danger from bite of rabid animals, and of what benefit is the Pasteur method cure?

A. It is stated by high authority that rabies or hydrophobia, is one of the rarest diseases. It is much talked of, and the supposed fatality and horrible symptoms appeal to the imagination and fill the minds of those exposed with terror.

The president of the New York Humane Society, John P. Haines, has set this matter right before the public and corrects many popular errors. He says that the idea that a "mad dog" shuns water is entirely opposed to facts. The dog seeks it and will plunge his head to the eyes, though he cannot drink. He never runs amuck," but jogs slowly along, paying no attention to anything unless interfered with. He never froths at the mouth. The "mad dog" has a thick, ropy, brown mucus clinging to his lips.

In thirty years, the New York Humane Society has cared for 160,000 dogs, and its officers state that they have never met a case of hydrophobia.

Profs. Dulles and Cohen of Philadelphia, and Prof. Suitzka of New York have declared that they have in all their practice met with no case of this disease. London Hospital, and St. George Hospital have records of thousands of cases of people bitten by dogs supposed to be mad, but have yet to see a single case of hydrophobia.

Rare as the disease is, there have been cases of it, and it may be developed in canine animals by provoking conditions. It is, however, so rare that there is less danger of it than of being struck by lightning in a clear day. The mad dog which frightens the country side and makes a startling item in the newspapers, has been chased and tortured, or is suffering agony from thirst. The bite of such a dog does not, nor cannot communcate hydrophobia. There may be a poisonous condition of the saliva, which may inoculate the blood of those bitten. The bite of human beings sometimes is poisonous. U. S. Surgeon Sternberg writes that he tested his own saliva on animals by inoculation, and in every case it produced death.

That the disease usually is produced by fear in those bitten is proved by the symptoms. The popular belief is that a person having hydrophobia, has spasms at the sight of water, and barks like a dog, because it is believed the dog avoids water and barks if afflicted. It is now known that the diseased dog eagerly seeks water, and rarely barks. Hence the disease as simulated by man is imitative; not what the disease is, but what it is supposed it ought to be.

Not one case in a thousand would be more injurious than a wound made by other means, were it not for this superstition. The bite is a punctured or lacerated wound, which of itself is more serious than any other, but with thorough cleansing and the use of disinfectants, is not alarming.

The Pasteur treatment proposes to inject into the blood a modified virus, which by its action makes the system immune to that introduced, or supposed to be introduced by the bite. It is really more liable to produce the genuine disease than to prevent it. It has become the custom, if anyone is bitten by cat or dog, for the consulted physician to start the patient at once to a Pasteur Institute. The most alarming fears are awakened and the nervous shock prostrating. The patient on arriving at the Institute is yet more deeply impressed with his terrible danger, and anxious to submit to any treatment which gives a hope of rescue. If the patient dies, it is said he began treatment too late. If he lives to return to his home, the treatment receives the credit.

Physicians of equal eminence as authority, are divided in opinion as to the efficacy of the Pasteur treatment. Some claim that it is a panacea, while others regard it as a pretension, and say that a new form of rabies is propagated, quite as fatal as the genuine.

As it is impossible to determine whether a person bitten will be affected or not, that they are not, after treatment at a Pasteur institution, proves nothing, and a thousand cases discharged as "cured," would leave the matter in exactly the same condition.

Those who fear their canine pets will "go mad," should see that they have abundance of water, not only in "dog days," but in winter time when ice covers the drinking pools. The noble example of Wentworth is worthy of imitation, and of more practical value than the library fad of Carnegie, who supplies buildings and books to the towns who get down in the dust as beggars. This humane man has bequeathed a part of his estate to furnish watering troughs or fountains for animals in 300 Massachusetts towns. In the name of those who cannot voice their satisfaction, a thousand thanks to this benefactor. How many thirsty animals will be refreshed at those fountains! We hazard the opinion that after these fountains are established there will be no case of "mad dog" in the state.

Protestant: Q. What is the real significance of Cardinal Satolli's coming to this country?

A. There has been much speculation as to the meaning of Cardinal Satolli's mission to this country. It is now heralded that it is for the intention of establishing a "Nunciature" in Washington. What does "Nunciature" signify? It is an ambiguous term to cover a dark plot to inveigle this government into diplomatic relations with the Vatican. This has been the dream of the pope for many a year. To be represented at Washington by an ambassador, and have a good Catholic sent to Rome from this country, would exalt Catholicism above all other religions. If this is the mission of the great cardinal the quicker he packs his grip and departs the better for his reputation. This country can no more recognize the Catholic church as a sovereign state, than it can the Methodist, the Presbyterian or the Mormon. There has been entirely too much interference by the pope with affairs of this government, and the members of congress who would favor such a project, or the president who would sanction it, would be relegated to the walks of private life as soon as the voters had opportunity to express their opinions. With a "Nunciature" to push the Catholic schemes, and a lobby to intrigue for the Protestant churches, religion is only too well represented at the national capital. There might be more hope of success for either, if the other was not present. Now they watch each other, and Liberalism flourishes by their antagonism.

RELIGIOUS MADNESS.

Will It Ever Come Again? Is the Question.

In the Broad sweep of its empires, Christianity has crushed "many a gem of purest ray." Other religions, including those of Babylon and Mexico, flourished on human sacrifices.

Mather and Parrish were able clergymen, and stood at the head of Boston culture, yet they led a legalized mob, some 206 years ago, in the execution of twenty or more blameless persons who had been cried out against as witches. The thirst for human sacrifices spread rapidly in a few months, until high officials were about to be involved as victims. An accused man turned and prosecuted his accusers for libel, and claimed a then large sum as damages. This straw turned the tide, and soon afterward 150 alleged witches were released from jail. An evident era of human sacrifices was thus arrested at a critical moment.

Parrish was driven from his pulpit six years afterward, but Mather stemmed the tide and urged a renewal of the persecution. Mather's voluminous writings on this and other subjects, had overrun New England and reached Europe. He was also an extreme advocate of inoculation against smallpox—a man of phenomenal energy and delusion who thought not at all, but fell into the delusions of other minds.

Mather and Parish, with the magistrate Stoughton as their tool, would have involved America in an era of religious madness. Witch-burning was at its height a century earlier in England and on the Continent. Had it succeeded here, we would now be under the union of church and state—"a painted ship on a painted sea." Spirit return would be unknown, excepting as an occasional freak.

At the age of 19, Joan of Arc, had passed on, exclaiming in the flames, "My voices did not deceive me; those voices were from God."

Liberty had been hunted around the world, as Thomas Paine expressed it in The Rights of Man.

Japan ordains religious liberty, but turns coolly from Christianity, because the latter would at once banish the ancestral worship and folklore which the Japanese have enjoyed for 2,500 years.

"There is only one spirit in the other world that we can communicate with," said a minister to his congregation, in my hearing, some years ago. That preacher has gone into comparative obscurity since then. He was a fiery and overflowing public speaker, with peculiar individuality.

Under the leadership of Paul and the other meddlesome apostles, the teachings of the Son of Man have been obscured under a varied Judaism. Judaism had much more contention and many mobs. Its madness has reappeared again and again, and has been the great destroyer of mankind; yet Jesus never censured a woman or child, and it seems probable that he was misinterpreted from the start.

Paul advocated female subjection, blood atonement, the fall of man, future punishment and the destruction of philosophy.

An era of good will is dawning over civilization; yet the disease of religious madness exists. If the wiser minds of both worlds can prevent it from concentrating, all will be well, but if it comes again, it would overthrow the barriers that surround liberty. It has been the most powerful and destructive force of the past.

MATERIALIZATION

Without Mediumistic Entrancement.

In The Progressive Thinker of May 21 I described the new phase of materialization, with no entrancement of the medium. It began nearly two years ago at Mr. Keeler's light circles. George Christy, the guide, gave specific directions about it. The lantern was placed at the end of the room opposite the cabinet. A cord running from the lantern to the cabinet, with pullies at the angles of the ceiling, enables the spirits to regulate the dight. This cord is not touched by Mr. Keeler, who sits in front of the cabinet. At times the light is turned entirely off. Once in the total darkness a small luminous cross appeared. Another time a luminous hand waved about my head as I sat in the battery beside Mr. Keeler. It patted my head, and when the light was turned on it still remained visible on my head.

At the beginning of the new phase of materialization only the face and bust of George Christy appeared. The face resembled a portrait in Mr. Keeler's possession, painted in half an hour by a spirit artist, as attested by Mr. Keeler, who witnessed the performance. The portrait hung in the parlor two stories below. The development of the materializing phase was slow. Other spirits appeared and were able to talk through the trumpet. But George had to do most of the talking. One evening, when the attendance was small and the manifestations feeble, George said to me, "Burr, come often and help me out." So then if there are any confederates in this kind of phenomena the chief one is myself, for I have sat beside Mr. Keeler oftener than any one else.

Soon after this phase began an aged Spiritualist, whose name I am forbidden to disclose, resolved to develop it, believing that all that had been or could be done with entranced mediumship could be done without entrancement. For that purpose he became an almost constant attendant.

Despite the presence of some skeptics at most of the seances, the gentleman has succeeded in bringing out full forms from the cabinet, as described by me heretofore, and he hopes for still better results.

Indeed he has already obtained other remarkable results. In April last he got a slate-written communication from a scholarly woman who used to transcribe and revise his manuscripts. It was in part as follows:

"It is not easy for me to write on the slates. * * * I hope soon to be able to go on with your transcribing. If you will bring your sheets to the light circles I will take them and rewrite them and return them to you until your life-story is completed."

Accordingly he brought to the seance a page of manuscript and passed it to another spirit who had served him in the same capacity, she promising to hand it to the later secretary for revision and transcription. It was passed over in my presence as I sat in the battery. It could not be found at the close of the seance. A week later it came back together with a revised copy in lead pencil.

Again the gentleman passed over a sheet of writing, and in a few days it came back with a transcription in ink.

Again, several sheets were passed over which came back revised and copied in ink.

And again sheets were taken away and returned transcribed in type-writing.

Query: Are lead pencils, pens and type-writers used in the spirit world? Or does the celestial secretary come to earth to procure stationery and the use of a type-writing machine?

The sanguine gentleman hopes to get the transcriptions returned in letter press. In that event I might add the query, Do they have printing presses in the world to come?

Before the passing over of manuscripts the same gentleman presented, at sundry times, bouquets of flowers to his celestial secretary. These likewise disappeared, and of course, were never returned.

WM. HENRY BURR.

Washington, D. C.

Letter From Forrest, Boston.

To the Editor:—I am pleased to note that my article regarding the late exposures of fraudulent mediums in this city, which appeared in your issue of May 14, has been the means of arousing the attention of many thinking Spiritualists to the lamentable conditions which prevail to-day only in this city (Boston) but in every other large city in the country, and particularly in California. The situation in fact is no worse here than elsewhere, except in regard to numbers, perhaps. There are probably more mediums in this city and vicinity than in any one city in the country, and consequently more who may be regarded as more or less "crooked."

I was a little surprised, and very much gratified to see in your last issue that Chicago has one medium, Mr. Wm. F. Langdon, who expresses himself as willing to be tested. He claims slate-writing, painting and partial materialization as among the phenomena that has been produced through his powers, and says he is willing to try the mosquito bar test suggested in my article. I sincerely hope arrangements will be made, preferably with Dr. Warne and under the auspices of your state association, to give Mr. Langdon a fair test, and that he will succeed in satisfying these people that such phenomena do really occur beyond the shadow of a doubt. The result of the test will be awaited with great interest all over the country.

During my two years' residence in Boston I have repeatedly endeavored to obtain a similar test of some one of the many mediums here who give phenomenal seances, but without success. Some profess willingness, but impose conditions that would render the test worthless, as a test. I am still hoping that one may be found who will for the sake of the cause, consent to prove his or her powers. As the $1,000 offer of our California friend meets with so many objections, I make no cash offer, but as a correspondent of The Progressive Thinker, I promise to give the readers of that journal a true, fair and impartial account of any seance that may be arranged to that end. And I also agree that the best of conditions will be given the medium. Letters addressed to me in care of The Progressive Thinker, will receive prompt attention.

In a future letter I shall endeavor to give The Progressive Thinker some interesting items regarding Spiritualism (or what passes for such) in Boston. We have all kinds of mediums here, and all kinds of seances and hall meetings, and the impressions gained by a "swing around the circle" may be the means of giving the reader some new ideas. HYPNOTISM.

II

Explanation of New Testament and Modern Manifestations.

Pope Leo XIII., a few years before his death advised Roman Catholics to study and know the Holy Ghost. A learned man who uses A. M. to his name, informs me that educated people, in general, do not know that Holy Ghost and modern hypnotism are the same force in nature.

Holy Ghost, Hypnotism, Witchcraft, (ancient) Magic and Spiritism are the same manifestations in nature. Persons learned in hypnotism can begin the study about the Holy Ghost and its use by Paul according to the record in the New Testament in Acts 13: "Then Paul, filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, and said, O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a time. And immediately there fell on him a mist and darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand."—Acts 13: 9-12.

The foregoing proves that Paul was filled with hypnotic force and used it in a hypnotic contest, and defeated or overcame another hypnotist named Bar Jesus.

Students of the Holy Ghost should carefully read and know the power of Peter as is recorded for us to know in Acts, 5: "But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?" etc. And Ananias hearing these words fell down, and gave up the ghost. And the young men arose, wound him up, and carried him out and buried him.

"And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in. Peter said to her, 'How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.' Then fell she down straightway at his feet and yielded up the ghost; and the young men came in and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband."—Acts 5: 3 to 11.

Thus is recorded a fact that Peter did kill a man and woman with Holy Ghost force, a force that is used and has been used by mankind along the ages, known by several other names which students of the Holy Ghost can and should know.

Holy Ghost force is the key that unlocks the real Christianity of the New Testament. Matthew, Mark and Luke call special attention to the Holy Ghost—each in about the same way—"wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."—Matt. 12: 21, 32.

Thus appears the fact that the foundation of the Christian religions is the Holy Ghost. Ignatius of Loyola knew how to use this force. Its use is the mystery of the power of the Society of Jesus, the Jesuits.

In the first few hundred years A. D.—of which I have a copy of the records—it is recorded that Jesus Christ, while a boy, had considerable power as a hypnotist. The people should know this fact—it is science. Egyptian and Greek gods knew hypnotism and used it ages before the Israelites were recorded as a separate family of persons. Gods of the Egyptians and Greeks were the leading creators, inventors of their age. Edison would have been a god in the age the same as we call him an inventor. A clear understanding of these subjects aids a person to read with more understanding Jesus Christ as a hypnotist.

"And when Jesus Christ was seven years of age, he was on a certain day with other boys about the same age, who made clay in form of birds. Jesus said to the boys, 'I will command those figures which I have made, to walk.' And immediately they moved; and when he commanded them to return, they returned. He had also made the figures of birds, which when he commanded to fly, did fly, and when he commanded to stand still, they stood still; and if he gave them food and drink, they did eat and drink.

"On another day Jesus Christ going out into the street, and seeing some boys who were met to play, joined himself to their company. But when they saw him, they hid themselves, and left him to seek for them; Jesus Christ came to the gate of a certain house, and asked some women who were standing there, where the boys were gone? And when they answered, that there was no one there, Jesus Christ said, Who are those whom ye see in the furnace? They answered, They were kids of three years old. Then Jesus cried out aloud, and said, come out hither, O ye kids to your shepherd; and presently the boys came forth like kids, and leaped about him; which when the women saw, they were exceedingly amazed and trembled. Jesus said, come hither, O boys, and we may go and play, and immediately, in the presence of these women, the kids were changed, and returned into the shape of boys."

"At length the son of Hanani coming to the fish-pool of Jesus to destroy it, the water vanished away, and Jesus Christ said to him, In like manner as this water has vanished, so shall thy life vanish; and presently the boy died." "Jesus Christ was sent to a teacher, but this school master, when he lift up his hand to whip Jesus Christ, had his hand presently withered, and he died." (From records in Boston Public Library.)

Please remember the Holy Ghost of ancient ages, of the New Testament Christians is the same force that is called Hypnotism.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1.

ORDINATION USAGES, AND OTHER MATTERS.

To the Editor:—I am pleased to announce through the columns of your valuable paper that the "Ordination Usages and Other Rites in the Religious Services of Spiritualism," are published in convenient booklet form, and that copies have been furnished the officers of state associations. Local societies having use for them will also receive copies during the summer. These usages are to go into effect September 1, 1904. They are not for the general public but for the use of such societies as are authorized to confer the rites of ordination upon the candidates for such service, and should be thoroughly studied by such societies.

Camp Life at St. Louis.

In answer to many inquiries concerning the possibility of securing tent accommodations during the season, in St. Louis, I am pleased to state that "A Canvass City" is opened by Liberals and Spiritualists for the purpose of providing camp facilities at a moderate price for those who desire such accommodations during their stay in St. Louis; full particulars concerning the matter can be secured from Dr. E. H. Green, 518 Commercial Building, St. Louis, Mo.

All is peaceful and pleasant in Washington; June has been a month of beauty and comfort; the N. S. A. Headquarters and home of the secretary have been graced by the presence of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Barrett. Mr. Barrett has been lecturing in Baltimore during the month, and has taken occasion to pay frequent visits to our home where his charming and talented wife is installed as our guest. All the world knows Mr. Barrett from his efficient and painstaking work as president of the N. S. A., and missionary; many know Mrs. Barrett from her clever writings, but we are sure she is yet to be more widely known, for with returning health, her keen brain and versatile pen will have greater power to manifest their skill.

June is rapidly waning and the hour for closing of the fund in the special collection for the Mediums' Relief is at hand; each day brings some welcome contributions, and gives encouragement to beneficiaries and managers alike.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A volume of the new edition of "The Arcana of Spiritualism," for which I was one of the many subscribers, has arrived, and on opening the same I was pleased to see as frontispiece the pleasant features of Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle greeting me, and on the opposite page the humble birth-place of the author until 12 years of age. Here, in this simple cottage the spirit messengers found a receptive mind, which they were able to use as an instrument for conveying to the world the wisdom which is now contained in over a dozen volumes; it seems to me, that the selection of these two pictures was a most happy one—a long train of thoughts passed through my mind while silently looking at them.

Comparing the old volume with the one of the new edition, I can only say, that with the exception of a few verbal changes, the size and contents of both are nearly the same; terseness and poetic beauty characterizes this as all the others of Hudson Tuttle's works. There are, however, valuable additions, which enhance the volume considerably; the chapter on the "Sub-conscious Self" receives a new and comprehensive treatment, as does the paragraph at the close of Chapter III, "What is Life." Throughout the volume there is stored up an abundance of knowledge many times worth the dollar which is paid for it.

As the German edition of Hudson Tuttle's "Philosophy of Spirit" meets with increasing success and many letters are received speaking in highest terms of approbation of that book, I was encouraged to render a German version of this new edition of "The Arcana of Spiritualism," which is at this time well under way, hoping thereby to promulgate the truth of Spiritualism among a class of thinkers, who prefer reading it in their idiom.

SOME TIME.

Last night, my darling, as you slept,
I thought I heard you sigh,
And to your little crib I crept,
And watched a space thereby;
And then I stooped and kissed your brow,
For, oh! I love you so—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

Some time when, in a darkened place
Where others come to weep,
Your eyes shall look upon a face
Calm in eternal sleep,
The voiceless lips, the wrinkled brow,
The patient smile shall show—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you may know.

Look backward, then, into the years,
And see me here to-night
See, oh, my darling, how the tears
Are falling as I write;
And feel once more upon your brow
The kiss of long ago—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

OUR ELEVEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

Remarkable Psychic Experiences.

The Future Revealed in a Most Remarkable Manner, Illustrating the Power of Prophecy.

M. Camille Flammarion in his remarkable work, "The Unknown," gives the following experience of a Dr. Liebault:

January 7, 1886.—There came to consult me to-day, at four o'clock in the afternoon M. S. de Ch——, for a nervous condition of much gravity. M. de Ch—— is much troubled in his mind about a law suit that is now going on, and other things involved in it. In 1879, on the 26th of December, as he was walking along one of the streets in Paris, he saw written on a door, "Madame Lenormand, female necromancer." Urged by curiosity, he, without reflection, entered the house, and, when there, was conducted into a darkened chamber. There he awaited Madame Lenormand, who having been told at once of his arrival, soon came in. Looking carefully at the palm of one of his hands, she said to him: "You will lose your father in a year on this very anniversary. Very soon you will be a soldier (he was then nineteen), but you will not remain long. You will marry young; have two children; and you will die when you are twenty-six years old."

This stupefying prophecy, which M. de Ch—— confided to several of his friends, and to some of his own family, he did not at first think much of; but when his father died on the 27th of December in the following year, after a short illness, and just a year after his son's interview with Madame Lenormand, the loss made a change in his incredulity. When he became a soldier—only for seven months—and when having been married shortly after, two children were born to him, when he was about twenty-six, he became overcome by fear, and thought he had only a short time to live. It was then that he came to see me to ask if it would not be possible to break the spell. For otherwise, as the first four prophecies had been accomplished, he thought the fifth would surely be fulfilled.

That day, and for several days, I tried to put M. de Ch—— into a deep magnetic sleep, in order that he should throw off the idea that was weighing on his spirits—that, namely, of his approaching death, which he calculated would take place on the 4th of February, which was his birthday. Madame Lenormand had told him nothing upon this point. I could not in any way put the young man to sleep—he was too agitated. Nevertheless, as he urged me to deliver him from the conviction that he must soon succumb (a most dangerous conviction, for one who has often seen convictions of this kind accomplish an auto-suggestion to the letter), I changed my treatment, and I recommended him to consult one of my somnambulists, an old man nearly seventy years of age, who was called the prophet, because, when I had put him into a magnetic sleep, he had, without an error, prophesied the exact time of his cure from rheumatism in his joints, which he had suffered from for four years; also the cure of his daughter. M. de Ch—— accepted my proposal with eagerness, and did not fail to come at the right time to the interview which I arranged for him. Having entered into rapport with the somnambulist, his first question was, "When shall I die?" "You will die forty-one years from now!" The effect of these words was marvelous. Immediately my patient became gay, talkative, and full of hope. When the 4th of February was past, the day he had dreaded, he thought himself saved.

It was then that some of those who heard of this sad history, agreed in concluding that there was nothing whatever true about it; that it was merely a post-hypnotic suggestion, and that the young man had imagined every thing. They were all wrong. Fate had decided on his destiny. He was to die.

I had forgotten all about him when, at the beginning of October, I received an announcement of his death, by which I learned that my unfortunate patient had died on September 30, 1885, in his twenty-sixth year—that is to say, while he was still twenty-six, as Madame Lenormand had predicted. And that no one may suppose there is any error on my part, I have preserved this letter among my papers. So there are two written testimonies to the fact.

A lady, one of my friends, Lady A., lived on the Champs Elysees. One evening in October, 1883, I had dined with her. Notwithstanding her large fortune she was a woman of business. Being very active, she gave but few hours to sleep. Every evening when her guests had departed she settled her accounts.

On this particular evening what was her astonishment, her terror, to find that the sum of 3,500 or 3,600 francs was missing from the inner pocket of the immense traveling bag in which she was in the habit of keeping her jewels and her money. The lock, however, had not been forced; the edges of the bag only had been a little frayed. Nevertheless, Lady A. was certain that about two o'clock in the afternoon she had opened the bag and paid a bill in the presence of her maid, and she was sure she had then put the money back in its usual place. In her distress she rang for her maid, who could give her no information, but who had had time to let the household know that a robbery had been committed. As a result of this, the thief, or thieves, if they were among the domestics, had had time to put their plunder in a place of safety.

At daylight the next day the commissary of police at the Rue Berryer was notified. Masters and servants were searched, the wardrobes, the closets, and the furniture. Naturally they found nothing. The commissary having completed his fruitless search, talked for a moment with Lady A. He asked her what were her own impressions as to the manner in which the robbery had been accomplished, and which among the servants were the least worthy of confidence.

Lady A., in enumerating her servants, begged the commissary to exclude from suspicion her second footman, a young man of eighteen or nineteen, very good looking, very respectful, very well acquainted with his business, whom they nicknamed Le Petit, not on account of his stature, for he was rather tall, but from a sentiment of familiar kindliness which his good qualities had obtained for him.

The morning had nearly all passed in these formalities, entirely without result, when, about eleven o'clock, Lady A. sent her youngest daughter's governess to my house to inform me of what had happened and to beg me to accompany her to the house of a clairvoyant, whose powers I had spoken highly of a few days before.

I did not myself know this clairvoyant, but a lady in my family had told me of one of her consultations, where she had distinguished herself in her predictions of the future. We went there. Seeing us together she wished to separate us. We made her understand that as we came for the same purpose we wished only one consultation. She may or may not have taken us for the same family. She asked us simply whether the affair in regard to which we came was specially near to the person of one or the other of us. I designated Mademoiselle C., for, as she lived in Lady A.'s apartment, she had really been the person nearest to the scene of the robbery.

Madame E., our clairvoyant, then brought a bowl filled with clear coffee, without sugar or cream, and begged Mademoiselle C. to breathe over it three times, after which the coffee was poured into another bowl, and the first was fitted over the second so that its contents passed partly into the new receiver, leaving only on its inner surface some of the coffee grounds, which, in consequence of the escape of the liquid, formed strange patterns which had no meaning for us, but in which the pythoness seemed to find something.

During this mysterious preparation it was necessary to entertain us, so that Madame E. shuffled her cards and began: 'Ah, but, it is a robbery, and a robbery committed by one of the persons in the house, and not by someone surreptitiously introduced from the outside."

This promised well. We admitted that what she stated was true. As to the thief, his identity was unfortunately omitted,

"Wait," said Mademe E., "I am now going to observe the coffee grounds, which must have formed their deposit." She seized the overturned bowl, and made Mademoiselle C. breathe upon it again three times, after which she took up her eyeglass. Then, as if she had taken part in the scene, she described to us, bit by bit, the topography of Lady A.'s apartment, without ever being mistaken either as to the bed-room or the salon. She saw pass in defile before us her seven servants, whose sexes and characteristics she exactly described. Then penetrating again into Lady A.'s chamber, she perceived a wardrobe which seemed to her very peculiar.

"She has," she repeated with astonishment, "a cupboard, the center of the door of which is covered with a mirror; and on each side of this principal part of the wardrobe there are two doors without glass; and all this contains * * * Oh, mon Dieu! * * * why is this wardrobe never closed? although it contains money, which is * * * in * * * What a strange object; not like a box. Ah, I have it! It is a traveling bag. What an idea, to put money in there; and, above all, how imprudent to leave the wardrobe open! The thieves know the bag well. They have not forced the lock. They have introduced some object into it in order to separate the two sides; then, with the help of scissors or pincers, they have extracted the money, which was in bank notes."

We let her go on speaking. All that this woman had told us confounded us by the truth of its details, even the most trivial. She stopped from fatigue. We wished to know more. We begged her, we implored her, to tell us which of the servants had committed this theft, since she had already assured us that it was one of the household.

She added that it was impossible for her to do this without bringing herself within reach of the French law, which cannot, and indeed ought not, allow anyone to be considered a criminal without proofs, and never by the aid of occult means. By force of insistence, however, she assured us that Lady A.'s money would never be recovered. This was very probable, since the thief could not be arrested for the robbery, and then, what was more surprising, she said that "two years later the criminal would suffer capital punishment."

Lady A., at the end of a fortnight, dismissed her house steward and her maid. La Petit, for some reason unknown to us, left Lady A. three or four weeks later. The money was never recovered; and a year later Lady A. set out for Egypt.

Two years after the event described, Lady A. received a summons from the Tribunal of the Seine, to appear in Paris as a witness. The person who committed the robbery in her house had been found. He had just been taken into custody. La Petit, gifted with so many excellent qualities, was no other than Marchandon, the murderer of Madame Cornet.

As is well known, he suffered capital punishment, as the clairvoyant in Le Rue Notre Dame de Loratte had told us, and during the trial that Le Petit had a brother who was a coachman in a large house in the Champs Elysees, very near Lady A.'s residence.

Le Petit, or Marchandon, since they are one and the same, made use of all his free moments when in Lady A.'s service to go to his brother's, for he was a great lover of horses. This, therefore, was the reason that Madame E. had insisted, in spite of our contradictions, that she had seen him repeatedly among horses. She had indeed really seen in this little detail what the incident of the trial revealed to us.

THEY COME IN DREAMS.

They come to me in dreams, betimes,
The dear ones gone before,
They sit beside me at the hearth,
Go out and in my door;
They rarely speak, but flit about
In each accustomed place,
The while it gives me joy to view
Each well-remembered face.

I waken with a sob of pain
That it is but a dream,
And yet they're near me all the day,
So real does it seem.
They comfort me through all the hours
Of labor, and of rest,
I feel that I have touched the hem
Of garments of the blest.

Dear dwellers on the distant shore;
Come near me when you may.
Let memories of my happy dreams
Make sweet the waking day.
With joys and griefs, and loving toil.
The years draw on apace,
When dreams shall be realities,
And meetings face to face.

A Cure for a Terrible Disease.

To the Editor:—As a physician (now out of practice) I am interested in your discussioon of cerebro spinal meningitis (spotted fever) in answer to an inquirer in your issue of June 25.

During the years of my practice I saw very little of cerebro spinal meningitis. For three years I was associated with a learned and very intelligent physician in a prosperous Ohio city.

During that time in our frequent discussions of diseases, their causes and cures, that one very serious malady came in for a large share of our attention. That Doctor has long since passed on to the realms of spirit; but I remember that he had had quite a large experience in treating that dread disease, and had been actively in practice during several severe invasions of it.

In his treatment he gave great attention to hygienic conditions; kept his patients nourished on albuminoids—milk eggs and beef juice, etc. His main reliance in the treatment was on the use of potassium permanganate, giving from the one-twentieth to one-eighth of a grain once an hour, for a time, then at lesser intervals.

This treatment in his hands was very successful; more so than the practice of any other physician whom I have ever known.

This was on the theory that the remedy is a great oxygen carrier, and through that it destroys the disease germ in the blood stream.

He was thoroughly of the opinion that the disease germ is a product of decaying animal matter.

The remedy should be exhibited in solid form combined with some inert substance enclosed in small capsules, so that it may not come in contact with any mucous surface where air can get to it.

I believe that it is almost a specific for the cure of that disease.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "poteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

A WORD TO YOU!

Your Contribution To the Mediums' Fund in the N. S. A. Treasury, be it large or small, will do more good than a donation to any other fund upon the books of the Association. Every medium, every speaker, and in fact every man and woman who loves the cause of Spiritualism should swell this fund with their gift. The appeal of Mrs. Longley is just and timely. If our cause is worth sustaining these dear old pioneer workers who have become invalids at their posts are worthy of our sweetest kindness and tenderest care. Let us help our helpless mediums, and prevent their dependence upon the common charity of a cold and prejudiced world. Send your contributions to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pa. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C., and do not delay.

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Secure these books at once. Mr. Grumbine's work is endorsed heartily by "The Banner of Light," because it knows the man and his works:

CLAIRVOYANCE—Cloth-bound, price, $1.50 (reduced from $2.00). Do You Know What Is Doing In the Ranks of Spiritualism To-day?

If Not It Is Very Evident that You Neither Take Nor Read the Spiritualist Papers.

This Is the Camp-Meeting Time and Much Is Being Done for Spiritualism that You Will Know Not Of.

Especially you should read the opinions of Master Minds in the OPEN COURT to be launched next week. You can not keep up with the Procession unless you read THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. The Open Court will be an Arena in which will be considered what is for the best interest of Spiritualism, on a variety of subjects.

Sundry Thoughts, Cullings and Criticisms.

SCINTILLATIONS BY DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

The time is ripe, and rotten ripe for change;
Then let it come. I have no dread of what
Is called for by the instinct of mankind;
Nor think I that God's world will fall apart
Because we tear a parchment more or less.
Truth is eternal, but her effluence,
With endless change is fitted to the hour;
Her mirror is turned forward to reflect
The promise of the future, not the past."
—James Russell Lowell.

"The Lord let the house of a brute to the soul of a man,
And the man said 'Am I your debtor?'
And the Lord—'Not yet; but make it as clean as you can,
And then I will let you a better.'"
—Tennyson.

"I belong to the great church that holds the world within its starlit aisles; that claims the great and good of every race and clime; that finds with joy the grain of gold in every creed, and floods with light and love the germs of good in every soul."

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples,—if ye have love one for another."—Jesus.

"I read the above passages many times before." Quite likely! And so, you have seen the sun in the heavens many times before. Are you any the worse for it? Are you not really healthier, better and happier for it? The sun, you know, is a great magnetic battery of heat and light—a mighty healer. So, if indisposed, retire daily to some upper room about 11 o'clock, lay aside your garments, push aside the curtains, and let the golden sunshine come directly upon your person. This, with will-power, deep breathing, hygienic foods, and proper bathing, will prove a very baptism of vigor and vital upbuilding to your organization. Try these remedies.

THIS WONDERFUL PERIOD OF TIME.

If time be measured by a succession of impressions and mental emotions rather than by hour-glass sands, it is certain that man lives both faster and longer than in the agone years. Is there not as much truth as poetry in these lines,—

"We live in thought, not breaths,
In feelings, not in figures on a dial."

The twentieth century came to us smiling from the cradle of the ages. It came afire with new life, and radiant with the spirit of progress. Great minds now occupy the thrones of science. Already the Thinker holds the sceptre and rules the world. He lifts the palm and gracefully wears the amaranth.

What astounding changes since Babylon, now being unearthed, fell! What developments since Caesar's time! When he was murdered by Brutus, only a few Romans knew of the crimson deed for months afterwards.

When Washington's body was laid to rest at Mt. Vernon, only tolling, gruffy stage-drivers carried the sad news over rocky hills and along muddy roads.

When the sad-eyed multitude stood by the dead body of Lincoln, the colored man's emancipator, no cable transmitted the sorrowful news to London, or over onto the Continent.

And so when the great American heart was quivering with intensest emotion at the fatal shot of that Buffalo assassin, there was no wireless telegraphy to flash the sorrow with lightning speed from city to city, and from ship to ship that whitens the ocean. Now railways, steamers, telegrams, cablegrams, wireless communications, and electro-wave transmissions span and literally girdle the globe. And yet these—all these scientific achievements pale away as childish minor matters before that tremendous fact—a FUTURE LIFE DEMONSTRATED—demonstrated and clearly proven by the most irrefragible evidences. Let the whole earth shout for joy!

"WHAT HAVE SPIRITS REVEALED?"

Such is the startling heading of an article in London "Light" of June 4th, wherein "Inquirer" informs us that Dr. Sullivan in his London Alliance address to Spiritualists, said that "Nothing I have read or heard throws light on these, the most interesting problem of all—the moral and spiritual life of departed souls."

Drawing the natural inference, the above paragraph struck me as being very peculiar. And yet, I can well understand how those in their early investigation of Spiritualism should have staggeringly take this position; and for the reason that psychological clairvoyants in their descriptions of celestial scenery and spirits occupying different spheres differ in their communications—differ something as touring American journalists differ in describing London, or social life in Paris. They necessarily see from varied moral altitudes.

And yet, Spiritualists unitedly agree in some, I may say very many of the most important matters, "throwing light upon the moral and spiritual life of departed souls." While conversing with dwellers in the invisible world for over half a century, and conscious of their presence every day of my life, I have this to say—saying it of course for myself only: Spirits have revealed, or satisfactorily settled for me the following subjects beyond question:

1. Man continues his conscious individual life after the event called death.

2. He takes with him consciousness, memory, intellectual and moral attainments—in a word his personality.

3. His life in the invisible realms is just as real, and more spiritually substantial, than it was in his mortal life.

4. The future world affords equal opportunities to all and brighter, better facilities for progress than does this selfish, warring world.

5. Man as a thinking sensitive being, is inspired by higher, unseen intelligences, and is also subject to low obsessional influences from the Tartarean spheres of darkness.

6. Within the physical body there is a soul-body, the intermediary between the Ego, the immortal spirit and the coarser physical body.

7. The future life is a conscious, breathing, thinking, acting, exploring, discovering, unfolding life, and all the good, the true and the beautiful gained and outlived here, is retained beyond death's peaceful river.

SPIRITUAL SPIRITUALISM.

Doubtless, there are no dead atoms. Certainly there are no dead languages. The vitality of the old appears in the new. Language, a living thing, grows as it travels, leaving its mark, and is marked by every civilized country through which it passes. And critically analyzed, all languages abound in prefixes, suffixes and contraries. They must, in order to express the soul's varied and varying emotions. And so we have such words as light and darkness; virtue and vice, Spiritualism and materialism, optimism and pessimism.

THE PINCHED-FACED PESSIMIST.

The pass-word of the pessimist is "fear." He has not attained the apostolic altitude enabling him to say, "Perfect love casteth out all fear." He does not trust, but rather worries. He looks backward, something as crabs crawl. He sighs in minor tones, "It might have been."

The optimist smiles away his sorrows, defies defeat, and sings the sunny-souled song of hope, and trust, and immortality.

The pessimist sees little or no progress in the world. Leaping across ages into prehistoric periods, he there finds, or dreams that he finds the golden age. The dreamed-of, submerged Atlantis is his ideal. He sees then the Theosophists' 'third eye' in the back of human heads, and wonders why everybody like himself does not theoretically squint through it.

Is there no progress?

We need not dig in the mud of the Nile, need not tread the old galleries of Europe, need not climb fossil-shingled mountains in oriental lands, or ransack medieval castles to settle this question. Let us look at our native country. In the year 1816 there were 1,984 American citizens confined in jail—"Debtors' Jails"—in New York, and among them several widows. Their only crimes were that through misfortunes, or other causes, they could not pay their debts. In 1835 William Lloyd Garrison, the great anti-slavery agitator, was dragged along Washington street, Boston, with a rope around his neck to be hanged by a mob. He was rescued by the police and lodged in jail for protection. And yet he lived to see slavery die on blood-stained battlefields.

In 1832 Miss Prudence Crandall, a refined and cultured young lady of Canterbury, Conn., was persecuted for educating colored girls. Later she was lodged in jail for this alleged crime. Is there no progress?

ARE THERE NO EVIL SPIRITS? BILLY-THE-KID.

While rooming in the Glen Dell Hotel, San Diego, last winter I met that intelligent Arizona Spiritualist, W. McGregor Smyth, who saw that Mexican outlaw just after he had been shot, Billy-the-Kid, as he was called. This roving hater of humanity boasted of stealing horses, of drunken brawls, breaking open safes, holding up stages, destroying virtue and of committing twenty-seven murders—finally robbing and killing an Arizona miner, and being closely pursued by the officers, he raised his revolver to shoot, when the pursuing sheriff, being the quickest, shot him down, and so forced him by the revolver into the world of spirits, and that, too, when his whole being was aflame with malice, revenge and murder, with the crimson record of blood and murder upon him.

Now then did that bullet transform him into a beautiful character? Did that shot save him? Did those death-spasms fit him for the ecstasy of angelic fellowship? Does not identity persist beyond the grave? Will, or will not this malicious, murderous Mexican know himself over there? Will he be conscious, remembering his crimes? He was certainly intensely depraved and madly wicked in this life, his last thoughts being revenge and murder.

Tell us then, O certain spiritists (I spare them their names), what chemical, sin-cleansing disinfectant—what goat, kid, Christly-serum or fiery bullet—what psychological legerdemain, or miraculous manipulations were infused, INJECTED into this half-breed, murderous Mexican monster, transforming him in the twinkling of an eye into a peaceful, kind and good spirit, white as the beautiful snow? If he was not an EVIL SPIRIT after death, if he was immediately joyous and jubilant with happiness, then he should triumphantly shout, "BLESSED BE ROBBERIES AND RAPES, AND RIFLES, AND ARSONS, AND BURGLARIES, AND MURDERS, AND REVOLVERS, FOR THEY HAVE BEEN THE MEANS, THE EFFECTIVE MEANS OF TRANSPLANTING ME INTO THIS SHIMMERING, SUNNY SUMMERLAND OF GORGEOUS BEAUTY AND BLESSEDNESS." But is this Spiritualism—is this the Spiritualist philosophy? Does it correspond with messages from exalted spirits? Do our illustious lecturers and writers teach this doctrine? NO. A thousand times no!

Gustave Marx, one of the car-barn bandits of Chicago, confessed to the commission of five murders. On his way to the scaffold he is reported to have cursed the prison officials, cursed religion, cursed heaven, cursed mankind and had previously attempted to commit suicide in his cell. He further said that he would "die game." Did he die into glory galore?

Think of the pages written in proof, and of the platform expressed dogma repeated and re-repeated by certain spiritists that there are "no evil-disposed—no evil spirits in the spirit world;" and then think of the mad war now raging in the east! Think of the blood-inspired crusades—think of the millions of religious butcheries—think of the high-handed political villanies, briberies, arsons, kidnapings, dynamitings, assassinations, drunkenness and cold-blooded, premeditated murders that blacken the pages of our daily journals, and these—all these black-hearted, malicious, murderous mortals swept yearly into the world invisible—and yet, there "are no evil spirits!" Such assertions to me are not only false and irrationally absurd, but they are wild chimeras, and poor ponderous illusions. Such assertions, I repeat, made without a show of reasons given, made right in the face of the facts uttered by hundreds of intelligent clairvoyants, witnessing the workings of these undeveloped evil-minded spirits, and right in the face, also, of the repeated testimonies of thousands upon thousands of exalted spirits themselves, through their conscious and unconscious instruments, are to me as painful as irrational.

Hudson Tuttle, writing in "Medium and Daybreak," London, March 11, 1894, says: "I was sitting with a circle of friends around a large walnut dining table, which was moving in response to questions. The intelligence claimed to be an Indian, and to the request said he would sketch his own portrait by hand. I held a piece of chalk, the size of a small marble and automatically my hand drew a grotesque portrait. We all laughed, and my father, who had quitted the table and seated himself on the opposite side of the room, said: "It looks like Satan." Instantly my mind, from light and pleasant thoughts was changed to fierce and unutterable hatred, anger turned the light to bloody redness and TO KILL WAS AN UNCONTROLLABLE DESIRE, under which I threw the chalk with the precison of a bullet hitting the offender in the center of the forehead with a force that shattered the chalk to pieces. Had it been larger, serious influences would have resulted. Of course the seance was at an end, but I could not escape the terrible influence for the evening. The study of this seance, snowed me the danger which menaced the sensitive and gave the KEY TO A CLASS OF CRIMES THAT HAD HITHERTO REMAINED INEXPLICABLE." Mark these telling words of Hudson Tuttle—"anger," "fierce, unutterable hatred," "uncontrollable desire to kill," "the terrible influence" and the "key given to a hitherto INEXPLICABLE CLASS OF CRIMES."

What changed friend Tuttle's mind like a flash into "fierce, unutterable hatred?" It could not have been the measles, nor dyspepsia, nor epilepsy, nor any physiological lesion. What was it then, if not the influence of an evil—evil-disposed spirit?

And yet, we are told that there are no evil spirits! The mad automatic hurling of this "piece of chalk" to a father's head with the desire to "kill" seems to me to be something more than "a diakka prank of a mischievous college boy."

Further, does not this phrase of Hudson Tuttle—"inexplicable class of CRIMES" forcibly remind us of that terrific storm-center caused by that book, "The Great Psychological Crime," which called down such a thundering avalanche of criticisms, some of which were not excessively tender nor "pretty." Nevertheless, Spiritualism lived. Great is my faith. Beloved, have no fears. A good deal of the froth and fuss and fraud masquerading under the name of Spirtualism ought to die—and that right speedily.

THE CHURCH, SLAVERY AND PROGRESS.

In the Charleston "Courier" appeared the following in 1835: "Field negroes by Thomas Gadston. On Tuesday, the 7ith inst., will be sold at the north of the exchange, at 10 o'clock a. m., a prime gang of ten negroes, accustomed to the culture of cotton and provisions, belonging to the Evangelical Church, in Christ Church parish."

In the Savannah "Republican" appeared the following item: "Also, at the time and place, the following negro slaves, to wit: Charles, Deggy, Antoinett, Dany, September, Maria, Jenny, and Isaac—levied as the property of Henry L. Hall, to satisfy a mortgage, issued out of McIntosh Superior Court in favor of the board of directors of the THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY of the Synod of Southern Carolina and Georgia, said Henry L. Hall. Conditions cash."

Here is another: "On the first Monday of February next, will be put up at public auction, before the Court House, the following property belonging to the estate of the late Rev. Dr. Furman, viz.: a plantation or tract of land, on and in the Watereeswamp; a tract of the first quality of fine land on the waters of the Black River. A lot of land in the town of Camden. A library of a miscellaneous character, chiefly theological. Twenty-seven negroes, some of them very prime. Two mules, one horse and an old wagon."

Mark well—the wagon was "old," but the negroes were "prime." Just consider a moment! Here land, a THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, OLD WAGON, NEGROES and MULES, all classed together for sale. Do not think I am casting reflections upon the South, for I am not. The proud Empire State, New York, used to be a slave state. Nearly fifty years ago when living and lecturing here in Battle Creek I frequently saw and heard that noted negress orator, "Old Sojourner Truth," as she was called, who was forty years a slave. Think of it—a chattel slave bought and sold in New York. Is there no progress?

And England need put on no lofty airs of political purity or social superiority, for she was once a slave-holding country. We quote the following from a recent number of "London Light":

"Until 1770, Christian England was not only a slave-holding country but a slave-country. Here is the proof: In the issue of the 'Gazetteer' dated April 18, 1769, there was advertised For Sale at the Bull-and-Gate Inn, Holborn, a 'well-made, good-tempered Black Boy.' And in the 'Public Advertiser' for November 28, 1769, the following advertisement appeared: To Be Sold, a Black Girl, the property of J—— B——, eleven years old, who is tolerably handy, works at her needle tolerably, and speaks English tolerably well; is of an excellent temper, and willing disposition. Inquire of Mr. Owen, at the Angel Inn, behind St. Clement's Church, in the Strand.'"

Though America and English speaking nations have abolished physical slavery, is there no churchianic slavery? Are there no labor slaves? There is a mighty work yet to be done in the line of freedom, opportunity and education.

CAN OBSESSING SPIRITS LEAD TO VICE AND CRIME?

When the controvery relating to "The Great Psychological Crime" was raging at fever heat a prominent author published the following paragraph in The Thinker

"I deny utterly and for all time that individuals are led into evil and crimes by persons in the other world. I know the pranks and college-boy mischievousness of 'Diakka'—but, even for them and all such, I know that the police regulations of the other world are adequate and universally effective."

It will be observed at a glance that this writer furnished no reasons. His position of denial rested solely upon a bare assertion. The statements, or assertions of hundreds of other psychics to the contrary, are to the masses just as authoritative. Truth and not personality must be and is in all well-balanced minds, authority.

Contrary to the above position of this writer, I "POSITIVELY KNOW" and "FOR ALL TIME" that "INDIVIDUALS ARE LED" INTO ERROR AND EVIL BY SELFISH, UNPRINCIPLED INTELLIGENCES IN THE OTHER WORLD. Logically this must be so if the lower spirit-world spheres have any influence upon the inhabitants of this world.

In all sincerity I further KNOW that the "police regulations" (if there be such regulations) in the other world are "not adequate and universally effective." In fact, I am inclined, after fifty-six or fifty-seven years' experience in Spiritualism to believe that these assumed "police regulations" are quite as carelessly and shabbily administered over there as they are in this world of city hold-ups, conflicts, murders and dark, destructive crimes. In mortal city-life policemen are most absent when most needed.

"How can we reason," said Socrates, "but from what we know?" How do I know that there "evil spirits" in the world invisible obsessing human beings? I know it by conscious sensitiveness, know it by my observations, by my personal experiences, by my sense perceptions, by my intuition, by my highest judgment, by my psychic clairvoyance, and by the consensus of exalted spirits' testimonies.

I am now reminded that a number of years ago I knew a very intelligent family in Oswego, N. Y., who came into Spiritualism through Universalism. Their only daughter, a cultured and refined young lady, became a planchette writer, then a trance speaker and a little later she gave fine tests. The family were delighted and invited neighbors were highly pleased. But soon some frivolous and false communications were received. These degenerated into downright falsehoods. It was evident that another control had entranced her. This invisible presence seemed to shadow her night and day. Returning one night from a social party she was seized by a strange positive influence, becoming rude, vulgar and profane. This spirit called for tobacco and whisky, talking in a jolly Irish brogue. The father begged of him to be decent and respectful. Again he called for stimulants. Being refused tobacco and liquors, he became furiously angry, and using the young lady's hand automatically struck the mother over the eye and upon the cheek, KNOCKING HER DOWN; when the father and a neighbor seized the demon-controlled daughter and forcibly held her till this evil spirit had left. Becoming conscious, the young lady was shocked, chagrined at her tobacco-stained lips, and was nervously prostrated for days; while the good old mother, wearing a black eye for weeks, considered that SPIRIT BLOW something more than a gentle summerland tap from a good, angelic spirit.

A brilliant writer in "London Light" said not long since "Does any sensible person imagine that we can send thousands upon thousands over there, from our earth every year, mostly fools or worse, and not store up evil in that other world?" And the able, outspoken editor of The Progressive Thinker said in his columns a few months ago that "This matter of obsessions will not down." Emphatically it will not: and for the reason that it is a fact, though sad, it is a clear, well-established fact; and one, too, that some spiritists flippantly deny, exclaiming, "Oh! I do not believe it—I have never seen any of these obsessions!" Quite likely you have not—and blind men have not seen the sun. But what blind men or what YOU have not seen in your little, narrow, pent-up sphere of life, is of very little consequence. Negotiations prove nothing. Agnostics, writing or talking upon any subject, should be exceedingly modest.

It might not be amiss for me to here say that I have had in preparation for two or three years a book upon the subject of Obsessions—Demoniac influences and the reign of Undeveloped Spirits manifest in this and foreign countries. This exhaustive work, of about four hundred pages, is now in the binder's hands and will be ready for the public in a few weeks. These obsessional controls and similar questions must be candidly, bravely met by Spiritualist as well as by candid investigators and carping critics.

THE CORRECT VERSION.

The True Character of "One Behind the Prison Bars" Vividly Portrayed.

He Misled the Editor by His "Spirit" Communication--His Own Personal Ingenious Scheme to Mislead.

To the Editor:—In the article "From Behind Prison Bars," in The Progressive Thinker, the part referring to myself, I wish to say is an absolute falsehood, as I at the time mentioned could only have been a child of 13 years of age. William Stansbury was 34 or 34 years of age, and such a union would have been utterly absurd and impossible.

In regard to "Baby Ella," supposedly controlling this prisoner, she never called me "Mamma," nor "Mamma Mabel."

This article I would like published that all of the many who read this may know that such statements are utterly false. Those wishing to know more of this prisoner's character may obtain my address from the editor. Yours truly, MABEL.

To the Editor:—The letter printed conspicuously on the first page of The Progressive Thinker, "From Behind the Bars," contains statements that are false, malicious and libelous; and so intended to be, against the good name of myself and family. The reference to "My friend Mabel," "who afterward became my wife," is false and misleading. My daughter Mabel was not yet 14 years of age, a sick and delicate child, and the possibility of marriage was preposterous, and there is no record or evidence, or relationship of any kind that would tend to even hint of such an absurdity.

Referring to "Spirit Daughter Ella," at the trumpet seance, and the reference to "Mamma Mabel" insinuating as above, and through the claimed spirit control of him called her "My Mabel," using baby dialect, from which he changed "My Mabel" to "Mamma Mabel" to mislead. We have reasons to doubt even the existence of a spirit "Ella," on account of numerous other similar claims. For instance, the wife "Nellie," supposed mother of "Baby Ella," was claimed to control the writer of "From Behind the Prison Bars," was proven during the trial, to be living in Chicago, and who now repudiates the name and unfortunate relationship, the prisoner having deserted her, leaving her with a young son, as shown by the authorities, whom he also claimed to be in spirit, and controlled him, and who is now about 17 years of age and residing with his mother in Chicago.

Referring to the prisoner's "home" at Erie, Pa., it is shown by the criminal record that he practiced the same career of infamy that he did in Detroit, under the name of "Wm. Simpson," where he was taken into custody, but was given over to the Detroit authorities, because the infamy of his offense against an adopted child of 10 years was so heinous that his conviction would insure punishment to suit the enormity of his crime.

He was sentenced to imprisonment for not less than 24 or more than 25 years, and the anathus of court, jury, press and public, as having received his just deserts. I am positive that the motive of the publication in The Progressive Thinker was intended to disgrace and degrade a member of my family because of our testimony on behalf of justice, against him at the trial. This attempt to disgrace my family was done through and under the cover of Spiritualism. The prisoner claimed also that the crime for which he is now serving sentence was done under spirit control.

I refer to the above facts to show the baseness of the character of the prisoner, whose statements are made through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, as a source of promulgation of the truths of Spiritualism as unfit, indiscreet, and unworthy of notice, and should not have been published without investigation. MR. G.

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.

Some Curious Views from the Standpoint of Walter De Voe.

All substance and all space is intelligent. Everything that ever happened is remembered by the Mind of things. The Mind everywhere present never forgets the acts done in its presence. Even the "walls have ears" and a bit of plaster from a room in Pompeii will reveal to the awakened sense of a psychic all that transpired in that room hundreds of years ago.

Spirits can read in the mental atmosphere somewhat of the records stored there of mortal happenings, but not so clearly or truly as awakened souls. All spirits have not become awakened. Awakened souls can see in the atmosphere of Waterloo or Gettysburg the pictures of all that happened there, both on the material and spiritual side. In spirit they can walk again with the Christ and see all the wonders of that immaculate life of God manifest in the flesh. And when they have pupils on the earth plane sufficiently unfolded, this spiritual knowledge may be imparted to the world.

The following was given as truth from the mountain heights of wisdom where dwell those who love the Christ as the supreme individualization of Divinity. The words are mine.

A soul was born from the immaculate glory of the Father's presence, born like many other mystic souls from the central light of love of eternity, the Father-Mother God. For ages that soul lived in the most sublimely luminous kingdom of the Father, growing in wisdom and power, passing through all stages of soul education and experience in the heavenly worlds until he attained the supreme power of Mastery, developing from a soul-spark of deific consciousness into an innocent cherub, such as always behold the face of the Good Father, from a cherub to the self-conscious beauty and grace of an angel; from an angel to the wisdom and power of those who manifest the will of the Father in all heavenly realms of life; and then from an archangel to the next grand degree of godhood through the path of incarnation, through sacrificing his high position in bliss to use his divine powers of soul for the education of humanity and the alleviation of suffering. The ways to the heights of godhood are as varied as the needs and temperaments of souls; no two souls travel exactly the same path in their upward progression. And to the souls born from Divinity the path of incarnation in the flesh is not a necessity but a choice. Only an infinitesimal number of the great myriad of souls continually being born from the Divine Nature ever seek incarnation; they find all the experience and wisdom necessary for their development of self-conscious Divinity in the various realms of spiritual activity above the mortal plane.

But the earth needed this grand soul and the truth in his possession as it needed those other mighty souls of light, Buddha, Zoroaster and Krishna, who before him had compassion on humanity.

He felt the love of the Father-Mother God within him inspiring him to go to earth and seek for those who were lost in the ignorance and sin of the mortal realm: those souls who were so bewildered by the darkness of the lower realms that they reincarnated over and over and could not seem to find the path that led back to the realms of light. There is much light and much freedom in the spirit realms close to the earth at the present time, and the dominion of darkness that surrounded the earth has been scattered and dissipated to a large degree, thanks to the wisdom and love of the heavenly hosts and to Christ, their leader.

The Father sent him. He heeded love's monition. He came and conquered the occult laws and the false beliefs that held souls in chains of ignorance. Among these occult beliefs that the selfish priesthood had woven into the mind of earth was that age old belief in the necessity of reincarnating as a means of redemption, the belief that justice could be appeased only by sacrifice and pain. The spirit priesthood held that binding belief over spirits coming up from earth (as they do to some degree to this day) and compelled them to reincarnate without gaining wisdom and progression in the spirit spheres, in order that they might perpetuate their selfish power on earth.

He himself, a form of truth, descended into those dark paths of mortal ignorance and led captivity in a mysterious way which mortals will never comprehend, bringing the freeing light of love not only to the conscious mind of mortals but also to dark mortal spirit spheres, the cause world, where the cause for mortal sorrow was rooted, where the principalities and powers of darkness were enthroned over humanity. Surrounded by the mightiest souls in heaven he fought the spirit priesthood as well as their counterparts on the earth.

If mortals could but see as the angels see the mighty work that was accomplished by that soul, they would worship and praise him with true appreciation as he is adored by angels and archangels in the higher heavens.

It is recorded of all the saviors worshipped by humanity that they were immaculately conceived. Herein is a spiritual mystery that like many other spiritual truths means nothing when taken in a literal sense.

After that archangel soul decided to enter the physical world through human birth he must involve his soul powers and veil the mighty light in his possession in order to make himself negative enough to come in touch with the lower planes, and then after that long period of involution he must seek for a suitable birthplace and for parents who would provide him with mental and physical characteristics that would offer the least resistance to the unfoldment of his soul after it was born in the physical body He found parents with psychic faculties unfolded and mediumistic powers developed to that degree that could see him and be impressed by his angelic presence to fulfill the divine laws of heredity whereby the best elements of their natures were conserved for the conception of a child that would have the intense spiritual devotion and aspiration that the parents had previous to its conception, as the dominant characteristics of its mortal nature; and when we think of the mighty overshadowing of the Holy Spirit that radiated from his soul, of the love and power focussed on the tiny germ that was to grow into a body for his indwelling, and of the angelic company gathered about him, making all the subjective atmosphere luminous with the light of heaven, we do not wonder that the conception of his body was called immaculate

O this will become a heavenly world peopled with a glorious race of beings when children are conceived in pure love, and the aspirations of the parents draw the emanations of the angels to spiritualize all parts of the nature that is to become the soul's instrument for physical expression

Parents must be educated in the laws of heredity; they must understand how sacred is their work, and what a tremendous power is theirs to direct by prenatal culture the future character and destiny of their children; that if they want ideal children they must be ideal parents.

When parents fulfill the conditions leading to immaculate conception by devoted spiritual lives their prayers for strong and great souls will be heard and answered by heaven, and those wonderful souls in heaven who are now repelled by the animal like generation of humanity will be attracted to enlightened parents, bringing to the world a wisdom and power that will inaugurate the golden age.

But souls incarnate can gain dominion over hereditary laws by understanding that their true and most powerful self is of God, by faith in this Christ within, by denying those limiting qualities derived from mortal parents and affirming the divine attributes of the soul which they wish to bring into conscious expression.

Every soul is wonderful in its inner divine attributes, be it of little or great power in the expression of those attributes, and even a young soul may by devotion to God draw power into expression that would shame mightier souls that are just drifting in the currents of mortal pleasure.

THE GRANDMA.

Old, old, the life behind her lay
Like a long country full of light;
She gazed there with the inner eye
For round her here was the falling night,
But turned across her path to see
What lovely splendor crowned the height!

And as the fates once trod on wool,
All sounds came muffled to her ears,
Yet still her fancy heard her tune
Of bubbling laughs, of frolic fears,
Of tender whisper in the dusk,
Grown tenderer because of tears.

The gay sweet spirit in her felt
The joyous movement of the dance,
Albeit her faltering feet refused
The tripping measure. If perchance
She sang, alas! the sad old voice
Was like one singing in a trance.

So fresh, so strong in all her thought
That by the cruel mirror spelled,
Or in the glass of young girls' eyes,
It seemed a phantom she beheld
Masked with gray shadows of gray lines,

And knowing then the soul in her
Swelled, ever swelled with fine increase
And essence of immortal youth;
So she possessed that soul in peace,
And sat the slow bright summer day,
Smiling and waiting her release.

A VISION.

I had slept but a moment,
Then awoke with a start
With pulses quickened,
And beating of heart.
A form was beside me,
Whose beauty and grace
The years intervening
Can never efface.

The face all aglow
With a spiritual light
Eyes soft and tender,
Radiant and bright
Then like a zephyr
In gauzy array,
So silently, softly,
Wafted away.

Long years have passed
Since that stranger so fair,
She whose beauty
And bright golden hair,
Left me more thoughtful
Of others, I ween.
O that I might know,
The vision then seen.

An Exceptionally Important Leaf From History.

"I ENJOIN AND REQUIRE THAT NO ECCLESIASTIC MISSIONARY OR MINISTER OF ANY SECT WHATEVER SHALL EVER HOLD OR EXECUTE ANY STATION OR DUTY WHATEVER IN SAID COLLEGE."—AN IMPORTANT LEAF FROM HISTORY REVIEWED ON SPECIAL REQUEST BY JUDGE PARISH B. LADD, IN SEARCHLIGHT.

After failure in an action of ejectment in the state court (as set forth in Searchlight), this case was brought on the equity side of the United States Circuit Court for the District of Philadelphia, to set aside a part of the will of Stephen Girard; Jones and Webster for plaintiffs, Binney and Sargant for defendants. Numerous grounds were alleged in the bill, but no allegations touching religious matters. After full hearing, the bill was dismissed, from which an appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court.

I now proceed to consider this matter, as per request of the editor of the Searchlight.

The right of a man to dispose of his property, to take effect after his death, rests on the well-settled rules of law of all civilized nations, dating back to the remotest ages. Chaldea and Egypt gave effect to it eight or more thousands of years ago. The only limitations on such a bequest are such as are provided by positive laws, and the public policy of the state. The instrument for such disposition is called a will. While the will in the case at bar was not attacked in the bill, nor in the circuit court, on religious grounds, such grounds, for the first time, were urged as being against public policy, in the supreme court.

When no objections are raised against a will on statutory grounds or public policy, the will must go to probate and its provisions carried out, in pursance of the express wishes of the testator. The real intent of the testator in all cases is to be the guide. To this the court must look for authority, and this intent must prevail, even though the rules of grammar or the ignoring of special words have to be discarded. Where there is no ambiguity, the words of the will are to control, otherwise evidence outside of the will may be used to explain ambiguous terms. In all cases, circumstances which were present when the will was made are to be considered, for it must be presumed that the testator made his will with reference to such things. Mr. Girard lived in Philadelphia, a very religious community, where laws for the punishment of blasphemy —offenses to the gods, to the priests, etc., were in force and where Christian sects were numerous, and as elsewhere, were imbued with hatred of each other, ever wrangling over their differences and stirring up controversial excitement. The Jews and other religionists were too few to be of any moment. Most others than Christians were indifferent or Freethinkers. What Mr. Girard's religious opinions were we cannot tell from the will. The attorneys in the case did not know, nor did the court care, for the law in such a case could not take cognizance of them. Mr. Girard employed one of the most able lawyers in Philadelphia to draw up his will. If the testator was an Atheist, or other Freethinker, acting under the advice of his attorney, he made the most liberal will that could stand under the laws and public policy of Pennsylvania. Other religions than Christianity, if they may be deemed sectarian, could hardly have provoked a thought in the mind of the testator. When he used the words in the will, "sect" and "sectarian," he undoubtedly applied them to Christianity. All of these things were so many circumstances to be considered in a contest over the will which gave birth to Girard College.

Out of his fortune of $7,500,000 all except $140,000 to relatives; $300,000 to the state; $116,000 to other charities, went to the endowment of the college.

In the contest Daniel Webster and his associate were acting the part of paid attorneys to overthrow the will, consequently they allowed their interests and that of their clients to get the better of their judgments, or at any rate, their logic did violence to the terms of the will, or as I look at it, was not warranted by the language of the will. That part of the will which bears on religious questions—all of which is necessary to consider here—stands as follows: "I enjoin and require that no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatever shall ever hold or execute any station or duty whatever in said college." Then follows the statement that no such person shall ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visitor within the premises appropriated to the purposes of said college. While not of so much moment as the first clause, it is this which so offends the ecclesia; it allowed Atheists and other Freethinkers to visit the grounds where the sacred hoof of the divine priesthood is forever forbidden to tread; not only had their dignity been insulted, but their opportunity to harass and disturb the quietude of the orphans had been denied them. The will contains the further important statement that the testator "does not mean to cast any reflection upon any sect or person, but as there is such a multitude of sects and such a diversity of opinions among them, I desire to keep the tender minds of the orphans who are to derive advantages from this bequest, free from the excitiment which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversies are so apt to produce." Then follows the statement that he desires to have the orphans instructed in the principles of morality, love of truth, sobriety and industry, leaving them free to adopt (in after years) such religious tenets as their matured reason may prefer. It is from the above statement that the intent of the donor must be determined. So much depends on the words "ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect" and even on the comma after missionary, that all this requires close scrutiny. The words "ecclesiastic and minister," when used in a religious sense, mean, substantially, the same—one devoted to church service—one who administers the rights of religion—a clergyman—a priest.

As to the word "missionary," he is one sent as delegated to teach religion; the meaning is quite different; he may, or may not be, an ecclesiastic or clergyman; but a layman.

Having presented the meaning of these words separately, I now proceed to consider them conjunctively, followed by the words, "of any sect," i. e., "I enjoin and request that no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect, shall hold or exercise any station or duty in said college." So far as this language is concerned, the case is changed from one thing to another by the comma after the word "missionary." If the three words, "ecclesiastic, missionary and minister," are to be governed by the word "sect," then it is sectarianism, only, which is to be shut out; but if the word "missionary" is not to be governed by the word "sect," then it stands alone and all missionaries, which may include lay teachers, are to be barred out. We find ourselves in such close quarters here that the comma after the word missionary, becomes important. When two or more words are used to mean one and the same thing, the comma, as in this case, should be used; otherwise the comma is omitted. As used in this case, the comma would seem to show that the words ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister, were meant to mean the same, and so, governed by the word "sect." But at this point we come to the well settled principles of law, that the rules of grammar, and even express words, must give way to the real intent, when that intent can be gathered from the entire context of the document. This brings me to that part of the will where the donor declares he means no reflection on any sect or person. Here sect or person are used without the comma, meaning neither the one nor the other. This shows that the lawyer who drew up the will used extreme caution in selecting just the words, and the punctuation desired. The donor then says: "As there are such a multitude of sects and such a diversity of opinions among them, I desire to keep the tender minds of the orphans . * * free from excitement which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversies are so apt to produce."

When this is taken and considered as a whole it seems quite clear that Mr. Girard intended to shut out nothing but sectarian controversies; to accomplish which, he had to shut out sectarians, missionaries and ministers, i. e., missionaries who were clergymen, for they are all classed as one. These men he concluded could not be admitted without engendering sectarian controversies and thereby producing excitement among the tender minds of the orphans, who should receive their education in peace and quietude, leaving the trustees free to permit the general principles or tenets of Christianity to be taught in the college, i. e., such as are held in common by all Christian sects, where no sectarianism can possibly arise. If the donor had intended to take the risk of the will being sustained, he could have inserted a clause forbidding the teaching of Christianity or the use of religious books in the college; but he did not do this. He must have known of the general prejudice at that time in the country against Freethought, and the intolerant spirit of the priesthood and Chrisians in general. In this he was evidently right, as appears from the dictum of Justice Story, who rendered the opinion of the supreme court on the appeal.

As before stated, no religious question was presented in the bill in the case. Hence there was no issue for trial before the court touching religious teachings or religious books to be used in the college, nor was any such question raised until the argument on appeal was had; but counsel went outside of the record and freely argued the religious matter, while the court sat and tolerated it, nor was this all, for in the decision the court went outside of the issues and took a hand in behalf of Christianity. All that was said by the court on this point was mere obiter dictum, binding on no one.

On the hearing on appeal, the counsel for the will took about the same view of the religious matter as I have herein expressed. But the judge, Story, who delivered the opinion, which was unanimous, seemed to be imbued with the intolerent spirit of Christianity, or in fear of the lash ecclesia, for in summing up the case he relieved himself of the following: "We are compelled to admit that Christianity is a part of the common law of the state (Pennsylvania), i. e., its divine origin and truth are admitted, therefore it is not to be maliciously and openly reviled and blasphemed against, to the annoyance of believers or the injury of the public (quoting a Pennsylvania case). He then says, "It is unnecessary for us to consider what would be the legal effect of a dovise in Pennsylvania for the establishment of a school or college for the propagation of Judaism, or Deism, or any other form of Infidelity." He then says, " such is not to be presumed. There must be plain, positive and express provisions, demonstrating not only that Christianity is not to be taught, but that it is to be impugned or repudiated." He further says, "Why may not the Bible, and especially the New Testament, without note or comment, be read and taught as divine revelation in the college; its general precepts expounded, its evidences explained, and its glorious principles of morality inculcated? What is there to prevent a work, not sectarian, upon the general evidence of Christianity, from being read and taught in the college by lay teachers?" Certainly there is nothing in the will that prescribes such studies. This, while mere dictum, is clearly in accord with the terms of the will; but as it is obiter dictum, it is no part of the law or decision in the case, nor is it to be taken as authority in any other case, whether arising under this will or otherwise. So it may be safely said that the question as to what religious books or teachings may be used in the college is still an open question, to be raised at any time when it is thought that the trustees are exceeding their powers. Since this case was decided, not only public opinion in general, but with many of the churches, has undergone material changes. What was at that time deemed to be the general opinion of the churches, is no longer so, for there are many vital tenets which were then held in common by the churches, that are no longer so held, except by particular sects; hence such are now sectarian, and on further, or a new hearing, would be ruled out of the college. In time, all of the doctrines and dogmas which are, even now, held to be general, will, as knowledge and liberality advance, become sectarian, thus barring all religious matters from the college.

The mills of the gods grind slow, so let us patiently await the grist.

THEGIRARD COLLEGE INIQUITY—BY DANIEL K. TENNEY.

The conduct of Girard College has given rise to much criticism by men who well know that the intention of its founder was to exclude the teaching of theology to orphan students who should enter its classes. About ten years after Girard's death, some of his heirs commenced a suit in equity in the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to set aside the will on various technical grounds, among others, that by its terms the teaching of the Christian religion was excluded from the college to be established in Philadelphia. The court sustained the will. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. Daniel Webster, the great lawyer, politician and statesman, was employed, among others, to defend the cause of the heirs, and did so with his usual ability, but was not successful. The court held the will valid.

The principal clause in the will, which was questioned, was as follows:

"I enjoin and require that no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatsoever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in the said college; nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visitor, within the premises appropriated to the purposes of said college.

"In making this restriction, I do not mean to cast any reflection upon any sect or person whatsoever; but, as there is such a multitude of sects, and such a diversity of opinion amongst them, I desire to keep the tender minds of the orphans, who are to derive advantage from this bequest, free from the excitement which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversy are so apt to produce; my desire is, that all the instructors and teachers in the college shall take pains to instill into the minds of the scholars the purest principles of morality, so that, on their entrance into active life, they may, from inclination and habit, evince benevolence towards their fellow creatures, and a love of truth, sobriety, and industry, adopting at the same time such religious tenets as their matured reason may enable them to prefer."

It was contended by Webster and other counsel that this clause was intended to exclude the teaching of Christianity in the contemplated college, and that therefore, the will should be held void. Upon this point Judy Story, on behalf of the court, stated its opinion as follows:

"The testator does not say that Christianity shall not be taught in the college. But only that no ecclesiastic of any sect shall hold or exercise any station or duty in the college. * * *

"Why may not the Bible, and especially the New Testament, without note or comment, be read and taught as a divine revelation in the college—its general precepts expounded, its evidences explained, and its glorious principles of morality inculcated? What is there to prevent a work, not sectarian, upon the general evidences of Christianity, from being read and taught in the college by lay teachers? Certainly there is nothing in the will that prescribes such studies. * * * It may well be asked, what is there in all this, which is positively enjoined, inconsistent with the spirit of truths of Christianity? Are not these truths all taught by Chrisianity, although it teaches much much more? Where can the purest principles of morality be learned so clearly or so perfectly as from the New Testament? Where are benevolence, the love of truth, sobriety, and industry so powerfully and irresistibly inculcated as in the sacred volume?

It will thus be seen that the will was not sufficiently specific in excluding the reading of the Bible and the teaching of theology. The lawyer who prepared the will was a little careless. Considering the spirit of the old times, when the opinion was rendered (1844) it is not surprising that the objection to the will, that it excluded the teaching of theology, was held untenable. Laymen, it was held, can lawfully teach theology in that college. Clergymen and ecclesiastics cannot. Acting upon this construction of the will, a church was long since erected upon the college grounds. Compulsory attendance is required. Licensed clergymen are not admited, but there is an array of theological instructors in it, equally diligent with those in any monastery or nunnery of the Dark Ages. The magnificent design of the noble founder of Girard College "to keep the tender minds of the orphans who are to derive advantage from this bequest, free from the excitement which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversy are so apt to produce" has been entirely overthrown. In its stead has been inaugurated a system equal to a full fledged Catholic service or a Methodist revival. The glory of the Lord controls! The manifest intention of the great philanthropist takes a back seat.

From what I learned on a visit to the great institution, many years ago, it really seemed to me that many of the religious ceremonies and observances carried on there were purely sectarian and could be successfully enjoined by proper legal proceedings. Unfortunately, however, the theological bee finds entrance to many judicial minds, and especially where judges are elected by the people. Politics and theology are inclined to go hand in hand at the polls. "All things to all men for the glory of God and for votes."

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT.

Says Christianity Is Not Source of Liberty—Unitarian Minister on Religion and Civilization.

"Civilization and Christianity" was the subject preached upon by the Rev. E. E. Newbert, of All Souls' Unitarian church, Indianapolis, Ind.

"Religion as an end in itself," he said, is sure to mean bigotry and fanaticism. India came under the curse and her civilization was arrested by religion. All Mohammedan lands have been blighted by the same curse. Too much religion has been the disease that has sapped Asia of her energies. Turn to the middle ages. The Christian religion took a like course for one thousand years.

"We talk of Christianizing the world. Do we hope to save the heathen by giving him the Bible and the Christian belief? Would a simple swapping of religious belief benefit Asia? Or does Asia need something else? I say no hurt of the Bible and the Christian belief when I say that these are not the source of civil and religious liberty. Freedom, the dignity of woman, the public school and the humanities bear the mark of the Anglo-Saxon. In the distant centuries the rough Teuton cherished an unusual affection and respect for woman. He made her his companion rather than his slave. In his wild poems and rough laws one finds the germ of later Shakspeares and Beethovens and Cromwells—the germ of that genius which has made his genius the richest in the world and kept his sons for one thousand years on every throne of Europe.

"Did Magna Charta come from the Bible or the Christian religion? No. Back of it is the Saxon's love of freedom. Spain was Christian at the time, but Spain has no Magna Charta. France was Christian, but Louis XI. granted no charter of liberties. Russia was Christian, but Peter the Great gave no pledge for the securing of civil liberty.

"In America and England education and civil and religious liberty go hand in hand with Christianity, so that we can not think of the one without the other. * * * South America is Christian in belief, but how great her ethical need! Cuba and Porto Rico are Christian, but poor in moral idea. Abyssinia has been Christian since the fourth century. Russia is Christian, and cruel. Her masses are no better than slaves.

"Shall the Christian missionary be our answer to the need of eastern Europe and Asia? They do not need more religion. They need the higher civilization. Religion arrested the development of China, nor would she gain by swapping it for another alien to her soil and climate and unsited to her temperament. China will be saved when she has a mind to go out and meet the world in commerce and the arts of civilized life. She is starting for freedom and progress when she decides to send her picked youths into the universities of western Europe and America. She needs to break with Confucianism but she does not need to adopt another faith.

"The ecclesiastical age is passing. Religious dogma will not again rule the world. Men are turning to life, desiring freedom, prosperity and happiness."

Herbert Spencer and George Eliot.

The great philosopher and the greatest of all woman novelists were fast friends from their first meeting. She said in one of her letters: "But for him my life would be desolate enough," and if Spencer had been a marrying man he would probably have made her his wife.

He always maintained, however, that men in delicate health, like himself, should not marry, despite Huxley's urgent and repeated advice that he should take "the wife cure." He said at another time that he might have married but had never met his ideal. It was he, however, who made her acquaintance with George Henry Lewes, whose influence on her life and work was of the first importance.

John Stuart Mill was an intimate friend of both Spencer and George Eliot. "Mill thinks the object of living is to learn and work," said Spencer, "but I think the object of learning and working is to live."—Exchange.

THE SPIRIT REALMS.

They Are in Touch With the Earth, and the Residents Thereof Are Continually Communicating With Mortals in Various Ways, in and out of the Church, in Spiritualism and out of It, Illustrating the Fact That No One Has a Patent Right on Spirit Manifestations.

Miss Marietta Holley, of "Josiah Allen's Wife" fame, believes in telepathy. Talking with a Sun reporter at the Hotel Kensington about her work, she said so and told why.

"There is not much to tell about my work," said Miss Holley. "I had none of the usual trouble getting it accepted. I sent several stories and poems, the poems in good English and the stories in dialect, to Elijah Bliss, president of the American Publishing Company. He sent back the poems and kept the short stories.

"'Write a book of the "Josiah Allen's Wife" stories,' he wrote me, 'and we will publish it.'

"That was thirty years ago. I have been writing dialect stories ever since. They won't have my good English," and a hurt look came into the authoress' big brown eyes. "That, too, in spite of the fact that the best judges liked my English. There was Whittier. He wrote me that my 'Gardner's Daughter,' a little poem of a few verses, was perfect. 'And,' he added, 'it does not stand alone in the book of poems, either.' It does seem strange," she lamented, "that they will make me go on and on writing dialect stories, when I can write such good English."

"Isn't there a good deal of psychology in your work," asked the reporter.

"Yes," assented the authoress. "I am psychic. I have strange instances of telepathy, impossible to explain. I have dreams also that come true, as they say. And how can you explain or analyze a dream? As well try to explain why a cream or pink chrysanthemum planted in with a clump of red chrysanthemums changes to red.

"As for myself, I have had so many strange instances of telepathy that they have become a second nature. Then my friends, who are perfectly truthful, have told me so many more that it would be impossible for me to doubt if I felt so inclined, which I do not.

"For instance, I was told of a case recently. It was that of a woman whose husband had forced her by his treatment of her to divorce him. She got her divorce through a dream of seeing him in apartments which she afterward saw in reality.

"She had lived with him for such a length of time that there existed between them a certain telepathy. Three years after their divorce and separation she dreamed that she saw him dead. He was not dead, but at the time of her dream was at the point of death, lying encased in ice. He had typhoid fever. Her theory was that at this critical point he thought of her and of his treatment of her and regretted it, and that produced the dream.

"I believe that this must have been the case. If two instruments can be so attuned as to produce the phenomenon of wireless telegraphy, why not two natures or souls?

"But that was not the strangest part of her story. A few months ago, early one evening, she began to cry hopelessly pitifully. She lay awake all night long, crying, she told me. A day or two afterward I met her.

"There is something wrong with my husband," she said. 'I dreamed last night that I saw him in a strange room. There were people whom I had never seen passing in and out of that room. I thought he was in that room, young and handsome as he was when we were first married.'

"I was not much surprised to learn later that she received a letter stating that her husband died that night she cried so, refusing to be comforted, and on the night she dreamed of the strange room and the people passing in and out he was laid out, ready for burial.

"I believe her story," finished Miss Holley. "I also think that she dreamed he was young and handsome, because when they are dead they always look years younger.

"I know a great many writers who believe, as I believe, and have all their wits about them. One of them told me a weird story of moving from the country to New York. He said that the night before he came in to look for rooms he dreamed of looking at them.

"He saw a flat, he said, in which he first entered a little narrow hall, then went from that into a long, low, narrow room, the queerest room he ever saw. It was about four times as long as an ordinary room and about the width of a room in a tiny railroad Harlem flat. The next day the first flat he looked at in New York, the woman showed him into a little hall, then into this long, low, narrow, weird room of his dream.

"Of course, you know that Mark Twain believes in telepathy and dreams and he is not the only one by many."

Miss Holley dictated several of her books into a phonograph.

"A quiet stenographer, that," suggested the reporter.

"It talks back," retorted the authoress, "but not to me. When I have finished I go out of the room and let it do all the talking to my stenographer."—New York Sun.

The Apostles' Creed.

It seems to be the custom now in orthodox churches for the pastor and his flock to repeat together the Apostles' Creed before the delivery of the sermon. It is perfectly consistent with old-time theology thus to do, and no doubt is done in order to prevent the rising generations in the church from forgetting and repudiating the platform upon which the religion of their fathers was founded, upon the principle that being frequently impressed upon their minds in youth, it will be difficult for them to renounce it in maturer years.

"The religion of our fathers" is a phrase which carries with it a peculiar sentimentality, very catchy and impressive to the dutiful and sympathetic children, and one calculated to overwhelm at once the second, sober thought, which questions the truth and propriety thereof. The logical statement of the proposition from an orthodox standpoint, is: "The religion of our fathers" must be true and proper, because it is "the religion of our fathers." But this sort of logic is not accepted by the "Higher Criticism" and it is only since the rise of the "Higher Criticism" that churches which did not formerly repeat the Apostles' Creed at their public services, are now doing it.

Having listened this Sunday morning (June 12) to a baccalaureate sermon to the Fort Wayne high school class, delivered by a Methodist minister, whose address was splendid, I was obliged to hear as (to me) an awkward introductory to it, the recital of the Apostles' Creed, which is not universally endorsed by educated men.

I do not propose to enter into the history of the Apostles' Creed, which may be gleaned by the reader from our various encyclopedias, but content myself with the assertion that the Apostles had very little if anything to do with it. The dogma of the divinity of Jesus it contains, was not promulgated until 325 years A. D.

The dogma of the "resurrection of the body" it promulgates, is thus treated by the late Bishop Foster of the M. E. church, which treatment is not out of harmony with, if indeed it was not taken from the teachings of Spiritualism.

Bishop Foster thus wrote: "Moses and Elias were in the resurrection state, wearing their immortal bodies. * * * * To the view of the resurrection here presented there can be no objection. It is in the line of divine analogies. It is free from grotesque and offensive implications. It is reasonable.

"It harmonizes with scripture statements. It meets all the demands of the affections. It is sublime! It is in accord with a plan of progressive glory, according to the Pauline idea.

"The resurrection state is the culmination of glorified humanity—is the change of the earthly to the heavenly—is the putting off the flesh and blood, and the putting on of the spiritual body. The resurrection is the standing again after death; the body of the resurrection is the body with which the spirit is clothed for the celestial life. The organizing life principle is uninterrupted and identical; it begins in the natural, and weaves its curious integuments of dust for earthly use. It weaves the new robes for the departing soul; it fashions the celestial organism, or more properly, God gives us a body as it hath pleased Him now and beyond the grave.

"I wish to put on record here that, for myself, there is nothing in any particle of flesh or blood that ever belonged to my body that creates in me the least desire to ever see it again.

"Beyond the grave we have found that the spirit is immortal, and that it will be clothed upon with a new form when the old one perishes—a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens—a house, not a tent."

And so, according to this late prominent bishop of the M. E. Church, "the resurrection of the body" as found in the "Apostles' Creed" of that and all orthodox churches, should be rendered more intelligent to the believer. In this day of revision of creeds, the "Apostles' Creed" should receive some attention.

REMARKABLE PRESENTATION.

Spirit T. DeWitt Talmage Appears at Keelers Seance.

Washington, D. C., June 23, 1904.—Last night at P. L. O. A. Keeler's seance, at 918 H. street N. W., this city, the Spirit T. DeWitt Talmage appeared, and after greeting various persons present I asked and obtained permission to approach the cabinet, and said: "Mr. Talmage, I heard you once [but had forgotten another time] in Brooklyn, N. Y., years ago, but I will thank you to settle a matter for me if you can. I wish to know how many persons were present when you delivered your famous lecture on Mars' Hill, near Athens, Greece. I believe, and which your press agent sent to many newspapers in this country, at that time?" He said: "Four persons were present," meaning himself, his press agent, his guide, and a milk-boy peddler. So it was stated in print by some tourist, several months afterwards on his return to this city, and Dr. Talmage's confirmation years afterward, last night, at Keeler's seance, was so remarkable, as probably no other person in the room knew of the matter, that I thought a brief report should be made of it for that valuable paper, The Progressive Thinker.

LIVE IN GIVING.

Take a lesson from the forest, selfish man, 'twill do you good;
Go among the plants and flowers, seek the knowledge in the wood,
It is this, "To Live in Giving"; nature shows it everywhere,
From the trees with shade and fruitage, to the pure health-giving air.

From the acorn at its sprouting, to the grand old oak sublime,
Giving wood for fire and building—living, giving all the time,
And when fall cuts off their foliage, floating down to Mother Earth.
Changes into earthly matter, goes to help next season's birth.

Man should emulate the forest, learn to give where now he takes,
Bring himself in touch with nature, give to others what he makes,
Giving like the tree its lumber, builds a house, a boat, or chair,
Man in giving starts his mansion in the new life over there.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold. Keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASSY, St. Louis, Mo.

A LOVING TRIBUTE.

In Memory of J. Frank Baxter and His Wife, Eliza C. H. Baxter,

There is nothing that so forcibly reminds us of the absence from the mortal, of friends whose home was not in our own household, as the reading over of letters written by hands that have laid down the pen forever; they were so much a part of those who wrote them; breathe to us so much of the past, remind us in every line of the old days, the pleasant hours spent together, and the pleasure of receiving the written message when separated. All this is borne in upon me by recently reading over letters which prompt these lines in loving memory of my friends, Mr. and Mrs. Baxter.

As one after another of the tried and true workers pass on to the higher life, we hear it said, "Who will fill their places?" No one can fill another's place be that place a public or a private position, since each must do their own individual work.

J. Frank Baxter's place can never be filled in the field of lecture and song, no more than in the heart of his daughter, and in the home where his cheery voice and quick, firm step can be no more heard. No other one individual has accomplished so much for Spiritualism in it's best and highest sense, as did Mr. Baxter in his twenty-seven years of continuous labor, as none other possessed the several gifts, in all of which he excelled.

Added to this was the example of his beautiful home life, and of his sterling character, being the soul of honor and uprightness in every detail of life.

Having the privilege of a close friendship and correspondence with Mrs. Baxter for many years, I have intimate knowledge of the home life, and also of the sacrifice made by both in giving up his life to the work that took him so much from the home he loved, and which he filled with sunshine for the invalid wife and loving daughter.

In those days when the way of the public speaker and medium was anything but a path of roses, his loyal, sensitive heart was often deeply wounded —how deeply, none but his family and intimate friends were allowed to know —by the unjust attacks of public and press; but he never faltered or wavered in his clear-cut scholarly presentation of the truth, and denunciation of error and superstition.

In the letters from my beloved friend, Mrs. Baxter, which I count among my treasures of by-gone days, there is contained, in the pleasant confidences regarding her home and loved ones, a record of patient sacrifice to the cause, of which the world had no knowledge; a sacrifice uncomplainingly made, for the sweet, brave face was always calm and smiling, ever striving to hide all traces of physical suffering and bid a cheerful good-bye as the loved one left for a trip, bearing the separation by writing him daily all details of the home life, and—as she often told me—"always following him mentally on his journey, knowing just when he reached each given point," being comforted by letters and reports of his successes, and the hour of his return was an hour of rejoicing in the household.

In one letter to me is a description of the meeting held by the committee, in the early days of Mr. Baxter's lecture work, to force him to relinquish either his position as teacher or his advocacy of Spiritualism. From the moment that his clear voice rang out the one word, "Never!" in response to the direct question, "would he publicly renounce his belief in Spiritualism and retain his position," to the morning when she bade him a cheerful good-bye with the assurance that she was better, calling him back as he passed the window to wish him "Happy New Year," and gently closing her eyes to earthly scenes before his return, not a murmur of complaint ever left her lips, and never a thought of turning back from the work before him was entertained by either, though the rush of travel often left him but an hour's time in the home.

Dear loyal, true-hearted friends; for us the sorrow and the tears that we can no more have the loved voices in friendly greeting, in lecture and in song, or be cheered by the written message; for them the joyful reunion "over there."

FLORENCE H. SIMPSON.

Won Fortune and a Bride Through the Tip of a Spiritualist.

Leadville, Col., June 28.—John G. Slater has struck it rich at last. He left for the east a few days ago with $20,000 the price he received for a placer property in Summit county. Of all the wonderful fortunes made in Colorado his seems to be the most wonderful.

When he asked Nellie McClure, an east Tennessee girl, to marry him, fourteen years ago, he was poor. She promised to marry him, but she made a singular provision. She not only said that he must get rich, but that he must get rich in western gold.

Slater was not long in reaching the west. He spent many dreary months wandering and prospecting, but nothing developing. He was hungry and desperate.

One night soon after his return in 1897, Slater left his dingy room, presumably to take a walk, but he did not return, neither that night nor the next night. A searching party was organized and after many days' hunting through the district his dead body, or at least supposed to be at that time, was found in an abandoned shaft. Relatives of the dead man could not be found and the remains were buried at the expense of the county.

But it was not Slater who perished, and no one to this day can tell who the unfortunate man was. When the First Colorado regiment returned from the Philippines Slater was among the number. He was minus an arm, having lost it in battle. When he left his room that night in 1897 he had enlisted, but said nothing to his few friends about it, and gone to the war.

From the time of his return till last summer he worked for wages. One day he was walking along Harrison avenue when he saw a sign of a Spiritualist, announcing a seance for that night. He went to that seance and what the spirits told him was sensational in the extreme. He was informed that in a certain gulch near Breckenridge, Summit county, there was a million in placer gold. He went to the place designated, built a cabin near a stream and began his search.

Day after day he "panned" gravel, but was not rewarded. Each morning, noon and night the miner washed his face and head in the stream near his cabin, and he noticed the bottom was sometimes yellow, but he paid no attention to it. When the snow began to get deep he quit work, having found nothing. A few days afterward he went into C. E. Goodfriend's barber shop on East Sixth street, to get his long hair cut. When enough was removed to show the scalp the barber discovered what he thought was gold leaf and, thinking Slater might be a painter, he called his attention to it.

Slater said nothing, but he knew what was on his scalp. He knew it was placer gold from the stream over in Summit county, but the season was over, and he could do nothing till spring. The first of May found him at the cabin. He panned stuff from the bottom of the stream. He found gold in abundance for hundreds of yards. He told his story to experts, who made examinations and declared that Slater had a bonanza. He began negotiating with eastern capitalists, and in a few days he sold out for $20,000. That was enough money for him.

When he left Tennessee he was 21 years old and his sweetheart was 16. He is now 35 and she is 31. She waited long and patiently, but she will be rewarded. The wedding will take place in July, and friends have no idea that it will be the culmination of such a romance.

PILES CURED

A PRACTICAL COURSE
FOR Physicians and Students
of Occultism,

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to MISS NETTIE WINTER, 466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Suggestions and Reflections.

I have not troubled the readers of The Progressive Thinker of late and, lest some may think that I have passed into a state of innocuous desuetude and am not striving to keep up with the procession, will offer a few notes, suggestions and reflections which may be of general interest to your numerous readers.

On the evening before my departure from San Diego, a reception was planned at the parlors of C. L. Bernard, one of San Diego's prominent healers, and, for the ostensible purpose of welcoming Florence K. White, now serving the society. A goodly number assembled on that occasion and, when President C. A. Bussy arose for the opening speech I was somewhat astonished to discover that a job had been put up on myself, as they had not only met to welcome Mrs. White, but to give me a good send-off as well, and to make sure of my going, Bro. Bernard, on behalf of the friends, presented me with an elegant solid leather, nickel-trimmed suit-case as a token of their esteem and appreciation. Of course there was nothing left after this but to go.

A pleasant trip on the steamer Santa Rosa landed me in San Francisco and the following Sunday found me in the hall of the Psychic Society in Oakland, where I listened to the closing discourse of Mrs. Lillie, before taking her departure for the East.

Being requested to occupy their platform, have done so for the past two months, with prospect of continuing through July. The society is not a large one, but certainly does make up in quality what it lacks in numbers.

Another society meeting in Fraternal Hall, and presided over by Bro. Burton, holds regular meetings, with the Gillettes and other local talent as speakers and mediums.

A third meeting is conducted by Mrs. Cowell, assisted by Mrs. Phelps, in Woodmen's Hall, and owing to the message work by Mrs. Cowell, who is an excellent medium, has probably the largest regular attendance.

It seems impossible to unite the Spiritualists of Oakland or San Francisco in any co-operative effort, and in neither place have they a temple or hall which they can call their own. Repeated efforts have been made to build, but for some reason the project has always fallen through, though there are Spiritualists enough in either place to make a larger congregation than any church in the two cities. Whether this state of affairs is due to the separate workers wishing to be "greatest in the kingdom of heaven," I will leave for the reader to judge.

It was my privilege to attend the closing service of the year by Mrs. Gillespie, Sunday, the 12th, in the beautiful and commodious Elks' Hall, on Sutter street, San Francisco. A large and enthusiastic audience was present and a fine program rendered. Mrs. Gillespie was assisted on this occasion by Mrs. Place, Mrs. J. J. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Howe and others whose names cannot be recalled. Eight persons joined the organization which is known as the People's Church.

It seems to the writer, however, that all these societies and "churches" rest principally on the personality of their various so-called "pastors" or favorite mediums, and when these take a vacation or for any cause step down and out, the "church" goes glimmering and is non est.

It may be pertinent to inquire when will the great body of Spiritualists who believe that we have "the best and grandest religion and philosophy on earth," get together, sink their personalities for the good of the cause and organize their local societies on a solid basis for practical work, taking as much interest in the success of the movement as Christians do in the success of the church, and not have the whole burden to rest upon the shoulders of their faithful speakers and mediums? O Lord! when will this be the case? That this has been done in some places, and that the idea is a growing one, argues well for the future progress of Spiritualism.

It was also my pleasure through the kindness and invitation of Dr. W. P. Phelon, to address an open meeting of the Hermetic Brotherhood in San Francisco. Whatever the peculiar tenets of this order may be, the atmosphere was decidedly congenial, the audience taking very kindly to radical Spiritualism. Our genial friend, Dr. Phelon, is slowly but, we trust, surely recovering from a late and very severe illness and it is the wish of his many friends that he may speedily regain his accustomed state of health.

I have not mentioned the names of H. H. Brown and J. Stitt Wilson, each of whom, I understand, are doing a work peculiarly their own, and are having excellent meetings.

Mr. Willson has in the past entirely tabooed the whole subject of Spiritualism and has decried mediumship as something entirely unworthy his attention, but by reason of the passing on of a darling child has investigated the subject more closely and has come into that light which Spirtualism only can bring to a hungering, creed-bound world. That he will become an earnest advocate of the spiritual philosophy, no one who knows the man will doubt.

It must not be inferred on account of my silence that I am not interested in and highly gratified with the discussion in late numbers of The Progressive Thinker concerning mediumship and particularly in the phase known as materialization. This discussion has evidently proved a regular bonanza to the oposition, while it is peaches and cream to Bro. Jamieson, who is entirely satisfied that "the halcyon days of mermaids and the materialized are gone forever."

Not so! Bro. Jamieson, on the contrary, the halcyon days of mediumship, including materialization, have not fairly begun. Possess your soul in patience, my dear brother, until we get through housecleaning, after which you may live long enough to make the discovery that there is evidence of a spirit in some of the manifestations. Right here I will transcribe a portion of a message by independent writing, received March 28, 1900:

"We realize the environment of distrust which you encounter each day, but while it is said that so much fraud and deceit should enter our beautiful philosophy, you must not throw aside all good because of this. That which you are able to receive and know for yourself should be sufficient to sustain you for all time and purposes. It is this very over-run of fraud that is going to sift it down to the real. A regular rooting-out will be experienced before long and the truth stand out bold and free in its own light. WE ARE ANXIOUSLY WAITING WITH YOU FOR THIS."

To this message was appended several names of the dearest friends of mine in spirit life.

It would seem from late events that this prophecy is on the eve of fulfillment and that the rooting-out process has really begun. Every conscientious Spiritualist and every honest medium and worker will hope for its continuance until every fakir, charlatan and pretender as well as every dishonest medium, whether in the seance-room or on the platform, is driven so far away from our lines that they will never be able to return.

No honest medium will in the least be injured by this discussion, while the dishonest cannot be hurt any too much.

The deadly virus of this viper (fake mediumship) has already permeated the great body of Spiritualism until the very name has in many quarters become the synonym of fraud, deceit, dishonesty, unholiness and all manner of uncleanliness, and, it is up to the Spiritualists to persevere and leave no stone unturned to purge the movement of this element, for only by so doing can we retain our self-respect or gain the respect of the world at large.

There should be no abatement of this work and effort until we can present a clean bill of health for Spiritualism and be able to point with pride to every public worker in our ranks as possessing the morality and the integrity which the ethics of Spirtualism demands.

That there will be weeping, howling and gnashing of teeth is to be expected, and it is to be expected that motives will be impugned, but the very salvation of Spiritualism as a distinctive movement depends upon this good work going on.

A very unique phenomenon is occuring in one of Oakland's suburbs, at the home of H. C. Whitney, in Piedmont. Mrs. Whitney occasionally indulges in the pastime of landscape painting, and, during one of these efforts, a number of well-defined faces spontaneously appeared upon the canvas and located on the rocks. These were repeatedly painted over or eliminated by the brush, but they insisted upon reappearing and were finally allowed to remain, as they did not seem to disturb the general harmony of the landscape. In a subsequent effort and on a canvas not larger than fifteen by twenty inches, numerous faces appeared, singly and in groups, the groups containing three distinct faces.

The work is done in oil, the faces representing every age of both sexes and different nationalities, ranging from that of an infant to full-grown men and women, including some of patriarchal appearance. A very singular thing lies in the fact that in looking at the canvas from different points of view, these groups of three make a fourth well-defined likeness entirely different from any in the group. They appear on the ground, in the grass, in the trees and on the rocks, while the water and the clouds are filled with them. Between sixty and seventy well-defined faces can be counted singly, while with the combination there are nearly one hundred.

Home circles have been held by the Whitney's for quite a long period of time and this new and unique manifestation seems to be the result. It is either the outcome of the subconscious principle in Mrs. Whitney herself (very lately brought to the front) or there is evidence of an invisible artist assisting in these manifestations.

Golden-wedding bells have lately rung for Bro. and Sister Whitney, but it is hoped their lives may long be spared and that Mrs. Whitney may continue to unfold and perfect this unique and wonderful phase of mediumship.

I am having a very pleasant time in greeting old acquaintances and making new ones both here and in San Francisco, and am very kindly and generously entertained by J. J. Johnson and wife, who are old-time friends and Spiritualists, as well as constant readers of The Progressive Thinker, they being among your oldest subscribers.

EXPERIMENTATIONS

Evincing Occult Physical Force With Human Intelligence.

"Will you spell your name, please, if we run over the alphabet?"

"Yes," was the reply, and the name Daniels was spelled out. Dr. F. asked, "Is this the spirit of Prof. C. W. Daniels, M. D.?"

Three distinct knocks answered, and the slate was twisted nearly out of the ladies' hands, and hit every leg of the table very forcibly.

"Can you make that bell ring, doctor?" was asked by Mrs. D. F., and immediately it began to ring with great force. Mrs. F. said, "That is good, you may break the slate on the bell, if you can, doctor." Probably there were ten or twelve hard blows made on the bell, and finally the bell was thrown to the floor with great force. The slate was shattered and not a fragment remained in the frame.

This seance was the first of the kind, and was suggested hoping to influence some occult power to give us slate-writing, but having forgotten to attach a pencil, we got slate-breaking instead of slate-writing. We shall try it again.

Dr. Daniels called the next day over the 'phone—or Ouija board and apologized for being so boisterous the night before, but said, "I would like to come again and break another slate."

"Yes, certainly, Doctor," said I, "could you come on the evening of the 20th?"

"No," he replied.

"How about the 25th?"

"Yes," said he.

While in conversation with Col. Ingersoll, April 17, he said, "Could you arrange another seance so I could come and break a slate and ring a bell as Dr. Daniels did on the 14th inst?"

"Were you present on that occasion, Colonel?"

"Yes," said he

"Well, Colonel, our mutual friend, Daniels, craves an opportunity to repeat that act on the 25th, at 8:30 o'clock p. m., and you can come with him and break a dozen, if you want to."

"I will be with him," and he did.

Seance No. 2.—The same table, cloth and bell as in No. 1 were used. Dr. Benj. H. G. and Otto F. (both great skeptics) held the slate. It was first controlled by Dr. Daniels, who struck the bell vehemently many, many times, but did not break the slate. Ingersoll immediately grasped it, not waiting even to be introduced. He pitched into his work as one expecting a large fee. He would not stop to answer a question until he had finished his task. I never saw him on the rostrum so enthusiastic, not even when he nominated the "Plumed Knight."

Slate and Bell Seance No. 3.—The same conditions existed as in the former seances, and the supposed spirit of the champion slate-breaker, Col. R. G. Ingersoll, took hold of the slate and possession of the table, bell and everything. After several futile efforts, seemingly he was frenzied, and grasping the slate at each end bore straight down until the bell burst through it, sticking there, requiring considerable force to pull it out. Still the Colonel hung to the frame, tried to wrench it from the hands of the two ladies, both of whom were slightly mediumistic. It seemed as if he was bound to take it back with him as a trophy. I was called to witness the contest, and taking hold of the slate with a firm grip, I said, "Colonel, shake hands," and really it seemed as expressive as his old-time shake. His effort to wrench the slate from our hands continued for two or three minutes, and the force in twisting and pulling was equal to twenty or thirty pounds to each of us.

This seance was followed by a "Melo-drame"; the prima donna spirit was supposed to be one Jessie Fisher, a particular friend of Mr. N., one of our company. A cabinet had been arranged across the corner of the large library, and a three-cornered rustic table placed in it. Mrs. N. and two other ladies were in control of the table which began to tip, and as soon as Geo. W. began to play the pianola in the music room, the table began to dance and became uncontrollable, and pushed the curtain away, leading the ladies twenty-five feet into the music room, and when in front of the pianola ceased in progress, but danced like a puppet for several minutes, the ladies simply touching it with their finger-tips in order to control its equilibrium.

Many more equally as wonderful demonstrations occurred during the evening, such as table-tipping, raps, and the twisting of the large oak dining-table completely around and back. This table will weigh 100 pounds. This seance occurred May 1, and since then Jessie F. has danced the little table into the music room twice while we have been communing with her over the Ouija board, and some one happened to sit down to the pianola. Last Sunday my daughter was writing automatically, and Jesie F.'s spirit began to write, and hearing the pianola, she stopped suddenly and said, "Oh! pshaw! I wanted to write a little, but that music is too sweet, and evidently skipped away.

Sometimes she prefers the graphophone in the dining-room, but does not go to it. We are informed that when Jessie was here she was passionately fond of music, and was a great theatre-goer, and was a musician of no mean pretentions. I have no doubt but she might be found to-day at Convention Hall, listening to Victor Herbert's orchestra, or perhaps at the Lafayette watching the "Pretty girls," (the City Sports) dancing, or on my veranda in a large easy chair listening to some one of the modern hand organs.

Almost every day our experimentations bring forth something surprising, something new and amusing if not always edifying, but we know that there is no fraud connected with our investigations, and they are harmless.

Of course our friend Jamieson can account for all these psychological "mysteries," but he does not like to grapple with them publicly.

After Death—What?

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

It has been pretty well demonstrated that manhood is not destroyed by death. Cautious officers of the Psychical Research Society admit as much as that. We may even go still further, and admit that intelligences who have reasonably proved their identity are sometimes able to give wise counsel to the mortal. It is certain that such returning intelligences possess memories, more or less confused, of their earth experiences, although, for the most part they seem to pick up such memories here, rather than to bring them with them from the other side of "fog-land." They also, at times, exhibit a knowledge of earth happenings beyond that of the mortal. And they apparently possess and wield faculties that make them more or less independent of time and space. They seem to have a power of entrancing a mortal, provided he be a natural sensitive, and using his organism as a means for entering earth life, and exhibiting their ultra normal faculties and powers.

So much hardly admits of dispute by anyone who has been once introduced to a fact such as "spirit return" and has made its friendly acquaintance. So we have gradually evolved our present conception of a borderland as dividing our visible and invisible life lines, where spirits and mortals meet, and extend greeting to each other.

In spite of shouts of joy, and tearful greetings from the bereaved, there seems to be little sunshine in this borderland. It is immersed in a perpetual mental fog, and, as we know too well, both mortal medium and returning spirit are alike befogged when they enter it. But out of this "fog-land" comes the entire history of spirit return, called Modern Spiritualism. And as a remarkable fact, Spirit Return has proved to be a very one-sided affair. It evolves intelligences, once mortal, who can and do talk lucidly about their own earth life and ours, though, so far as known, they have never yet startled the world with any new grand invention or discovery. Radium and the X-ray were not announced by spirits, and we look to mortal genius for whatever may be our next advance in knowledge and its power for good or ill upon earth life. But, as we have said, the results of spirit intercourse, such as they are, have proved very one-sided. Spirits talk to us of earth incidents with a fair degree of accuracy, but when we would travel the other way and peer out into their lives and experiences, we only get deeper and deeper into the fog. Not a tale comes from spirit life of spirit happenings that will bear scientific investigation.

The reader should not be repelled by the term "scientific investigation" for science is really only the orderly arrangement and logical study of facts. That is to say, every fact has its own place in the eternal sequence of cause and effect, and it is the business of science to discover just where a fact belongs, but it can usually discern, almost at a glance, where a fact does not belong.

Of course the various tales of spirit life with which spirit return is festooned and garlanded are presented to mortals as statements of fact, that is, of actual occurrences on the spirit side of life. They have been, and still are, accepted by many as truth, because such statements and histories are made and given in the name of a spirit. It sounds like heresy to the average Spiritualist when these fascinating tales are declared to be full of impossible "facts"; that is to say, of "facts" that are impossible under the supposed conditions of the story to which we are listening. Instead of being an orderly arrangement of facts, and therefore scientific, they are facts belonging only to this life, although most ignorantly asserted to belong to the life and experience of the spirit who is telling the tale. Such impossible statements of fact repel the scientific investigator, and usually lead him to make an illogical denial of the proved fact of spirit return.

It may be a very ungrateful task, but the writer is proposing, in this article, to expose some of these impossibilities which have been, and still are accepted as gospel by the average believer in Modern Spiritualism. Every investigator soon discovers that many of his spirit visitors are so unspiritual as really to belong to earth life in thought, word and deed. In everything but the texture of their bodies they are of the earth, and very earthy. For the most part everything that is disorderly and unsatisfactory in seance experience is really caused or evolved by these earth-bound spirits. Necessarily their experiences, no matter how high may have been their mortal station, are much the same as those lived in the slums of earth-life by the unprogressed mortal. They are children of the fog, and know nothing of the beyond we are seeking. So, unless they assume to play the reporter for the higher life, we will pass them by, so far as this article is concerned. It is the pictures of spirit life, drawn by spirits apparently worthy of respect, that we are about to carefully examine in this article.

That the law of evolution, so dominant on earth, should continue after death is so natural an assumption that we accept it as a most reasonable statement when made, for instance, by the returning spirit known as George Pelham, through Mrs. Piper, the medium. But when we are asking "After death—what?" we must remember that evolution means both more and less to the spirit than in earth life. It does not mean the survival of the fittest, for all alike "over there" have already survived death. But it means, or seems to mean that there is in the beyond a law by which progress continues to be evolved as the result of effort. But that progress carries with it consequences unknown in earth life. Death seems to evolve a most startling change in the substance of which our mortal bodies are composed—but all alike experience that. The new body is invisible and intangible to the old one. But the intelligence inhabiting the form seems literally unchanged by the death process. Man sleeps here, and wakes yonder. That is death. But the truism that a man can carry none of his possessions with him when he dies, includes every particle of his old form, as much as his money and houses. So he finds himself with a new form, just as material as his old one, but adapted to the other side of death.

Our first and all-important question at this point is what has the spirit left behind him beside his old body? Is mortal life composed of experiences compelled by the shape of his form, and its conditions, which cease at death? Is the new form maimed and scarred by the earth experiences of its intelligence?

At this point we have our first painful experience of the "fog-land" through which the man has passed in his death sleep, and to which he must return if he would communicate with a mortal. The painful experience which here meets us is the direct contradiction of returning spirits as to how much of the mortal has become the personal property of the spirit.

Theology has taught from the very beginning that his earth life makes a man happy or miserable after death. And, to a certain extent, that has seemed a most reasonable conclusion. Our modern spirit return has repeated the tale, although it has dropped the vagaries of hell fire and endless torments for sinners. This modern spirit return has had as one of its most eminent and respected exponents a highly educated English clergyman known as M. A. Oxon, but whose real name and title was Rev. Stainton Moses, M. A. Mr. Moses was not only a clergyman but also a remarkable medium, and had a number of controls, through whom much information was given concerning the life after death. His inspired teachings have been counted as high water mark by most Spiritualists, although there was always a pronounced theological bias. The reader will please note that in this article we are only concerned with what his spirit guides and inspirers taught as to the effect of his earth life upon spirit man. The names of these guides by which, at least, they are distinguished one from another, are Rector, Doctor and Prudens, as subordinates of a powerful intelligence calling himself Imperator.

In Stainton Moses' book called "Spirit Teachings" we are told that men take with them beyond death all their desires, and all their evil passions. This is, so far, of course, an emphatic answer to our question, "After death—what?" and we are not now concerned with the influence such spirits cast back upon our mortal life. The reader will please remember we are confining ourselves to an enquiry as to what awaits man in spirit life. And the fact that the mortal carries himself over there, just as he was mentally here is thus taught by Mr. Moses, just as it has been taught by thousands of other mouthpieces for spirit teachings.

This has seemed so natural a result, at least for a time, and to explain so many happenings in earth life, that it has been almost universally accepted. But the war between fact and fiction seems to begin just here, and the first gun of contradiction has been fired by spirits through the organism of the now renowned Mrs. Piper, who for many years has been under scientific direction, and held at the disposal of officers of the S. P. R.

It came to pass, by due process of Nature, that Rev. Stainton Moses "slept with his fathers"; that is to say, he passed into spirit life. When safe across the divide he most naturally foregathered with the authors of his "Spirit Teachings." In coming back through Mrs. Piper he has succeeded in proving his identity to the satisfaction of the scientific men who keep one eye on Mrs. Piper, and the other on "spirit return." But he startles everybody, including the present writer, and probably the reader, by declaring that he was wrong, completely wrong in his old teachings. He now denies that spirit man carries with him any of his old passions and desires, and positively asserts that the souls of the wicked are not playing any part in our present earth life. He now solemnly teaches that evil thoughts and passions die with the body. And still more startling, his old guides, Imperator and the rest, make the same direct contradiction of their old teachings.

We are thus face to face with a question of fact, and it is useless and absurd to set one spirit statement against another spirit statement, and sit as a jury to determine which tells the truth. But, all the same, it is direct proof that even the very best and clearest spirit communications must pass through "fog-land," and that both medium and spirit are alike bewildered and befogged by the conditions. We further remember this applies just as much to the spirits writing or speaking through Mrs. Piper as it did to mortal Moses, and as it does to every other medium.

We have now discovered, and proved, that our question, "After death—what?" cannot be answered to our satisfaction by any spirit communication, so far, at least, as to prove the moral status of the new born spirit. We are left in the fog, and can only pick and choose that which may seem to us most reasonable. But it then becomes a matter of belief, and not of knowledge; and it is not at all the purpose of this article to decide which assertion is true, and which is false.

So dense is the fog in which M. A. Oxon finds himself, even after his identification, that he cannot recall his own earth knowledge of Greek, in which he was an adept; nor ever the true name of Imperator, which he had recorded in writing before his death.

So far we are obliged to acknowledge that we have not made much progress in determining the condition of manhood after death. We have proved that he must enter "fogland" when he would try to return, and that the mortal who would clasp hands with him must do the same. But this fact destroys our interest in the many fascinating tales of spirit life which have been spoken and written in the name of spirits. We see that so far as they are genuine spirit productions they also come from "fog-land." Instead of accepting them as true because they come in the name of a spirit, we grow suspicious, as we are now sure that a befogged spirit could not describe spirit life as it really is. But ten thousand such tales, often of deep interest, have been told and accepted as true because they seemed a continuance of our earth life experience. Just as Robinson Crusoe describes what takes place day by day on his island, so do these whisperers from "fog-land" make their autobiographies fascinating and interesting. And they claim to be telling us their experiences just as they actually are.

The grown-up boy discovers that the histories of Robinson Crusoe and of David Copperfield were tales of events and experiences that might have happened. But the grown-up Spiritualist discovers that these tales of "after death" are describing impossible events and experiences.

Suppose we make a brief examination of some of the tales told us by "befogged" spirits, through "befogged" mortals.

JUDGE CHARITABLY.

A Message From Spirit Henry George.

Circumstantial evidence should never be taken as a standard by which one should be judged. I have known instances in my own life where the outside world would condemn, but they who knew the real issue of the question knew how innocent I was of wrong doing. So, my dear people, never pass judgment on one until you know all the circumstances surrounding the case, and then be charitable. I do not mean to be censorious, but I overheard a conversation this morning that has set me going, and I do not want you to fall into the error of misjudging your fellowman, and to set up your standard as arbitrary, and leave no loop-hole for a few stray thoughts to enter. No one man knows all the truth, and every one knows some truth; so gather them in by the wayside or wherever they may be found, and cherish them, no matter from where they came, and after awhile your garden will be blooming with truth gathered from every clime and nation.

I am sorry to see nations still fighting and killing each other just for a little foothold of earth, when they ought to be helping each other to rise out of their poverty and spiritual degradation to that higher ideal of brotherhood and fellowship that can rejoice in another's victory. The rise of one nation always seems to be the fall of another; and while one is being inflated with victory, another is in the throes of agony; and so the poor old world goes on with its years of peace and carnage, and one does not learn the lesson of peace until he is in the midst of strife again.

Must it ever be thus? Will men never awaken from their dreaming and come into the full consciousness of what they are doing? They seem so phlegmatic and unconcerned, while the time is being wasted, and thousands going to their death, with no one to cry "halt" on their destruction.

Ruthlessly they are condemned to die without one thought of their salvation. If all the money that was being spent for firearms and ammunition was spent on the poor and helpless, in giving employment and carrying on the gentler trades, that will turn the swords into plowshares, it would make the old world a paradise, instead of a slaughter-pen. The stench of their impurities reaches up to heaven, and there will have to be another deluge to purify the earth; not a deluge of water, nor of fire and brimstone, but the spiritual awakening that will come to all mankind whenever they will heed the call that is being made. They seem lifeless now and unconcerned, but the spiritual side will eventually come uppermost. There has been a reign of the material things, and gold and gain has been the God, but man will find that nothing but a spiritual God can satisfy the innermost craving of the human soul; and they will part with their wealth, that they can have that peace that passeth all understanding, and will be willing to arbitrate and to give in rather than fight for their seeming liberty, but in reality their slavery to ambition.

Crime is gendered into the being before it is brought into the world; the mother looking out into the world sees man's inhumanity to man, and in her outraged feeling, she unconsciously leaves her mark on her child that will break out in its life, and she, ignorant of the laws of nature, will wonder and say, why did I ever give birth to such a child? Where did he get this inhuman trait? for neither I nor his father ever exhibited such traits! and so she says, "he must have inherited it from some of his ancestors; for the sins of the fathers shall be handed down even unto the third and fourth generation."

Oh, mothers! be careful; you little know how you influence that little mite that is given you. Commence before the child is born to train it into the useful paths of life. Look closely into your own life; weed out all unholy thoughts and anything that would tend to drag down; then will you be given children fit to inherit the kingdom of heaven, and not brutes in man-form.

Now, my dear friends, I will leave you for a while. I thank you that through you I can come into communication with mankind again, and once more sound the clarion note of warning to men and women, and to bring them into the full realization of what life is and what it is meant to be.

Thanking you again for services rendered, I remain, yours truly,

HENRY GEORGE.

CHICAGO, January 10, 1901.

TO WHOM PRESENTED:

This is to certify that my sister, Miss Louise Schoepf, of Highland Falls, New York, was injured three years ago by a blow on the back of the head, which caused her great pain and suffering and resulted in hemorrhages from the nose and mouth which baffled the skill of a number of the leading physicians, who failed to give her relief. Having heard of the healing power of J. W. McAllister, East 63rd Street, I consulted him and he gave her absent treatment which resulted in her hemorrhages ceasing at once. It has been about eight months since her last hemorrhage and from this remarkable cure I consider him a most able healer. Very respectfully,

J. B. SCHOEPF.

WOODLAND PARK, COL., May 8, 1890.

Your welcome letter received yesterday and was very glad indeed to see your hand writing once more. Well, Mary has seemed to be some better now for about ten weeks. That is, she has not suffered so much, but on Monday night following the Sunday evening when you say the faith doctor began to treat her she was so free from pain she did not have to take any morphine and slept well all night. Then it stormed, and she always feels worse when it storms. Then on Thursday she got up to dinner and did not go to bed again until eight o'clock that evening, and felt better than she had for months; could straighten up and her back did not hurt and was not in pain anywhere. Said she thought to herself that now she was going to get well. Then it stormed again and she had not felt as well until this a. m. She is up, sitting at the south window in the sun, yet she does not feel as well as she did last Thursday. Mary says she don't know of course what the man's belief is, but if he thinks he can cure her she will try hard to believe he can do it.

The above is an exact copy of a letter received from my sister regarding the other sister's illness. She had been given up by doctors who stated her case hopeless. She has since been treated by J. W. McAllister and when last heard from was as well as the average woman of her age, which is 56 years. J. F. BROWNING.

J. F. BROWNING, personally known to me, makes oath to the above statements as being true. Witness my hand and notary seal this 3d day of June, 1900. PETER NILAND,

CHICAGO, ILL., June 21, 1900.

TO WHOM PRESENTED:

This is to certify that for four consecutive weeks prior to being treated by J. W. McAllister, of East 63rd Street, Chicago, Ill., I was unable to walk about for even a half hour at a time without great suffering from pain in my lower limbs and feet. I could not wear my shoes, having been more or less distressed from varicose veins on my lower limbs and feet, with discoloration of the surface. Great soreness and swelling for a period of eight years. No one who knows of my condition fails to express their surprise that I could walk at all. After many and continuous efforts to obtain relief, I am most happy to testify that after four weeks' treatment, mostly absent treatment, I can wear my shoes with comfort and walk from two to four miles per day with ease. Respectfully,

Christian Science Warfare.

All is not lovely in the camp of the Christian Scientists, as well as in other Christian camps. Notwithstanding all is spirit or God, and disease, whether mental or physical, is a delusion of the carnal mind, an unreality of the imagination, yet there seems to have been something of an evil and infectious nature at work, that has caused the high priestess of the cult to come forth into print after the following style:

"Their published boast in 1903 that Mary Baker G. Eddy would never again meet with her church is not fulfilled. She deems it wise for her church not to visit her home at each communion season. Also the less ceremony we include in our worship the better. Hence, I hereby notify my beloved brethren that I shall not attend the church dedications, but, as usual, remain at home, working and praying for the prosperity of Zion.

"The mental assassins are in God's hands, and He will uncover their crimes and punish them in His own good time and way. Let us obey Jesus' command to bless our enemies and do good to them that despitefully use us.

"MARY BAKER G. EDDY.

"Pleasant View, Concord, N. H., June 7, 1904."

"Mental murderers," "mental assassins," "mental malpractice," "malicious animal magnetism," such are some of the expressive terms used by "Mother Eddy" and her followers, to designate the persons and work of her opposers.

It must be said that such terms are very peculiar when used by one who is endeavoring to "obey Jesus command to bless our enemies and do good to them that despitefully use us." To the uninitiated non-Christian such expressions would seem to savor of the disposition to return spite for spite, curses for curses, hatred for hatred, rather than good for evil.

Mother Eddy, however, can find plenty of samples of prayers for God's curses to fall on one's "enemies," recorded in the Bible, notably in the imprecatory psalms," as they are called by biblicists.

The Bible apologists attempt to dodge these imprecatory prayers, by claiming that they are prophecies instead of prayers. This is a mere evasion, however, to escape an unpleasant predicament.

But, laying aside Bible interpretation and comment, there is a truth in the implication conveyed by the terms "mental murderers, mental assassins, malicious animal magnetism," etc., and it may be possible that the terms are justly applicable to some of Mrs. Eddy's "enemies."

The psychic powers of mind can be used for healing and helping, or misused for evil effects. These powers are forces of nature, and can be rightly and properly used to benefit humanity physically, morally, spiritually—and, like all other forces of nature they can be perverted and misused to the detriment of mankind.

A Study of Food Effects.

There is room for serious psycho-physiological study in the following excerpt from the Chicago Chronicle. The influence of diet in forming the mental and spiritual characteristics of man, as well as affecting his physical being, is worthy of studious consideration by sociologists and all who are interested in the higher development of humanity and humanitarian ethics.

A butcher claims that meat-eating is responsible for most of the bad temper that exists in the world.

"Who are the heaviest meat-eaters?" he said. "The English. And who have the worst dispositions? Why, the English. Everybody knows that. Go to England and they'll give you nothing fit to eat but meat. Morning, noon and night, they'll set before you the best meat in the world, but no vegetables to speak of, no desserts, no entrees; meat only. The consequence of all this meat eating is that the red-faced Englishman is worse than a bear to have around the house. If you go to France you don't get much meat. The French like fruit, vegetables, salads, a little fish and a little chicken. I'd venture to say that an Englishman eats more meat in a day than a Frenchman does in a week.

"What effect on his disposition does the Frenchman's less gross food have? A good effect. The French are polite. The world over they are noted for their politeness and good humor. But the Japs prove my point best. The mass of the Japanese people live on rice, fruit, sweetmeats and fish. They don't touch meat from one year's end to another. And their temperance and delicacy at table give them the best disposi-

HAIL TO THE FRIENDS! HAIL TO THE WORLD!

Greetings to the Many Friends at the Various Spiritualist Camp Meetings.

The Progressive Thinker goes out in spirit and in form to all the camps in session over the country, freighted with the best thought of the day, and with its best wishes for all its readers, and hopes for a harmonious season at every resort, wherever even a few are gathered together.

It is impossible for us to visit these places in person, as ours is a never-ending round of toil and care to bring out The Progressive Thinker with its feast of reason each week; but we can give aid to the cause in a more effective way by keeping up the reputation of the paper and furnishing the campers with a regular weekly volume of good thought, and help them to enjoy their rest and recuperation.

We do not expect, at this season of the year, to arouse much enthusiasm or create much commotion in Spiritualistic circles, for this is the time of all times when the human system is relaxed, wants to relax, needs to relax; the time when commotion is not very welcome, unless it be from an atmospheric source.

We expect our patronage to hold to its regular height, its summer height.

People will take their outings, our many camp-meetings will receive their usual attendance, no doubt, and we are glad to know it can be so, and wish them, once more, all the success in finance and the spiritual revival that can come to them.

To a limited extent only is literature enjoyed at those outing places. Rest, recuperation, intercommunication ("yarn-swapping"), visiting old friends upon both sides of life, lecturing, etc., are a few of the appreciable attractions of the average camp, but in a great measure the camps are important institutions in the progress of the cause. They attract and educate the people who would not take a paper or attend a spiritual meeting, and often lead to investigations and a close study of the philosophy.

To many these days are looked forward to with a high degree of anxiety and pleasurable anticipation from the time of the closing of one season's camp-meeting to the opening of the next. Speakers and mediums begin to cast about for engagements; the energetic secretaries and executive committees begin to contract for the next, and nothing but the next camp-meeting is talked of by the committees of arrangements.

Verily, these are real celebrations that denote loyalty to the cause and fidelity to each other as brothers and sisters. In the groves beneath the high arch sky; loitering along the banks of a rippling stream; rowing upon the placid waters of a beautiful lake; standing in the midst of the throng or alone in the silence and in touch with nature and close communion with the arisen spirits, dear friends, remember The Progressive Thinker and its corps of co-laborers. Remember that we are at our various posts of duty, working for the advancement of the whole cause. Remember the vast amount of literature we are offering at almost cost, just to place it before the world, that the people may be brought out of darkness into the light, and that those who follow us in the work may not meet with the opposition we have encountered all along the line.

As a fitting expression of appreciation of the patronage received during the past year and as a further means of harmonizing the forces and factions at the camps, we append hereto an appropriate "Camp-Meeting Song," handed us for publication by Dr. T. Wilkins, with the hearty good wishes of the author thereof, and ask that it be sung in the true spirit of brotherly love and spiritual fellowship:

Camp-Meeting Song.

(Tune: "Tenting To-night.")

We are living to-day on the old camp-ground,
The place that we love so well;
We are living to-day where the spirits abound,
With love from the land where they dwell.

Chorus:—Living to-day, living to-day, living on the old camp-ground,
Looking for the light of a brighter, better day
When the earth will a heaven be.

We are resting to-day on the old camp-ground,
Where peace, love, and harmony reign;
Where our voices united will ever resound
In making our truth ever plain.

Chorus:—Resting to-day, resting to-day, resting on the old camp-ground,
Looking for the light of a brighter, better day
When the earth will a heaven be.

We are feasting to-day on the old camp-ground,
On the good things from sweet summer land;
On the faces and the forms, and the flow of reason found,
Coming from our loved spirit band.

Chorus:—Feasting to-day, feasting to-day, feasting on the old camp-ground,
Looking for the light of a brighter, better day
When the earth will a heaven be.

We are learning to-day on the old camp-ground,
The lesson of life ever dear,
By the interchange of thought and experiences unwound,
Of the friends that are hovering near.

Chorus:—Learning to-day, learning to-day, learning on the old camp-ground,
Looking for the light of a brighter, better day
When the earth will a heaven be.

sitions in the world. On the streets of Japan there is never any fighting or quarreling. You never see a disturbance of any kind among that people. Tolerance, courtesy, high-bred and ceremonious manners are as prevalent in Japan as grumbling in England.

"What is the philosophy of all this? Why, simply that meat is a stimulant, like beer, and that, after the brief happy effect of this stimulant has worn off there comes a long effect of ill-humor and irritability. All heavy meat-eaters have had bad dispositions because they are always suffering from their food's aftermath—because they are always, so to speak, getting over a spree. This holds good, too, among animals. Lions, tigers, leopards and the rest of the carnivora are fierce and treacherous and mean. The herbivora—elephants, antelopes, camels—are good-tempered, mild creatures."

The highest honor we can pay to truth is to show our confidence in it, and our desire to have it sifted and analyzed by how rough a process soever. —Dr. Robert Taylor.

A truth-loving and truth-telling race will never be borne by those who must take their opinions from others and suppress rebellion under a show of acquiescence.—Helen H. Gardener.

I choose the nobler part of Emerson, when, after various disenchantments, he exclaims: "I covet truth." The gladness of true heroism visits the heart of him who is really competent to say this. —John Tyndall.

Better than councils, better than sermons, better than Parliament, is that free discussion through a free press, which is the fittest instrument for the discovery of truth and the most effectual means of preserving it.—J. Anthony Froude.

The Tables Have Been Turned.

Jenkin Lloyd Jones, pastor of All Souls' Church, Chicago, in a recent issue of Unity, says:

"When Miss Susan B. Anthony with her brave associates began over fifty years ago a systematic agitation for women's enfranchisement, the plea was in behalf of a suppressed and submerged sex. Woman's capacities were undeveloped; her powers untested; her social and economic rights not so much denied as ignored. They rightly asked for suffrage for woman's sake.

"Now the tables have been turned; woman 'has the floor' quite as much if not more than man; she is heard on the civic, economical, social and ethical problems of the day more often than man, and she brings to the discussion of these questions perhaps a better trained mind and certainly a more careful immediate preparation than man. And now the forced plea for the enfranchisement of women is in the interest of men, or rather, in the interest of the community. Then the woman needed the ballot for her development; now the state needs the woman's ballot by virtue of her development. The state is in dire need of more culture, more refinement, more grace, more conscience at the polls.

"It is because we believe woman is prepared to make such contribution that we rejoice in the ever-growing claim of men and women who are marching forward to victory under the banner of equal suffrage to men and women, to black and white. Whatever safeguards and restrictions it is necessary to throw around the ballot box they are not such as can be emphasized by either a sex line, a sect line or a race line."

Children in Heaven.

Interesting reading is that embodied in an editorial in the Chicago Chronicle, anent the destiny of children dying before arriving at years of moral responsibility. Under the title, "Children in Heaven," the Chronicle says:

In consequence of the sudden and terrible death of hundreds of innocent children by the burning of the steamer General Slocum the city of New York has been precipitated into a maelstrom of theological discussion, and even the secular newspapers contain editorials on theodicy, on the origin of evil, on the goodness of God, on the eternal decrees of God and on the salvation of infants.

One of these newspapers publishes several communications which give an idea of the popular excitement on these subjects. "None of these dear children under the age of responsibility," says one writer, "will be lost." Another correspondent remarks: "God in taking away the lives of those on the Slocum chose those who were jewels in his crown." Still another concludes his reflections on the catastrophe as follows: "Without children heaven would seem to us a dull, uninteresting place to which few would care to go."

It will be impossible for many persons, no matter how much they may love children and no matter how much they may desire to go to heaven, to read these pathetic expressions without having some rationalistic thoughts in regard to what is involved in the doctrine that all infants and children dying under the age of responsibility become inhabitants of the heavenly world.

It is a well-known fact that one-half or more of the members of the human family die in infancy, and it is safe to assume, therefore, that two-thirds die before reaching the age of accountability. These facts alone would make the children in heaven twice as numerous as the adults, but there are other facts to be considered. According to orthodox views not more than one in 100 adults, even in a Christian land, are likely to reach heaven, and on this basis there will be in heaven 150 children to every adult, and the calculation does not stop here.

It must be remembered that, on the theory above referred to, the children of all lands, heathen and Christian, are saved, while the adults of pagan lands, excepting a few converts, are, according to the generally received theory, lost. Nor is this all, for this process had been going on for thousands of years before "life and immortality were brought to light in the gospel." It is impossible, of course, for arithmetic to follow such a train of thought, but it is only reasonable to estimate that on these theories there must be in heaven at least 10,000 children under the age of accountability for each adult.

Heaven, therefore, must be filled with beings who have never known sin nor the pardon of sin and have no more recollection of this world than if they had never existed. Hence the correspondent who seemed to be afraid that heaven would not have children enough in it to be attractive unless a few were burned up occasionally in steamboat disasters really has no cause for alarm. When he gets to heaven he will be such a curiosity that he will probably be willing to return for a day or two to New York.

There are several theories of the future life, not widely held, however, which negative more or less this preponderance of children in heaven. The old Calvinistic theology taught that only elect infants were saved, the non-elect infants, presumably almost all of them, being reprobated or lost. This view is now reprobated and lost.

Then there is the Universalist theology which teaches the salvation of every human being, young and old, under which there will not be in heaven more than three or four children to each adult. The doctrine of conditional immortality denies that anyone will live again after death except those who are Christians and to whom Christ has imparted the gift of eternal life.

With such a variety of views a person must be hard to please who cannot select one which will afford some comforting reflections.

It would not be amiss to append to the Chronicle's article, a statement of the Spiritualist view concerning children in the spirit life, and how much more reasonable it is, and consonant with common sense and the nature of things, than any one of the "variety of views" epitomized in the Chronicle's statement. Their salvation is not dependent on the murder of a righteous person, nor are they consigned to foreordained damnation.

The Cannibals.

A serious issue has arisen between Great Britain and Belgium, growing out of cannibalism in the Congo Free State, in Africa. Great Britain would exterminate the practice at once, if it cost the extinction of the native tribes that practice it. Belgium, on the contrary, hopes by precept and example to gain the same end with little sacrifice of human life. It is claimed the practice is limited to the consumption of the bodies slain in battle, each tribe feasting on the flesh of the enemy, never on that of their own tribe; and that they never go to war for the sole purpose of capturing victims for their feasts.

Abhorrent as is the practice, and sympathizing as earnestly as we may with our parent country, we must not forget that cannibalism was practiced by some of our Christian ancestors in their holy wars against the Saracens. Having ravaged the countries through which the crusaders marched, famine with all its horrors followed. Von Sybel, in his "History and Literature of the Crusades," pp. 31, 32, gives a poem, written in French, describing the awful condition following the siege of Antioch. We extract:

"More than ten thousand, where in heaps the Paynim lay about,
They hewed the corpses limb from limb, and disemboweled clean,
And there was sodden meat and roast, to blunt their hunger keen:
Right savory fare it seemed there; they smacked their lips and spake:
'Farewell to fasts; a daintier meal than this who asks to make?
'Tis sweeter far than porker's flesh, or bacon seethed in grease.
Let's make good cheer, and feast us here, till life and hunger cease.'"

If Christians in their zeal to wrest a vacated sepulchre from the Saracens fenested off the slain bodies of the enemy with such glee, let us not be too severe on the poor black man on the Congo who feasts on missionaries and slaughtered enemies when beset with hunger.

Advanced Thought in the Pulpit.

Rev. W. B. Thorp, pastor of a Congregational church in South Chicago, in a discourse recently in Rockford, Ill., theme, "The New View-Point in Theology," took a very advanced position, which must place him in the front rank with advanced thinkers. He said:

"The change which has come over human thought in reference to the subject of religion in the past half century is really very great.

"Practically the whole library of theological literature previous to the great intellectual awakening of the 19th century has now become a matter of historical curiosity, as much out of date as works on natural science in the same period. It is not strange that in the midst of a transaction so great many men have become intellectually bewildered and have actually lost their bearings or gone off upon tangents. The wonder is that more have not been thus affected, and that so many have been able to make new and satisfactory adjustments.

"The principle about which all these changes gather and from which they proceed, has been the idea of the "reign of law"—of law not as edict or command, but as order, system, causation—the principle that, given the same conditions the same results will always and everywhere ensue. This conception which is the postulate of modern science, has so grown upon us that it may fairly be said to encompass everything within its domain.

"The net result of this whole mass of scientific discoveries and observations, extending as they do now far up into the sphere of personal, social and religious phenomena—has been to produce upon the thinking modern man an irresistible and ineffaceable conviction that everything that takes place in the universe is in the operation of some simple universal principle.

"Now instead of disputing this deliverance of science and protesting against it, the tendency of religion to-day is to accept it and adjust itself to it, and to find in it the foundation of a new theology as well as a new science. And it is a notable fact that one of the greatest evangelists of modern times, the late Henry Drummond, has been the pioneer in the work of interpreting to the people this heroic reconstruction of thought.

"The introduction of this new formative principle of universal reign of law is compelling sweeping revisions of all our previous doctrines concerning the method of the divine operation in the world. Indeed at first thought it would seem as if many of the Christian doctrines would need not only to be revised but to be actually erased from our minds. And truly it is more than a revision; it is a re-formation of theology that is taking place. Yet just as the stars kept on shining undimmed after Copernicus, and later Newton, had put all previous astronomy out of date, so we shall discover that all that was really true and of vital power in these old doctrines will be an abiding reality, and will have its due recognition in that theology which is now emerging."

The whole discourse, pointed and eloquent, as quoted in the Rockford papers, must have left a permanent impression on those who heard it, and was in striking contrast with the teachings that God directs and moves all the machinery of life, instead of their being the product of changeless law.

Roosevelt on Thomas Paine.

That was an ugly little slip, and utterly uncommendable, made by Theodore Roosevelt in one of his published books, in which he styles Thomas Paine "a dirty little atheist." Paine was not an atheist, nor was he a person whom the epithet "dirty" would rightly characterize.

These epithets and various others of similar character, have their base and origin in the conscienceless slanders begotten by orthodox hatred toward the man who was not afraid to think for himself and to publish his honest convictions.

The Primal blame for Roosevelt's expression should rest upon the orthodox slanderers of Paine, who have not ceased to iterate and reiterate foul and false charges against Paine (and other "infidels") even down to the present time.

Roosevelt believed his religious teachers, and was misled by them, and thus was to this extent excusable.

Let the heavier part of the blame be placed where it rightly belongs—on Paine's inveterate priestly slanderers, who scrupled not to utter any villainous lie "for the glory of God."

Don't be too severe on Teddy, he wrote as he had been taught to believe by his religious teachers.

And the same sort of influence is exemplified in the outre and horrible beliefs engendered in the general religious minds by the teachings of orthodox books, pulpits and Sunday-schools.

A Pioneer of Spiritualism.

Of the many great names of the past associated with modern Spiritualism that of Robert Hare, of Philadelphia, should not be forgotten. He was a chemist of distinction, occupying the position of Professor of Chemistry, in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, and was the author of several works, among which was "Chemical Apparatus and Manipulation." He was born in 1781 in Philadelphia, and died in that city in 1858. During his last years, with a mind well stored with scientific knowledge, he turned his attention to Spiritualism, and became an earnest convert to the truthfulness of its teaching. This he promulgated by pamphlets and newspaper articles, rendering essential service to the cause in the infancy of our faith. His name and Judge Edmonds, with that of Gov. Tallmadge and Robert Dale Owen, must ever be remembered as prominent, associated with Modern Spiritualism in its infancy.

A MESSAGE TO MAMMA.

A beautiful golden-haired darling,
Comes close to my side to-day,
And says, "Will you please to tell mamma,
I'm waiting just over the way.

"Just over the way, where the angels,
Are singing their anthems of love,
Oh, tell her, I'm waiting with others,
For her, in the mansions above.

"Her heart has been almost broken,
The tears she has shed none has known;
But tell her, 'her beautiful baby'
Is waiting to welcome her home."

How the Japs Have Won.

Dictated by Edwin Arnold, June, 1904, to Martha B. Johnston.—All Rights Reserved.

John McCullough, American actor. Classic drama. b. Coleraine, Ireland, 1833. d. Nov., 1885.

Chas. Hoyt, American journalist, humorist, playwright, author. d. 1900.

Many American writers have given to Commodore Perry the credit for Japan's success in this warfare, because he helped to open up her ports to western shipping and her eyes to the methods of win known to the western world.

But the reason of it has not been here. It belongs to the divine order of things, and has from the beginning, that Japan should win in anything undertaken this year. Russia has fought out of her planetary orbit, and neither military prestige nor preponderance of equipment could work against a law set for her defeat at creation's dawn.

When that Christian hymn had been written and the Jap designated "A heathen in his blindness," it was doubtless thought by many peoples a right description of his condition. Let us see.

As a practical religionist the Jap is an occultist. And the Jap to-day, in that respect, but an improved growth of the Jap of 3,000 years ago. His conception of deity is only comparable to a great central principle of radiance, from which waves of light, holding all good and all power, flow constantly outward. This great central good is expressed by the Jap in the single syllable, "Om" or "On," which, when he would not put himself into harmony with divinity, he repeats over and over again with musical intonation. The little sentence quoted many times by Sir Edwin Arnold and all other writers on Oriental religions, "Om mani padme hum," forms the most powerful prayer, or invocation to the divine, that the Japanese or other Orientalist can utter.

It does not surprise us now, after the lapse of 2,000 years, that when Christ came to earth those called Wise Men in his country, who had waited with listening ear, unerringly applied to Mother Nature for messages from the divine, could tell by the angle of a particular ray of light as it touched the earth, that the hour of fulfillment was at hand.

Japan has always had her Wise Men. They were there in Christ's time and are there now. They are the priests or Buddhas, and others who have chosen to walk in the light by retiring to a life of entire simplicity, contemplation and prayer; and he is accounted truly great who, thus enlightened, can look to the stars, or can find in nature somewhere the solution of every problem.

The religious dynasty of the Japanese has reached through several thousand years. Its central governing principle has been always the conservation of life in the abstract and the direct helping of the soul onward in its progress toward Eternal Good. With this in view he lives so in the simplicities of brotherly love and gentleness that he is ethnically almost on the child line, or where the life human touches the divine. That these principles are adequate for the conservation of the ego in every phase of life is more than shown by the solidarity of the Japanese kingdom in every discernible way. Optimism, sweet reasonableness and brotherly love pervade the teachings of occultism now as in the "ages dim," and Christ, if he is now on earth, must discern in the Wise men of the Japs just the kind of culture and insight that dwelt in those who bent above his cradle 2,000 years ago, and that these, too, are "searchers of the stars."

All students of astrology, and the Japs are the foremost in the world, know that the occultation of Uranus is now upon Japan. She sits, as it were, "in the shadow of a great rock," to use a scriptural expression. But they say, who are occultists: "The waves of light have drawn her into their arms. They have carried her into the bosom of her faithful star," meaning this is Japan's moment of divine favor—her time to act if she desired to win.

It were as well with the individual as with a race, to study the laws of life, on the astral plane, in search of moments of such power; but Occidental religion does not admit of those sweet obligations to the stars that led mankind to the finding of a Savior, and lent an everlasting glow to the name of Bethlehem.

We are, as the occultists say, but "travelers in the dust,' would we heap upon Commodore Perry the glory that belongs to immutable law and has since the morning stars sang together. The real debt to the American commodore is ours. He has helped to throw wide a window through which the western world might look in upon the Flowery Kingdom and discern the real power and wondrous illumination that have been the winning factors with the "little Japs."

SUGGESTION IN THE CURE OF DISEASES AND THE CORRECTION OF VICES.

The philosophy of all cures wrought under the influence of Christian Science, Divine Science, Mental Science, and all the mind and faith cures, is absolutely explained. It has been found that these cures depend entirely upon suggestion. The explanation is simple and scientific. Any man or woman of ordinary intelligence and a common education can understand it. Not only so, but when properly understood and rightly applied in practice, by what we call Specific Suggestion, the management of all diseases heretofore treated by all mental or mind-cure methods is reduced to a positive science, and the results are marvelous. We assume that the law has been discovered by which the mind can be trained to control the bodily functions in health and disease, and that under this law, by suggestion, all diseases are amenable to relief and cure.

By suggestion in the treatment of disease we mean the presentation of thoughts to the mind of the patient in a manner and under conditions that will result in the functional and organic changes necessary to restore conditions of health.

That Christian Science, Divine Science, Mental Science, and other mental cure methods have relieved thousands of people nobody can deny, and we should give them credit for all they have done, and for what they are still doing. But Specific Suggestion is away in advance of all of these; it not only takes in all other methods of cure, but it simplifies them, and shows that they are all under the operation of one common, positive law, and that all people and all diseases can be reached and cured under this law provided, however, that a cure be within the bounds of possibility.

But, notwithstanding we can demonstrate the truth in this law of cure, and are able to assert that we can, absolutely, relieve and cure disease by this method, when we attempt to make an application of it in the treatment of any case of disease, people first want to know how suggestion or mental influences can relieve pain and cure disease. It is not sufficient for us to simply assert the fact that we can cure them by suggestion. People insist upon knowing how suggestion cures.

Here is the explanation: Man is possessed of two minds. One we call the "objective mind," and the other the "subjective mind."

The objective mind is the mind which results from organization, and it may be regarded as the function of the brain. It is the mind with which we do business; the mind that operates through the five physical senses. It comes, develops with, and finally dies with, the physical body. It controls all voluntary motion.

The subjective mind is a distinct entity It occupies the whole human body, and, when not opposed in any way, it has absolute control over all the functions and sensations of the body.

While the objective mind has control of all of our voluntary functions and motions, the subjective mind controls all the silent, involuntary and vegetative functions. Nutrition, waste, all secretions and excretions, the action of the heart in the circulation of the blood, the lungs in respiration or breathing, and all cell life, cell changes and developments, are positively under the complete control of the subjective mind. This subjective mind can see without the use of physical eyes. It perceives by intuition. It has the power to communicate with others without the aid of ordinary physical means. It can read the thoughts of others. It receives intelligence and transmits it to people at a distance. Distance offers no resistance against the successful missions of the subjective mind. Its memory is perfect. It never forgets anything. It never sleeps. It is capable of sustaining an existence independent of the body. It never dies. It is the living soul.—E. The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

An Interesting Account

By Thomas H. B. Cotton.

Monday evening, January 3, 1898, when we met, only three guests were present—Mr. and Mrs. Gunn and the writer, with the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Smith. Very promptly at the time appointed, 8 o'clock, Mrs. Gunn saw a young man by her side (i. e., a spirit). He was on his knees lying across her lap, his head bowed low and buried in his hands, an attitude of the most abject grief and humiliation. He had in earth life committed the terrible crime of murder. He had paid the penalty on the scaffold. He was brought to us by the circumstance of Mrs. Gunn having read during the day, an appeal in behalf of the abolition of capital punishment, a subject of profound interest to all advanced thinkers. In this appeal the name of the notorious criminal Durrant was mentioned. This grief-stricken spirit in our midst, had in an unfortunate moment, exercised an adverse influence on Durrant, and was brought to us by his mother, also in spirit life, in order to wake him up as it were. From the moment that his spirit left the body on the gallows, he drifted straight back to his cell in the prison and remained there in a comatose condition.

There he was from time to time visited by his spirit mother who was unable to make her presence known to him. How long he might have remained in that condition and in that cell, held under the spell of stupor, we can only conjecture; but the same law operating to produce this experience in this case will certainly, under like circumstances, produce a similar experience in all cases of the same kind. How many thousands of criminals who have paid the death penalty are therefore lying in their old prison cells on earth, waiting, waiting, waiting for the coming of some good Samaritan to wake them up and give them light! These are a few of the waifs of the spirit world! The mother of this young man told a sorrowful tale of pain in her own experience in the body; the result of unhappy marriage. She yielded to the pressure of outside influence and married a man whom she did not love; but O, how she did love another! The man she married was coarse and beastly. He had money, but her life with him became almost unbearable. How many times she wished him dead; and this when this unfortunate son was still unborn; and this accounted for his murderous tendency when on the earth. This woman's lover whom she did not marry, was broken in spirit and passed on before her to the spirit world. At the time of their coming to our circle, their wedding day in spirit life was fixed and the event soon to take place that would consummate a happiness replete far beyond the power of mortals to conceive of, the perfect union of two souls in spirit life. Her son also would be permitted to visit them from time to time, and when he has worked his way up from his present degraded condition will have his permanent home with them. All this which was so like a romance, was to each one present there, perfectly real and true. This woman's thanks to us for thus affording her this opportunity to help relieve her son, were expressed in words which plainly told that our work was not in vain. She labored to make it clear that this overflowing gratitude could not be restrained; but she gave us to understand that all that she could say would give us but a faint conception of her deep thankfulness. Her blessings would abide with us forever. She hoped we would go on in the good work in behalf of others. Mrs. Smith's guides then tendered her and the company that came with her a graceful invitation to remain with us during the deliberations of the evening, as guests; but she politely declined with thanks, saying that her single object was to relieve her soul of the burden of debt in this expression of gratitude to us for such a glorious work as we had done for her. She then bade us good night; and we proceeded with the business in hand, to-wit, the consideration of Mrs. Wimble's case.

By this time it was fifteen minutes past 8 o'clock. Mrs. Smith's guides reminded us that the time was fully mature for us to begin the work for which the circle was originally formed, i. e., to continue our joint efforts looking to the relief of Mrs. Wimble. She proceeded to inform us that besides the three spirits who had been the first to yield to the persuasions of the higher influences and consent to cease their annoyance of the victim, there was a great number of curious ones who were interested enough to come along with them and take their place just "outside the pickets" as the guides called the limit of intrusion. In other words, they remained just near enough to make their presence known and yet far enough to prevent their influence from being obtrusive. Of these there were believed to be no less than three hundred. We next received the unpleasant intelligence that owing to the extremely unfavorable conditions surrounding the patient at the asylum, although the four spirits who were chiefly instrumental in afflicting her, had left, the way of access seemed easy for others to step in at times through the day, making it at such times very disagreeable for her. That at night she was always free. A brief session of concentration served to emphasize this last fact, and to add very little to the information at command.

Toward the close of the sitting, a control took Mrs. Smith, whose name was William Warren, late of Saginaw, Mich. He had worked in a lumber camp and had received a fall which crushed his skull. Just previous to this control, Mr. Gunn had felt a severe thump on the top of his head, as though some one had struck him with a hammer. It was the some spirit striving to make himself known. He was greatly relieved by this short interview. It is a curious and very remarkable feature of all circles where developed mediums are present and a kindly spirit prevails, that the waifs or suffering spirits may be very greatly relieved by the mere fact of an introduction into the presence of the sitters. What an incentive is this to hold the missionary spirit and phase prominent as an essential part of the work of all circles formed among mortals!

Another control took Mrs. Smith briefly, though partly under protest, as she was somewhat reduced physically on account of extra work with the two waifs previously mentioned, as well as on the previous day (Sunday) at the mediums' meeting. These spirits are very grateful for this privilege, but the strain was especially severe on the medium. She was obliged to lie in bed nearly all the next day. It is necessary for mortals to use their judgment at such times, and not let one single control take them when they feel their physical powers giving way. They will thereby be able to do far more good in the aggregate.

It was decided that evening to once more address a communication to the asylum. Finally on recommendation it was thought best to send two messages; one to the superintendent bearing photograph and letter from Mrs. Knott (a particular friend of the patient), together with the kindly greetings and best wishes of the friends present to be alike tendered to her by the superintendent. The other communication was to be sent to the guides of a prominent Spiritualist of Napa, inviting their co-operation. The meeting then adjourned.

Monday, January 10, 1898.—On account of the medium's generosity in permitting too many controls at the last meeting, Mrs. Smith on whom the heaviest burden of the work had so far fallen, was laid up a day (the last Tuesday), and determined henceforth to keep clear of all undue taxation of her powers in the future of these meetings. Accordingly as the hour approached this evening for the business in hand, she first made a preliminary explanation, during which she paced the floor for a few times, actually walking the entire distance of the length of two rooms; snapping her fingers and making gestures which to the other members of the circle were unmistakable in their import. She was disposing the spirits who had gathered in large numbers—a mixed multiutde—in such a manner that their presence would be rendered harmless for the evening. Presently she stopped walking and began to say to one of the "invisibles": "Yes, you may stay on the condition that you make no attempt to control any medium until the business of the evening shall have all been attended to." To another she would say, "No; you will not be welcome to-night. Seek for consolation somewhere else. Your case would be hurtful to the medium. You are therefore forbidden to remain."

After a brief interval of silence my wife who had been in the spirit world since May, 1806, controlled Mrs. Gunn and said to me: "I felt that I must come and greet you, my darling." Then after a pause she said, "Do you remember when I said to you, 'Be kind to me, and I will be true to you?'" I replied that though I felt that the words had certainly been uttered in the past by her, I could not at the moment recall any certain time when she spoke them. She said, "It was on the evening of our marriage, after the guests had departed. I have come to-night to thank you, for you kept your promise faithfully. You have been kind to me indeed, through the earthlife journey, and I have been with you all the time since leaving the body, except when I go occasionally to my own spirit home. You have entered upon a glorious work. Continue faithful in the discharge of duty as you have begun, until we greet each other where parting is no more." She bade me good-bye with a hearty shake of the hand, and I was made to feel once more that my coming to Oakland had not been in vain!

We then sought to know the condition of the patient (Mrs. Wimble). She was found to be in a very nervous condition, but soon our silent concentration restored her to peace and tranquillity. It is to be borne in mind that in all these deliberations the physical presence of Mrs. Wimble was 50 miles away in the insane asylum. This bringing her visible presence into that circle from evening to evening, was purely "telepathic" or "clairvoyant," or both; so that the sensitives plainly saw her and sensed her exact condition at each meeting.

Henry Ward Beecher, a control of the medium, Mrs. Smith, made a brief but telling speech in which he declared that the faithful band were keeping guard, not only of the home, and the thronging multitude of spirits assembled there from time to time, instructing them and training them, by silent influence, but also they penetrate the walls of that asylum and keep in check the adverse influences of that woful place; that those three waifs who had so troubled the patient during the past months, had gladly accepted an invitation of the band to be taken into an institution of learning in the spirit world; and it was part of his special work to teach them there. This work of teaching these poor benighted ones, and helping those in the humble home of this medium, gave him far more pleasure and pride, than standing in the gilded hall of a great church edifice which he occupied so long in the east.

Up to this date no reply has been received from the last message sent to the superintendent and patient at the hospital, two weeks ago.

After a silence longer than usual a spirit came. In the mortal form she was known as Mrs. Phelan. She said to Mrs. Gunn, "Call the lady's face exactly to your mind just as strong as possible. Be quiet. We will do the rest." Mrs. Gunn then saw her wave her hand and there appeared a man known as one of the masters. These spirits took each other by the hand and floated away to the asylum. While there they still appeared in plain view. Mrs. G.: "They came back and stood here by me; he showing himself to me so that I will know him when I see him again. He had a long white beard and mustache. He let me take a good look in his face. I found love, charity and good will inscribed there. Now they have floated off. He told me that he could have come to me like a star, but he was willing to show himself as he had been heretofore. He says, 'The lady at the asylum, being now in perfect mental balance, thinks it an outrage to be kept there, and is extremely nervous over it at times.'"

As to those two spirit waifs (the monks) who had been troubling her, and had been the last to yield to the higher influences, they have been so thoroughly subdued, they are permitted to remain as they are now, in an atmosphere of delicious content, without one thought or aspiration for the future, yet with no desire to return to the old life.

The circle adjourned to Tuesday, January 18.

We met promptly. Present, Mr. and Mrs. Gunn, Mr. and Mrs. Smith and the writer, and one new member, Mr. Johnson. Very strong power was plainly sensed, and harmonious conditions prevailed. No adverse influences were obtrusively present.

Silence for fifteen minutes, minds being centered on the patient. Mrs. Gunn then related that she seemed to be taken to the office of the asylum, describing the archways leading to the same; that a venerable man with flowing beard was the first to meet her gaze. Then a young man with a pleasant countenance goes to a desk and picks up a letter, reads it and gives it to a clerk to answer immediately. Mrs. Gunn then has quite a "talk" with the man in authority there, and expostulates with him for some time about the patient's release. He tells her it will be his pleasure to release her just as soon as she gives evidence of being cured, but that traces of the old symptoms linger, cropping out from time to time; and he is not permitted to take any action at present. She then requested that the letter which he had ordered answered, would be left over till morning, so that he could see the patient and get an exact notion of her condition. She saw him hesitate for a few moments and then tell the clerk to wait till morning before answering the letter. That man she was "talking" with seems very reasonable and fair-minded.

Mr. Smith suggested that if possible, it was greatly to be desired that the spirit friends bring to the patient, in that asylum, such strong influence to surround her, that she should be thoroughly protected from all adverse spirits in the future. Not long afterward Mrs. Gunn saw a spirit who always called himself Ichabod. He had once been the guide of her mother, and later the controlling spirit of Lyman C. Howe. This spirit told her that he had come into the circle to announce that he would go to the patient, take her and hold her for several days. He would learn her peculiarities and get such perfect command of her manner and speech, that he would keep away all symptoms of insanity, and cause the medium to appear her normal self when in the presence of the superintendent or of any officer of the institution. This would speedily restore confidence in them and secure release at an earlier day than otherwise.

I then suggested that a vote of thanks be tendered by the circle for this special service of this missionary spirit. The thanks were gracefully accepted by the spirit friends through Mrs. Gunn, without a vote being put. The medium in exquisitely well chosen words, used as illustration, the architect and builders, when a large structure is being built. The architect does the desk work, perfects the plan of the building; but he employs others to do the building. Each does his best, and does his part well. If thanks are due from either architect or builders it is due from both. So the spirit world accepts our gratitude, with thanks to us in return.

Mrs. Gunn then asked Mrs. Smith to ascertain for her who the woman in black was that had appeared to her (Mrs. Gunn) so often lately. She had tried hard, but had been unable to find out. Mrs. Smith, through her guides informed her (and us) that this woman had committed suicide and threw the blame of it on her husband. The man died of a broken heart. The woman had not learned as yet that she had left the body. She has been all these months (or years) hunting for her husband. She will now be able to get instruction how to find him.

On this occasion a certain mischievous young man (spirit) who had managed to pass the "pickets" once before, appeared in our midst, and in such complete disguise that for a time he thought he would carry his point perfectly, namely to fool all the mediums and spirits present, "just for the fun of it." He wore the mask of an old man with white hair and long white beard. It was not till Wild Flower, the Indian girl, guide of Mrs. Smith took in the situation, that this spirit received the rebuke he so much deserved. Wild Flower then and there stoutly commanded him: "Depart from our midst, you wolf in sheep's clothing!" Furthermore she tore the mask from his face and warned him in no uncertain terms that if ever he attempted to come to us to fool us again, he would be "taken and locked up in a cage." This suggested a question of profound significance to the searcher for truth; namely are there "cages" or places of confinement in the spirit world, used expressly for the punishment or restraint of mischievous or obtrusive wicked spirits? The answer was, "Yes, countless numbers of them."

Mr. Johnson suggested that now while Mrs. Wimble is temporarily out of her body, would be a good time to catch her and talk with her, and impress her that we are working for her in this systematic way, and enlist her co-operation as far as possible. We, in silence, all called for her presence. Mrs. Gunn saw her come into the circle, dressed in perfect white raiment, with long white veil. She saw her standing, "talking" to Mr. Johnson. Mrs. Gunn then addressed her in these words: "Mrs. Wimble, I affirm you will remember this interview here to night; that you impress it on your mind, and when you are free you will continue to remember it." (After Mrs. Wimble had finished the conversation with Mr. Johnson) "She then stood with one hand on his head and the other pointing upward and in a southerly direction. Then a stream of light poured down upon her, just like that which flooded the two waifs, on a former occasion."

Johnson: "I have a request also; that is that every day at noon, five minutes before 12 o'clock, we all fix our minds upon this patient, for her benefit in general and for her complete recovery in particular."

Mrs. Gunn exclaimed, "O, I saw her body lying there; [in the asylum]. I saw her drop right into it!"

The circle adjourned to meet again Tuesday January 25.

Present, same members as last week.

Our guides began on this evening with an invocation by Mrs. Smith's guides, seemingly interrupted by repeated ringing of the firebells. She next told us that the patient (Mrs. Wimble) was present in the room, and her presence was also sensed by Mrs. Gunn. Mr. Johnson gave such of us as needed it, a lesson in concerted mental treatment as follows: "Adopt certain things to be desired or demanded of the spirit world. Then make the request in a given order of iteration, silently. Before this silent iteration of the words expressing this demand, agree on a certain rate of breathing to be indicated for instance, by his counting for us all; so that our breathing may be in as perfect unison as possible, and our unspoken words in like manner to be addressed as nearly as possible in perfect time. He counted 1, 2, 3, 4, while inhaling, 1, 2, 3, 4, while exhaling the supposed breath. His rate of counting was, perhaps slow for some of the sitters, while a trifle fast for others. The words we agreed upon were "freedom" and "health" of body and mind of the patient. Mr. Johnson further desired us to try to see a spot of light in the top of our heads. After silence of some fifteen minutes, the various members of the circle related their experiences. My experience was a dominant hope that freedom and health would yet come to her.

Mrs. Gunn's experiences were very varied. "First," said she, "a globe or white light in the center of the room. Its rays were divided into sprays or beams, resting on each of the sitters. The patient was in plain view to her. She was enveloped in a separate volume of light, her head and neck being flooded with a bright or white light, and the remaining part of the body in a marine blue. The patient said: 'O what a beautiful influence! It seems the angels must be here!' Then she said, as she came in the light by me, 'O Mrs. Gunn, where am I?' I answered, 'You are all right.' From first to last, there were so many other things that I had to throw off constantly, and fight them back as it were." Mr. Gunn reports nothing special. Mr. Smith saw floating shadows. Mr. Johnson, after some waiting saw the patient sitting all alone. Mrs. Smith said that she (the patient) was in the habit of coming here regularly and expects it every week. "When trying to draw her I could do nothing. When I committed her to the special care of the spirit friends, she was very apt to be brought promptly forward. It seemed like somebody applying a fan; whirling a fan and trying to fan her. Her spirit has been accustomed to coming here without her knowing it. Her feet were very cold to-night. She was feeling very much depressed, and exclaimed, 'Oh! free me from this, or take me from the earth plane!'"

Mr. Smith: "What about that one that was to take Mrs. Wimble in special charge?"

Mrs. Gunn: "I saw him and what he was doing in regard to this matter, to-night. He says that we must do a prominent part. He says he is conducting the forces as we send them, and centering them upon her. As I see him now he stands right back of her with his eyes fixed intently upon her. There is the influence of that white light that penetrates further down, by his being there, but the blue light is all around her. This guide that has taken the case in hand is now trying to select a band to aid him, but it is not to be done in a day nor a month nor sometimes in a year. They come in and try for a while and then remain or gracefully retire, according to their stability to serve the case."

Mr. Smith still suggested writing again, but Mrs. Gunn's guides recommended caution in regard to too much writing, lest we should unwittingly arouse the antagonism of the hubahd and brother-in-law. She says that now for the first time we have gained the ascendancy over the adverse forces; that is, we are at last more positive than they. They are just now more negative than we are. It is the first time that this condition has obtained with us, and above all it behooves us to hold on to this advantage. Mrs. Smith advised the plan of having the husband interviewed as a detective would do it; i. e., let some one go in the character of an anti-Spiritualist or one opposed to Spiritualism, and in this way, before he knows it, get just the information from him that we want. Mrs. Gunn said she would take it upon herself to see Mr. Wimble provided he could be found, between this and the next meeting. Mr. Johnson would try hard to have a friendly talk with the patient's brother during the same period.

Mrs. Gunn (addressing the patient): "We desire you here to-night to take from you an influence that is working between you and your normal spirit; that will free you from the bonds that are now held upon you by your friends, those who are keeping guard where you are. Assert your rights from what is now told you here this night. Keep as strong as possible and a determined will that those that have disturbed you shall not disturb you again. The music that you hear at night, remember. It will profit you. Remember the experiences you have had here."

A message from Mrs. Smith's band: A question: "Is it to be a success or no?" Mrs. Gunn was very tired, and got no answer. Mr. Johnson felt as if cold water were being thrown on something. Mrs. Gunn saw a crown made of flowers and a great letter C or O, rather hazy and indistinct. Mrs. Smith interpreted that to mean "Go See!" Mr. Johnson sees a woman (spirit) that bothers him some, because she is here so much, and not identified.

The meeting adjourned to Tuesday, February 1, 1898.

The usual members met on time.

After some fifteen minutes' social chat, we proceeded to the work of concentration, which as before was directed to the freedom, health and strength of Mrs. Wimble. The first report after the silence was of Mrs. Gunn, substantially as follows: "I was in the room, saw a mirror and a lady standing in front of it. She wore a cape or cloak with a velvet or fur edge. I saw Mrs. Wimble. She said 'I wish I could go with you.' 'Well, my dear,' I replied, 'you will go with me pretty soon.' It seems she has health, strength and power. 'You must be ready to go with us, and also ready to return to your body instantly.'

Next she was here. Then Mrs. Phelan came. Mrs. Phelan took her away in what seemed a shower bath of light. When she was returned to her body, I said, 'Mrs. Wimble, look at us clairvoyantly.' She replied, 'Well, it seems that I have seen you in a dream.' I said, 'Don't think of it as a dream, but fix it in your mind that you see us clairvoyantly. She seemed to wonder if her husband would ever take her back again. A spirit seemed to be manipulating her brain, relieving certain parts of it that had been overcharged by the influence of undeveloped spirits in the past. This overcharging of certain parts of the brain, instead of real obsession, has been the actual trouble with her for the past few months. Also she seems to have received a letter from her husband, which disturbed her considerably."

Mr. Johnson got the impression that she was better and would probably be back in Oakland soon.

Mrs. Gunn: Now will the guides watch with her for a time, i. e., for a little while, and see if she is listening to us and trying to catch our conversation? (To Mr. Johnson): I will address her and you, if you can, catch the answer. Mrs. Wimble, do you hear my voice clairaudiently? Please respond so that these psychics will bear witness to your response. Mrs. Wimble, do you hear my voice clairaudiently? I have spoken in your ear; do you hear me? Mrs. Smith's response: I got this both times and very rapidly the second time: 'I think I understand it to-night. I get a phase which brings me peace and harmony within myself, and is helping me physically and mentally.'

Mrs. G.: "Mrs. Wimble, I, Mrs. Gunn, of Oakland, am speaking to you now. Be of good cheer, because there are a number of friends here who are doing all in their power for you. You are not forsaken. You have dear friends who meet you every Tuesday night and help you. Be strong and happy and healthful, and mistress of your own organism."

Mrs. S.: She gets the influence, but she thinks it is one; she thinks it is spirit power. It is hard for her to understand that she has gone out of her body. It seemed very far away when she went out of herself. Things were false, not real. Things were overdrawn and intangible. All truthful, if she could gather hold and could hold and understand as she came to herself. She has lain in a trance or dazed condition as the physicians would call it. She will understand it better now, for the spirits are instructing her to remain more within herself, and the spirit she says is giving us good advice, and not making her believe that she is some great individual. "That spirit that comes now to me," said she "does not array me in white robes and make me think I am waiting for a gifted consort, coming to take me in triumph to his spirit home." She wonders much at all this, but it is something that she can understand gradually, as it comes back again to her mind. She will want to put it together and think this whole matter thoroughly over. She thinks over all through the week, what has transpired every Tuesday evening. She says: "I like the spirit that came to me last, for it is practical and very truthful," and as you go out of yourself, speaking to her, thus, she thinks to herself, "what more are you than a spirit without the physical form?" and she hears the spirit voice, and receives it, but she does not stop to question whether that spirit is living on earth, or is still in its earthly form. She calls them spirits, and she welcomes them just the same as she would welcome any other spirits from the unseen.

(To be concluded.)

BLOW BY BLOW.

The billow bursts on the rock-bound coast, and then goes hissing home,
And the only trace of its savage night is a sheet of flashing foam;
And the raindrop falls on the mountain side, and is lost in the fronded fern,
And never a trace of its lifetime's worth can mortal eye discern,
But the waves wash in with relentless force, and smile
with a heavy hand,
Till the constant crash of the coming tells, and the rock is yielding sand;
And the raindrops fall till they fill the streams, and the streams swell day by day,
Till the river roaring rips its banks by the hundred yards away.
And so it is with great reform, though the work is plain when done,
'Tis step by step and blow by blow, that the roaring field is won;
Though the strife be fierce, and the gains seem small,
we must keep on striking home,
And to win the cause of the great reform we must build as they builded Rome. —Exchange.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent. of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

The Monroe Monitor speaks as follows: "The Progressive Society meets at the residence of John Brown Sunday afternoon. Quite a number of enthusiasts were present and seemed very interested in the New Thought subject. The first on the program was the election of officers. James Farmer was elected president; George Kelsey, vice president; Mrs. John Brown, treasurer; Mrs. Fred M. Ferguson, secretary. Then the principles and bylaws of our society were drawn up and adopted. They are as follows: We believe in the Infinite Spirit wisdom and intelligence called God; and the immortality of every human being. That every being is a divine germ capable of infinite unfoldment and development. That love, purity and fidelity as the spirit of religion and justice as the highest moral law, and recognizing the universal brotherhood of man. We, the undersigned, organize ourselves together for the purpose of seeking light and truth, thereby fitting ourselves for a higher and a beter sphere than we now fill and further to uplift and benefit humanity."

Considerable interest is being evinced in the case of Mrs. Georgia Lathrop, of Quincy, Ill., who declares she was wooed and won through telepathy by a preacher in a Missouri town. Mrs. Lathrop, who recently secured a divorce in the circuit court and who sings in the choir of the First Baptist church, says she and the preacher who will marry her are almost constantly in telepathic communication. She says when she received a telepathic kiss it felt as though she and the minister were actually together. The wedding is expected soon to take place."

The clairvoyants of Indianapolis are concerned about the new ordinance that makes it compulsory for them to secure licenses if they wish to continue to practice their profession. The employes of the comptroller's office were kept busy to-day answering telephone communications asking when the ordinance would be signed by Mayor Holtzman and become a municipal law. The date the mayor will sign the ordinance has not been announced.—Sentinel.

Joseph Jeanes, Sr., a photographer for fifty years, died at Chester, Pa., aged 75 years, from the effects of a fall from a chair. He gained considerable notoriety by claiming to have taken a spirit picture, which was reproduced in leading journals.

After being for seven years confined in a ward for the most violent inmates at the Southern California State Hospital for the insane, Andrew H. Young is now at his home in Chicago, the subject of most wonderful restoration. Until a short time ago Mr. Young's recovery was supposed to be beyond the range of possibility, but suddenly his mania subsided, his mind cleared, and within a week he was pronounced recovered. June 25, with Superintendent Campbell, he walked into court perfectly restored, and the guardianship which was placed upon him seven years ago was dismissed. He was certainly obsessed by a spirit.

Frederick Blausch, a cabinetmaker of Laurel avenue Stapleton, S. I., said at his home last night that his daughter Catharine, 23 years old, was a victim of the General Slocum disaster. Blausch said that his daughter was on a visit to Mrs. Tillie Hauff of 143 East Third street, who was a member of St. Mark's church. He says that Catherine and the Hauff family were on the Slocum when she started on her fatal trip. His daughter, he says, was last seen by one of the survivors on the after second deck of the Slocum. Two of the Hauff family were saved and a third is still missing. Blausch declared that a night before the accident he dreamed that his daughter Catherine went on an excursion and that he could see the vessel afire and hear his daughter cry for help. He told his wife of the affair the following day, and when he heard of the Slocum disaster he started an investigation and found his dream had come too true.—New York Times.

The Chicago Spiritualists' League will have a grand meeting at Free Masons' Hall, 4227-9 Cottage Grove avenue, Monday evening, July 11. All leaders of meetings, all workers, and those interested in this grand truth are invited to come and join us that by mutual cooperation we may aid our cause to win the attention of the people. We wish a higher standard for our workers, and by proper teaching weed out all unworthy workers and bring to the front honest mediums and psychic that shall honor our cause. Walter DeVoe will give the address of the evening on Spiritualism and New Thought, followed by a free discussion. The musical and literary part will please all; to finish with messages from Mrs. Burland, Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Noyes of Boston. All are welcome. Dr. Warne, president; Otto E. Kropp, secretary.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

H. L. Chapman, one of Michigan's prominent Spiritualists, writes: "While I feel that the books I have ordered will be of much benefit to me, yet I do not expect to find but a small portion of the value in them that I receive from The Progressive Thinker for only one dollar, and I wish that every truth-loving, right-doing citizen could read the article in No. 760, 'The Ethics of Spiritualism,' by Nora Batchelor. This article seems to touch the real basis of the spiritual needs of the hour. It shows us the line of thought that will carry us above and beyond the frauds and deception that are perpetrated under the name of Spiritualism; living for others more than self has made great men and good women. The few have borne much of the burden of lifting the world from its benighted conditions of the past to its present condition where liberal thought can be expressed, yet where the thinkers of the day can plainly read in the faces of the toiling masses the need of justice and right, as against the legalized wrongs of greed and self. Oh, that all the people of this so-called free country could thoroughly understand the needs of the hour, and have the moral courage to act accordingly, regardless of priest or party, that we might bring into our government a condition based on the thought of Confucius when he said, "Do not unto others that which ye would not have them do unto you." I thank you again for furnishing so much for so little cost as you do in The Progressive Thinker."

Eva Neilson writes: "June 19, I attended the First Spiritual Church at Niagara Falls. Madame Harris of Chicago, assisted the pastor, Mrs. Atcheson, in giving messages. Madame Harris told me that my mother who had passed to spirit life three months before, was anxious about some papers, and I would find out why, if on going home, I would look into a certain small box to be found in a bureau drawer. When I got home, more for curiosity than anything else, I looked for and found the box of papers, and upon looking them over, I found there were receipts paid by mother, but which had never been credited to her. Had I not looked over the papers I should certainly have lost money, which I can illafford to do."

Life After Death, as portrayed by C. W. Leadbeater: "Death is naturally a subject of paramount interest to everybody, because the one and only certain fact in the future biography of each one of us is that one day we must die. Yet there is perhaps no other subject about which there hovers so much uncertainty in the popular mind, no subject upon which there are so many and such serious misconceptions. Religion ought to have cleared up these doubts, and removed these misconceptions, consequently a vast amount of unnecessary sorrow and suffering exist in the world. The theosophical teaching, however, is absolutely clear and definite on these points, and for anyone who finds himself able to accept it it proves exceedingly illuminative and helpful. When man lays down his physical body at death he is not therefore bodiless, but finds himself inhabitating another vehicle of finer matter, spoken of as the astral body. This body is the vehicle of desires and passions and motives, and the length of the man's life in this stage depends upon the amount of such feeling still existing within his nature. If these desires are gross and physical, as is that of the drunkard or sensualist, then, since he has lost the physical body through which alone they could be satisfied, his continued desire will be a torment to him until in process of time it gradually wears itself out. But if the man has conquered during earth life all this side of his lower nature, and the only desires left within him are high and pure and good, then their satisfaction will bring him peace and happiness instead of suffering, and he will soon pass on from this astral realm to another still less material. This second stage of the post-mortem life is what has been symbolized in all religions under the name of heaven. Heaven is no mere dream, but a living, glorious reality; yet it differs much from the popular conception of it. For in this case also each man has made it for himself, and therefore it is perfectly adapted to him. Meantime, I would adjure you to avoid the evil results which come from all these popular misunderstandings about death. Among these the dread of it so often felt by many is prominent, and again, the mourning with which we usually surround it. Such mourning is entirely selfish, for it ignores the fact that the dead has passed into a higher and more beautiful life, and very often our uncontrolled grief does positive harm to those whom we love, causing in them the same depression which we feel ourselves. Not that the theosophical teaching counsels us to forget our dead. Far from it. We cannot remember them too often nor too strongly, but it must not be with selfish greed and despair, but with loving and helpful thought, which will assist them in their upward way. For we may be very sure that our thought can reach them and be felt by them, and so should be careful that it is the right sort of justice."

When the death of Mrs. Araminta Helmer of No. 4639 North Ninth street, whose funeral took place yesterday, was announced to her daughter-in-law, Mrs. William F. Helmer, on Tuesday last, the latter was not surprised, for she had been forewarned in a dream a few night before that her mother-in-law was dead. Mrs. Helmer died from a stroke of apoplexy, from which she had twice suffered before, and she told her daughter-in-law recently that the third would doubtless be fatal. On Thursday night of last week Mrs. W. F. Helmer dreamed that her mother-in-law was dead, and that she was at her side as she lay in her casket. The dream was so vivid that on waking it greatly disturbed her.—St. Louis Republic.

Mrs. LeSieur writes to remind the friends of the benefit Band of Harmony, to take place at the home of Mrs. Ellis, 403 Orchard street, North Side. A drawing of a fine china painted dish is to take place, and a pleasant surprise awaits us all. Thursday, July 7.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie writes from Port Huron, Mich.: "Odd Fellows' Temple was filled to the door last night (Sunday) to attend my lecture. Wednesday evening I lectured for the New Thought Club. The cause seems to be building up, and the outlook is good. The friends gave me a royal welcome, and it was a visit long to be remembered."

Mrs. Henrietta Straub writes: "I have received all right 'Ghost Land,' and thank you very much for the fine premium. The hurried glimpse I caught from its contents warrants a fair treat for the time I can quietly study the book. It is by the same author who wrote Art Magic."

G. F. Perkins writes: "I am still here in San Francisco, and have very good meetings every Sunday evening at Scottish Hall. I hold circles Tuesday and Friday evenings. I am expecting to do better work than ever. All friends are invited to call or write to me at No. 1220 Mission St."

Mrs. Virginie Barrett desires to engage with societies as lecturer and medium, west of Indianapolis, Ind. Terms as follows: The society to pay all expenses of hall rent, advertising and entertainment, charge 10 cents admission and give her the total receipts as compensation for her services. Address her at No. 29 Gladstone avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Chicago Examiner says: "Patrick Fitzgerald, thirty-nine years old, told the police yesterday that he was possessed of spirits who made him act queerly at times and spend his money recklessly, so that he was forced to sleep in box cars. The man was charged in Justice Quinn's court with sleeping in cars along the Illinois Central Railroad. He said his sister had committed suicide eight years ago and that at times he was hypnotized by what he calls 'the wicked spirit of his dead sister.'"

An item in the Chicago Examiner from Shreveport, La., says: "St. Julian Renfro, the colored boy who was stricken deaf, and dumb in Chicago, May 31, while playing whist with a party of three white friends, recovered his speech and hearing at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The boy suddenly opened his lips and shouted, 'The Lord be praised!' Renfro's lips continued to work, and those nearest to him heard him utter the words of the Twenty-third Psalm. The news of the boy's recovery rapidly spread through the town and the house was filled with people. Renfro, after talking a few minutes, said he could talk no more until Sunday. A week ago Renfro said he had a vision in which he learned that he would be able to speak to-day."

You are invited to the monthly meeting of the Chicago Spiritualist League, to be held in Boydston's hall, Forty-second Place and Cottage Grove avenue, Monday evening, July 11, 1904. Business meeting, 7:45 to 8:15 p. m. Program: Music, piano and violin, Prof. Rose and Mrs. Burkhart; America, audience; piano solo, Miss Fest; address, topic, Spiritualism and New Thought, Walter DeVoe; free discussion; vocal solo, Florence Daniels; messages, Mrs. Burland, Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Noyes of Boston. Collection at the door, 10 cents. The object of the league is to unite all the leaders of meetings in the city and harmonize all the workers, cooperate all who sympathize, convince skeptics and demonstrate to all the grand truth of the continuity of life. All are cordially invited.

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society held a picnic at Beverly Hill on Sunday, June 26, and a more delightful time can hardly be imagined. The day perfect, woods beautiful, good company, and lots to eat, made a day's outing long to be remembered. Mr. Eichelberger added much to our pleasure by the music of his large gramaphone, and fine selections. We have another picnic on July 10. Take Rock Island train from Englewood at 8:49 or 11:14 to Beverly Hill. Bring your own lunch. Go and ask your friends to go with you. Walter DeVoe will lecture for us at 319 East 55th street on Sunday evening, July 10. Come and hear him. He is a bright one of the New Thought workers, and thoroughly wide awake. Psychic demonstrations by good mediums. Everybody welcome. Service, 7:45. Look out for another progressive euchre party soon."

The Sunday-school question in De Pere, Wis.: "C. W. Smart writes: "In my rustic tramps I have attended two Sunday-school excursions, one from De Pere up the Fox river to Appleton, some 35 miles. It was very interesting. The government has expended a great sum of money on the river, in building dams and locks to accommodate navigation, but it was not a success financially for the Sunday-school. It lost from $50 to $75. This one was given by the Catholics. The next excursion was down the Fox river and through Green bay, an arm out of Lake Michigan, some 60 miles and return. It was a long day's ride and very tiresome. It was given by the Lutheran Methodists, and they were out $75 to $100. That is what I heard talked on the boat. They will give no more this year."

C. H. Figuers writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "The East End Spiritual Society, 1749 Superior street, Cleveland, Ohio, C. H. Figuers pastor, closed for the summer, June 26. There was a large audience present and much regret was expressed that the meetings would not continue all summer. The season just ended has been very successful. We will open our hall again for next season on Sunday, September 4, 1904, and continue until the last Sunday of June, 1905. We have no membership fees or monthly dues; no unseemly squabbling over this thing or that, but each member animated with the true idea of spreading the truth, lives in harmony with themselves and both worlds. We are doing our best to let our light shine with equal lustre on all. In all of our six years of continuous meetings there has been nothing but peace in our house. Let others find the pearl of great price, which is simply minding your own business, and strictly let other people's business alone. All the clamor about fraud and fraud workers has not injured the attendance at this hall in the least. We intend trying to have a choir of trained voices next season, and shall use C. Payson Longley's beautiful songs, every word and note of which goes straight to the soul, so full are they of true spirituality. We had fine music last winter, thanks to Mr. Phillip Herder, Jr., Mrs. Frank Mulder and the boy wonder on the violin, Master Alex Herder; in addition to this we will have a quartette. I do not know whether the other societies will take a vacation this summer or not, but suppose they will, as Lake Brady will open July 3, 1904, with that sterling worker and favorite, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie; and then Mantua opens in the near future. Both places draw largely from Cleveland."

M. C. Matthews writes from Pittsburg, Pa.: "We are at the close of our season's work for 1903 and 1904. We have had a good and successful year, considering the change of location to our new territory. For the month of June we have had Mrs. A. T. Reidinger, better known as 'our own dear Margaret Gaule.' When she saw our new church building and the location, she rose to such ecstatic joy, and was so profuse in her expressions of delight, that we felt very much elated and encouraged in our work. So great is the interest in our church in the mind of 'Our Margaret' that she can hardly refrain from dwelling upon the grand building and location of the First Church of Spiritualists in Pittsburg, Pa., when addressing the congregation. Margaret is very good in her work of psychometry, tests and spirit communications. Many anxious and burdened hearts were made lighter and happier through messages received from loved ones in spirit land. Large, strong men would weep like children when receiving recognition from their mother or father and others passed over. Of course the ladies were also recipients of these communications and shared in the pleasures of the meetings. Our services are largely attended, especially on Sunday and Thursday exenings—the large number could not be accommodated. When Miss Gaule came to us from New York she brought with her Miss Mabel Clarke, the beautiful singer of the New York spiritual society of which Margaret is pastor. Miss Clarke is a grand singer, and with the assistance of her cultivated voice our services were made doubly interesting. We hope she will visit us again when visiting our city. On Sunday evening, June 26, after the services, we had a good, hearty hand-shaking of farewell, wishing each other a happy vacation and a pleasant re-uniting at the opening of our services in September, when we will welcome 'our dear Margaret' to serve us for the month. In conclusion let me say that Margaret is so closely allied with the spirit realms that she is ever ready to give words of consolation, not only to her friends and acquaintances, but to the weary traveler to the celestial spheres. May she always possess these earnest qualifications is our earnest wish."

Elizabeth M. Fish writes: "The Parkland Heights Camp-meeting and Home Association, of Parkland, Buck county, Pa., will open camp on Sunday, July 3. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates will occupy the platform. We will continue every Sunday until September 1. For further particulars, address Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary, Floral Heights, Parkland, Pa., Bucks county."

Lucy S. Carroll writes from Washington, Pa.: "The First Spiritualist Temple of Washington, Pa., has closed its doors for the summer. It will open again the first Sunday in October. G. W. Way, of Wheeling, W. Va., served the society for the month of June successfully both spiritually and financially. He is an earnest and sincere worker; can handle any subject given him by the audience with ease and intelligence. His tests cannot be excelled. We look forward to having him with us again in October. Quite a number of the members of our society contemplate attending the Lily Dale camp. I will be there, and hope to meet a great number of whom I have read in The Progressive Thinker."

Secretary writes: "A communication was received this morning by Dr. H. A. Cross from Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, saying she would be present at the meeting of the League, July 11, at Boydston's Hall, corner 42d Place and Cottage Grove Avenue, and would do her best to help out, and make it a success. She was asked to be one on the program when she was here in the city, but did not think it possible for her to be here. We will all be glad to hear her again, and probably we will not have another opportunity for a long time. Come out everybody and bring a friend, and let's have a rousing meeting of Spiritualists."

H. Brady writes from Thorpe, Iowa: "Help for the cause of Spiritualism is very much needed in and around this locality. Few people here understand the definition of the word medium, yet most people's minds here are fast ripening for the harvest. I will guarantee free entertainment and free hall to a good materializing medium. I hope this may meet with the attention of Mrs. Pruden, of St. Paul, Minn. She is a fine test medium, and could do a grand work among us. Good attendance can be guaranteed here for at least two weeks. We need help. Letters of inquiry will be cheerfully replied to by the writer. There is a radius of eighty miles square here where our cause has not been advocated during a lapse of fifteen years. We gather all the spiritual food we have from the columns of the dear old Progressive Thinker. Will some one please come to our aid?"

C. A. Buss writes from San Diego, Cal.: "We are weekly in receipt of the ten copies of your very interesting and valuable paper, disposing of the same in our meetings and we consider this a very effective mode of spreading the truth, a valuable aid in fact to all societies in connection with the lecture and message work. We have had since the departure of Brother Will C. Hodge, a very excellent worker (especially in the messages) in Mrs. Florence K. White, formerly of New York. She has maintained her position well and attracted to the Sabbath evening meetings a goodly number of strangers who have manifested a decided interest. We can cheerfully recommend her to societies in need of such a one. We have, in fact, been blessed in securing good substantial representatives, and our work as a result is making rapid strides. Our Lyceum has an average attendance of fifty, and the sessions are well responded to in song, recitations, marches and wand drills, and our series of lessons in class work and topics for discussion all meet with a prompt response and earnest co-operation. Within the past six months our Young People's Society has organized with an enrolled membership of forty, under the leadership of Herbert R. Fay, a young man, a recent convert, and one thoroughly fired with enthusiasm in practical works. A good choir has been established under an efficient leadership, and a series of topics has been named for each session for a period of six months, and some one of the members select out of said list the subject to enlist the attention of all during each particular session; the subjects have all been assigned. It is no uncommon occurrence to have a dozen or more give expression during each meeting. Each month they give a programme, followed with dancing and refreshments. I mention this work in detail that it may be an inspiration to other societies in this great branch of our spiritual work, the preparation of young workers to take the place of the elderly ones, many of whom did not receive this opportunity and great blessing until the midday of life. Our morning conference is devoted to general expression, and every meeting is better than the last. The Harmony Grove Camp bids fair to be this summer the best ever held; convenes July 17 and closes July 31. It will be conducted by such workers as Daniel W. Hull, Mrs. Marchant of San Bernardino, Mary Vlasek and Mrs. Allen of Los Angeles, Mrs. M. P. Morrell, Mrs. Jane Mullen, Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud, and the worthy president of the camp association, J. L. Dryden of our city. Mr. J. T. McFerron is the secretary of the association during the present year, who will be very pleased to reply to all questions and correspondence relative to same."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

TAKE NOTICE.

In order to accommodate all parties, so that they could duly celebrate the Fourth of July, we were compelled to go to press earlier than usual, hence many items of interest were crowded out.

Consistency.

It is quite common among preachers to charge non-church goers who criticise the Bible, with picking therefrom here and there, a disconnected text, or passage, upon which to base their objections to it as a whole. Did it ever occur to the reader that of all classes of people, preachers themselves are most guilty of this very charge?

Take the subject of Spiritualism for example. Did any one ever hear a preacher discourse upon a Bible text unquestionably favorable to the Spiritualistic hypothesis? That there are many such texts in the Bible, no one knows better than the preacher, and yet he shuns them as he would a viper. But when he wants to preach a sermon against Spiritualism, he does the very thing he charges Bible critics with doing. He selects only those passages which serve his purpose, making no mention whatever of other passages which as flatly contradict those he selects, as the fifth verse of the twenty-seventh chapter of Matthew contradicts the eighteenth verse of the first chapter of Acts.

The fact of the matter is that preachers are not consistent in this direction. They are as careful in their selections of texts to preach from, as are those they criticise, careful in their selections for adverse comment upon the Bible. A little more common honesty on both sides would aid much in discovering the truth.

H. V. SWERINGEN.

THE BETTER LAND.

"I hear thee speak of the better land,
Thou callest its children a happy band;
Mother! oh where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it, and weep no more?
Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
And the fireflies glance through the myrtle boughs?"
"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Is it where the feathery palm-trees rise,
And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
Or 'midst the green islands of glittering seas,
Where fragrant forests perfume the breeze,
And strange, bright birds, on their starry wings,
Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?"
"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Is it far away in some region old,
Where the rivers wanders o'er sands of gold?—
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
And the diamond lights up the secret mine,
And the pearl gleams forth from the coral strand?—
Is it there, sweet mother, that better land?"
"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy!
Ear hath not heard its deep songs of joy;
Dreams can picture a world so fair—
Sorrow and death may not enter there;
Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
For beyond the clouds, and beyond the tomb,
It is there, it is there, my child!"

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Esther Fox, in the 93d year of her age, from the residence of her son, June 22. She came to Berlin, Ohio, with her parents when three years of age, 1817, and has lived ever since almost on the same farm. Her life measures the development of the country from the wilderness. She may be said to have always been a Spiritualist. The funeral was held on June 24, in the United Church at Ceylon, and was largely attended. Hudson Tuttle officiated. COR.

Mr. John D. Eager passed to spirit life from his home in Pine Grove, Nian tic, Conn., June 9, 1904, aged 78 years Mr. Eager was a staunch Spiritualist, and for a number of years was vice-president of the Niantic Spiritualist Association. He was a well-read man, social and companionable, honorable and trustworthy; a man who will be missed in the community where he has so long resided.

The funeral was held at his home in Pine Grove, June 12. The services were conducted by the undersigned. As it was his wish, the body was taken to Boston, Mass., for cremation.

FANNIE SPALDING.

Passed to the higher life, from his ancestral home in Richfield, N. Y., on June 25, 1904, William Torrey Hitchings, aged 85 years.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Walter Lowenstein: Q. What is the difference between a spirit and an astral body?

Is there objection in the assertion that "the law of attraction is God?

The term "astral body" body belongs to theosophy, and its meaning is as obscure and befogged as most of the terms employed by that cult. It is supposed that there is an all-pervading "astral fluid" or "biogen" (life-fluid), out of which the spirit creates this body. It is the "shell," in and by which the spirit makes its appearance. It is entirely speculative, and fails to explain and unitize the facts. It is supposed to be the body in which ghosts appear, and spirits materialize. It is taken on and thrown off, and a spirit, unable to possess itself of this "shell," may wander, forever, disembodied even of this astral moonshine.

Between such a body and the real spirit body manifest by the spirit being, formed of attenuated matter, distinguished as "substance," there is widest difference. The spirit being is entire and complete, and the body cannot be departed from, or laid aside, or changed. Thus organized it has no use for an "astral body."

There is a very earnest objection in saying the "law of attraction," or any other law or force is God, for if there is a God, he is the all, the sum and infinite expression, and repulsion, the equal of attraction is a correlative part. Such terms show confusion of thought and a total misunderstanding of the processes of nature.

W. T. N.: Q. How is the negro problem to be solved?

A. This question is called out by the execution of a negro in Texas, for an unmentionable crime, committed with unspeakable atrocity. It was not a lynching, but by "law and order." Six thousand people gathered to witness the horrible tragedy. While in prison after his sentence, the negro "experienced religion," and on the scaffold made a Sunday-school speech, saying he was ready to die, and told the negroes to be good and to meet him in heaven.

Not to enlarge on the immorality of a doctrine that teaches that the most infamous criminal, by confession of sins, can be washed clean of crime by the blood of Jesus, and although too degraded for this world will become a shining angel in heaven, let the object-lesson be applied to the thousands of negroes assembled at the execution. They see the criminal for the time made notorious and a sort of hero, and although condemned by the judge, pardoned by gospel ministers and sent to the right hand of Christ!

Such executions are said to be for the intimidation of the vicious. The student of psychology will not hesitate in declaring that of all provocations to similar crimes, this publicity will prove the most excitive.

To meet the brutal instincts which dominate this class, for the present, at least, force must be used, as it would in controlling a herd of animals, but that force must not allow the criminal to exploit himself and become a hero, or martyr in the eyes of those whom it is intended to impress.

There should be great charity in considering this question. It must not be forgotten that the grandfathers, or great-grandfathers of the negroes of the South were savages in the jungle of Africa. Even in the condition of slaves their advancement in civilization has been remarkable. Thousands of years intervene between the white race as it is at present, and its savage ancestors, yet even now, there is a return to savagery, and the crime of which the South is most abhorrent, is by no means uncommon with the whites, South or North.

The negroes have rapidly absorbed the civilization with which they have been surrounded, and shown wonderful capabilities. Yet it has been more of absorption than that growth which impresses itself by heredity. They have imputed the dominancy of the whites to education, and believe that education will, or ought to give the same position, and in this they have been encouraged by their white friends. They take education not as a means but as an end, and sufficient for their support.

The black race is the oldest in order of time and the least advanced. It never had a civilization of its own or arts, or science or history. Its only progress has been under the forced conditions of slavery in this country. It has proved itself wholly incapable of self-government beyond tribal relations. Liberia and San Domingo are in evidence of what the negro can and will do if left to himself.

The fact is before us that the rapidly increasing negro population must be assigned a place or it will take a place of its own.

It cannot be absorbed, or if that were possible it would mean the deterioration of the nation. The scheme of colonization is chimerical, or the aggregation into special territory. The situation, briefly, is, the negro is here, he must stay, and as a factor that cannot be disposed of, must be cared for with the greatest charity and wisdom.

The expectation that the time will come when there will be social equality, between the two races, or class distinction effaced, will never be answered.

The whites of the South have a more than "white man's burden" to bear, and must patiently wait for the wearing away of the results wrought by slavery, and seek by true education of the negro, to make him take the place as a man, he left as a slave, which none other can fill as well.

It is not a matter to decide in an hour, but in generations. The negro has to learn that freedom brings responsibilities, and work cannot be escaped. The whites have to understand that unless they draw the negro up, he will pull them down.

It will thus be seen that there can be no snap device to solve the question. The slow processes which make history must be waited for. After all this "negro question" is in a great measure a chimera. Why not allow events to take their course, and the negro, with all the assistance citizens of great states can give each other find his proper adjustment? Thousands and hundreds of thousands of the dregs of Europe are yearly brought to this country, penniless, uneducated, brutal, and in every way less desirable as citizens than the negro. They fill the charity institutions and prisons, and are a menace to free government, yet foreign immigration is not made a political question.

The negro should be held by the laws of the nation as all other people are held, and the race not made responsible for the crimes of a few. He should receive the same educational training from the government as given the whites. He should be allowed, without hindrance from prejudice of caste, to do anything and everything he can do well.

In short, make it as easy as possible for the negro to take his place and patiently allow him to take it. Allow of evolution and do not force revolution.

THE CAUSE IN ST. LOUIS.

Prof W. F. Peck Makes a Favorable Report.

To the Editor:—A few words regarding the progress of our cause in the World's Fair City may be of interest to some of your many readers.

The past year has witnessed, I think, a greater accession of interest and numbers of adherents than any previous year in our history. Quite a number of new and excellent mediums have been developed and in a quiet way many new converts have been made.

The usual tendency, however, to weaken our forces by dividing up into little bands led by ambitious but undeveloped and uneducated mediums is manifest to a very regretable degree.

There is also in some quarters a disposition to exploit a sensational mediumship, which, while it attracts interest and curiosity for a time is almost certain to leave as an aftermath a far more stubborn doubt; yet, on the whole, a most gratifying and healthy conditions exists in our ranks and St. Louis, heretofore regarded as slow and conservative, seems to have caught the spirit of progress manifest in our great exposition and in a spiritual way we are pushing Boston and Chicago very closely for the laurels.

The Church of Spiritual Unity, with which I have been connected as speaker for six years, has had its full share in the spiritual prosperity; many names have been added to its membership, and, as usual, it comes through the year without a dollar of debt resting upon it.

Quite a number of mediums from other localities have visited and worked with us. Among others Bro. H. C. Dorn, of Newark, N. Jersey, whose excellent work and genial and unselfish manners won for him a unanimous vote of thanks from our members, all of whom regretted to part with him.

A most interesting occasion was the public ordination on Sunday evening, June 12, of Mrs. Anna Netterfield, wife of the well-known Dr. Netterfield (Espanto) as a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism. A large and interested audience was present; the ceremonies were impressive, and Mrs. Netterfield's acceptance of the charge and appointment was eloquently and feelingly expressed. To the friends everywhere we unhesitatingly commend Sister Netterfield as one not only qualified mentally for her work, but whose beautiful character makes her an honor to the cause she serves.

The writer starts in a short time to fill his annual camp-meeting duties. He will be at the Chesterfield, Ind., camp from the 14th to the 27th of July; then to Clinton, Iowa, for the entire camp season, beginning the last Sunday in July, and closing the last Sunday in August.

In the meantime his platform in St. Louis will be occupied by some of the very best talent in our ranks. So far the list of speakers is as follows: Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Sundays, July 3 and 10; Dr. J. M. Peebles, July 17 and 24; Moses Hull, August 7 and 14. Others will be announced in due time. Visitors to the Fair should not fail to avail themselves of the opportunity to hear and meet with these master minds, the ablest among the many able and noted teachers that Spiritualism can boast.

FOES OF THE SCHOOL.

DR. SMITH SCORES FRIENDS OF PAROCHIAL TRAINING.

Champions American System—Defense of Public Schools From Charge That They Are Godless—Creeds and Technical Religion Not Taught, It Is True, but There Is Broad Religious Training—The Twins of Civilization.

"I declare that they are the sworn and unchanging foe of the public school system of this country," said Rev. Joseph E. Smith in his sermon, June 26, in Washington, D. C., in speaking of the friends of parochial schools. He was preaching to his congregation in the Grace M. E. Church, at Ninth and S streets northwest, on the subject of the public schools.

"No institution in the land but one takes precedence of our schools, and that one is our religion," said Dr. Smith in beginning his sermon. He proceeded to show how closely they were related, one not being possible without the other. "Religion without culture becomes superstition and tyrannizes over the individual; religion without education is like the foot of a Chinese woman, dwarfed and twisted. Religion and education are the Siamese twins of civilization."

Vast Sums for Education.

He emphasized how much the nation gives for the education of the children. In Washington alone, six and one-half millions of dollars are spent annually. He considered the equity of taxing all citizens for the support of the schools. "The wealth of a country is not in its broad acres," said he; "not in its mines of gold, nor in its rolling prairies; its riches are in men, and the value of men depends upon their education and culture."

"No man can live alone," he continued. "The difference between this country to-day and what it was two hundred years ago had been due to the society and education of mankind. The advance has been because the path from the schoolhouse to the White House has been straight.

"A question has been propounded much of late, and I suppose that we are to hear more of it," the minister said, in emphasizing another point. "It is why we do not set up a republic in the Philippines and give the Filipinos their independence. One word answers that and sums up the colossal objection. It is ignorance. Instantly a score of ignorant leaders would spring up to advance their causes, bringing murder to the inhabitants and destruction to the prosperity of the islands.

Religion in the Schools.

"Finally there is a phase of the question of which I must speak," Dr. Smith continued, "one which I would rather omit, but without which no discussion of the school question would be complete. That is the relation of the public schools to religion."

In the broad interpretation of the word, religion is taught in the schools, according to Dr. Smith. Pupils are taught that it is better to do right than wrong, to live noble lives than ignoble. "Yet there are people who contend that our schools are Godless because their creed is not taught," said he. "Religion in the technical sense cannot be taught in the schools, because there are enrolled the Protestant and the Papist, the Jew and the Gentile, the orthodox and the infidel.

Why objections should be raised to the reading of such selections as the Ten Commandments, many of the Psalms, and the Sermon on the Mount, he could hardly discern, but that objections were raised he was fully aware.

Comparison of Illiteracy.

He then attempted to show by figures regarding illiteracy that the highest rate is in countries where creeds or religion in the technical sense of the word were taught. He emphasized that 53 per cent of the people are illiterate in Italy, the home of the Pope, and that in Catholic Spain there are 72 per cent.

"Every teacher in the public schools knows that the pupils who come to her from parochial schools in this country do not compare in thoroughness of their training with the child in the public schools. They insist that they cannot permit their children to grow up in ignorance of God. Can any one who saw those 189 graduates from our high schools last Wednesday night say that they are Godless boys and girls. Can you possible believe that they are the product of Godless schools, schools of vice and sin. I declare that the friends of the parochial schools are the sworn and unchanging foes of the public school system of the country. Let us advocate the highest institution in this country, next to Christianity, and the noblest of all, the public schools of our country. Whatever your faith may be, stand by the schools of the land."

SAYS ROOSEVELT WILL FAIL.

Woman Prophet Predicts He Will Not Succeed Himself.

Editor Post:—I am a Republican since the days of Fremont, for whom I cast my first vote. All along I have supposed that in the forthcoming Presidential election the Republican nominee for President would win out for obvious reasons.

But "by the powers" I am told otherwise. This evening it was my luck to interview a certain old lady, who is, in general and particular, as ignorant of politics and all that pertains thereto as an untutored Filipino or a ten-year-old child. Yet this same old lady, from out of the depths of her ignorance, has the happy faculty of receiving certain information of such a definite and unusual character, wherein accuracy is a foregone conclusion, that baffles beyond measure her circle of friends.

She affirmed the election of Cleveland when he was first nominated with a persistency all her own and in open opposition to the views of her husband; she also affirmed with equal persistency Cleveland's failure to succeed himself, and Harrison's success, and announced long before it occurred Cleveland's second election; predicted McKinley's election and his sudden exit.

And now before any nominees had been selected, she proclaimed, contrary to my views and expectations, that Roosevelt will not succeed himself. The reader, if so inclined, may put these items and facts in his mental pipe and smoke them, or pass them by as the idle wind, but "what is writ is writ."

A BRIEF SYNOPSIS

Of the Free Course of Lectures to Be Given at Lily Dale, N. Y., by J. Clegg Wright and Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

This course of lectures will cover the entire current season at the camp.

J. Clegg Wright at Lily Dale.

The following subjects will be treated in public and during the course of the camp-meeting.

It will be a complete presentation of the great problems before the spiritual student to-day.

The course will be a thorough exposition of the subjects which have in all ages engaged the wisest men.

The Evolution of Living Forms—The Foundation and Evolution of Morals—The Evolution of Body and Mind—The Evolution of Human Consciousness—A Study of Consciousness as Manifested in Man—Spiritual Consciousness—The Return of Spirits—Mediumship Considered as the Foundation of Modern Spiritualism—The Failure of Philosophy and Religion to Prove Another Life Beyond the Grave—The Evolution of Religion.

The Soul an Eternal Entity—Sub-Consciousness — Sub-Consciousness, Its Plane and Power—The Heredity of Intellect, of Feeling and Passion.

The Problems of Personality and Embodiments Considered—The Difference Between Soul and Mind Defined.

The Mind After Death—Can Mind Recall the Past Embodiments of the Soul?

Where Is the Spirit World?

What Is Christ? Will Christ Come Again?

These and other great problems will be entered upon during the course of the meeting. Mr. Wright's engagement covers the whole meeting.

Prof. Lockwood's Celebrated Lectures. Natural Philosophy.

The Basis of All Organization and Being Inheres in Nature and Cosmic Evolution.

No System of Philosophy or Belief is True That Does Not Recognize the Processes of Natural Development.

The Old Ideals of the Duality of Matter and Spirit Refuted by Modern Discoveries.

Spirit and Spiritual Forces the Basis of All Organization and Form in Cosmic Process.

Nature Evolves Formative or Shaping Principles—The Soul of Things, The Form, the Phenomenon of This Soul Principle.

All Nature Related by Principles of Electro Magnetism, as is Witnessed in the Development of its Various Forms.

The Relation of Consciousness to Consciousness or of Soul to Soul Are Natural Relations.

The Brain the Receiving Station of the Conscious Intellect; Its Variation; in Organization. The Relation of Mind to Conscious Processes. All Forms of Life Are Symbols of an Invisible Actuating Energy, Which We Call the Soul of Things.

The Subtlety of the Human Intellect, and Its Capacity to Be Impressed With Its Two Thousand Million Nerve Cells and Fibres.

The Science of Psychology the Savior of the World.

All processes in Nature Psychic and Invisible, This Truth the Basis of the Spiritual Philosophy.

Scientific Proofs of a Conscious Life Beyond the Grave Established Upon the Data of the Co-relation of Mental Forces, and the Conservation of Mental Energies.

Prof. Lockwood's lectures cover a vast field of scientific research and every department will be thoroughly demonstrated by beautiful scientific experiments and illustrations.

Special lectures upon the X-ray, wireless telegraphy, and Atmospheric Spectra, introducing Prof. Crookes' scale of six vacuum tubes, will be given. These lectures and those of J. Clegg Wright will be given in alternate association as in former years and comprise a magnificent course of study and investigation, not given in any other camp in the United States.

Hay-Fever and Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery of a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by it in the worst cases, are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been at once restored to health by the Kola Plant Compound. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to its wonderful powers.

Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Texas, writes was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering and had no return of the disease. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., perhaps one of the worst cases, was permanently cured after many years' suffering. Rev. D. S. Hopkins, Wilson, Ind. Ter., writes May 25th, his wife was cured two years ago after eight years suffering. Hundreds of others give similar testimony. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the medicine before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

DEATH.

O Death, thou art not "the grim terror,"
The "fell destroyer" painted by superstition's brush
In days gone by.
Thou art the messenger of peace and rest, O Death—
The friend of man,
Sent, by unerring love,
To take the captive home.
At thy command, O mighty monarch,
The enchained soul its fetter breaks
And leaves its prison cell.
Thou touchest with thy magic wand
Its prison bars and they are rent in twain.
At thy behest its earthly chains asunder fall.
And the liberated soul, in all its pristine beauty,
Emerges, on exultant wing,
From its low tenement clay,
And through thy pearly portals sweeps onward
In its glorious flight,
To rainbow-tinted realms of peace,
To claim, forever, its divine heritage
Of everlasting life and love.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Efficient and Suggestive Work of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

It has occurred to the undersigned, as secretary of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the First Spiritualist Society of Seattle, that it is high time our sister societies and co-workers for the cause should know what is going on out here in Seattle.

We are working hard for, and are determined to have in the near future, a Spiritualist temple, and I will try and give you a brief outline of our method, as an incentive for other societies equally ambitious to spread the truth.

Some three or four months ago it was suggested at a regular session of the Auxiliary that a dancing class be started for the "old-young" people to bring about a more sociable spirit among our members. A professor had been spoken to in regard to teaching such a class, and he had agreed to undertake a class of not less than twenty, at one dollar per month per capita. This was reported, but almost as soon as mentioned was adversely received by one of the most earnest workers. This lady declared it foolish to pay so much money outside the society when it might all be turned toward the nucleus for a building fund. She offered her services as teacher and the use of her beautiful parlors at her home on Beacon Hill, free of charge, all moneys for tuition to be placed in the bank toward the building of a temple.

This proposition brought the members to their feet at once, the offer was accepted and a vote of thanks tendered the lady, Mrs. G. W. Stetson, for her generous offer. The following Monday evening a good-sized class met and enjoyed the evening. We continued meeting each week at Mrs. Stetson's until the class reached such proportions that the spacious parlors would not accommodate us and we were forced to rent a hall. The gentlemen generously contribute each Monday night toward the hall rent, and we were much gratified at our last meeting to be informed that there is at present in the bank $150, known as the Ladies' Auxiliary Building Fund. This fund is held in trust by Mrs. G. W. Stetson, Mrs. Lois F. Prior, Mrs. Hathaway and our President, Mrs. E. Lapworth.

This brief outline may prove an idea for some other society to start, if not a dancing club, perhaps a literary or musical affair that will be just as enjoyable and successful.

The Auxiliary also gives an entertainment once every month, for the benefit of the First Society, consisting of a program and dance. The program for the next one, to be held June 30, will be under the personal direction of Mrs. G. W. Stetson, whom we consider a dramatic artist. The society or auxiliary held its regular sesion June 17, at the home of Mrs. Stetson.

After the transaction of business the ladies spent a pleasant hour in the grounds enjoying the flowers and quaint little nooks, most noticeable among them being the artificial brook and the Japanese tea house, after which we returned to the house to partake of a dainty luncheon, served in Mrs. Stetson's inimitable manner. A vote of thanks was tendered our hostess and we departed to our respective homes with naught but harmony. Those present were Mrs. E. Lapworth, president; Mrs. Parr, treasurer; Mrs. E. L. Pomeroy, secretary; Mesdames Prior, Kirk, Benson, Stetson, Hemenway, Lundy and Stevenson. The last named ladies being new acquisitions, having come here a few weeks ago from Minneapolis where their work as mediums of a high order is well known and vouched for. The visitors present were Mrs. Ray, of California, Mrs. French, Hart and Barnett, of Seattle.

BOOK REVIEW

How to Use the Voice in Reading and Speaking. A text book of education for colleges, high schools and for self-instruction. By Ed. Amherst Ott.

A fitting companion to Prof. Esenwein's excellent volume on How to Attract and Hold an Audience, is this book prepared with much thought, care and thoroughness by Principal Ott.

Hinds & Noble, publishers, New York.

A thorough and systematic course of voice culture, of great practical benefit to public speakers and readers. A complete text book for teachers and learners. Price $1.25.

How to Attract and Hold an Audience. A popular treatise on the nature, preparation and delivery of public discourse. By J. Berg Esenwein, A. M., Lit. D. Price $1.

Hinds & Noble, publishers, New York.

It can be truthfully said of this book, that it is thoroughly concise, methodical, replete with common sense, complete. In his logical method, the clearness of his style, in his mastery of the subject, the author is not excelled by the very ablest teachers, of the art of expression. To the man or woman who speaks in public, the information contained in this book is invaluable.

Zion's Herald, a capable authority, says:

"We heartily wish every preacher who has not had the advantages of special training in public speaking could read and assimilate the excellent suggestions made in this book. It is broad, scholarly and critical, and at the same time fresh and invigorating. The most commendable feature about it, perhaps, is the light it turns upon the specific details of the preparation and delivery of sermons, addresses, lectures, etc. It enables the student to see himself as if in a mirror and recognize his defects and their cause at once. This prompt recognition of faults and shortcomings intensifies the effect of the directions for their eradication and the development of latent qualities and powers. If you are engaged in the business of public speaking and wish to increase your power and usefulness, get the book at once and read it through from lid to lid, and then keep it within easy reach for frequent reference."

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

After Many Years.

A Psychic Story, by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, Bethel, Vt.

"It is no use," said my husband, "we can go no farther to-night. The harness is broken and cannot be mended till daylight."

"What are we going to do?" I asked anxiously.

"There is a little old farm house behind those trees ahead of us," said my husband from his position beside the horse, "and they have a light I see, and I can smell smoke, so they must have a fire. It is a poor enough place, but it will furnish warmth and a shelter from this pouring rain. I am sorry to have to ask it, Beth, but I think you will have to get out of the carriage and walk. I shall try and hold the harness together until we reach the house."

My husband spoke cheerfully and after the first disappointment at thought of not seeing my sister that night had passed away, my spirits rose and I said, "If we must stop by the way, we will make the best of it and get and give all the good we can."

We were a drenched and forlorn-looking couple that presented ourselves at the farm-house door. An old man in his shirt-sleeves, and wearing overalls, came to the door in answer to my husband's knock. In his hand he held a tallow candle set in a tin candle stick. At first he seemed a good deal bewildered and peered out into the darkness at us until the wind flared the candle and blew about his thin white hair, but as soon as he comprehended the situation his furrowed face lighted with kindly solicitude and he said heartily, "Keep ye? Why, of course we will. We wouldn't keep out a dog such a night as this, would we mother?" looking over his shoulder into the house. "Come right in, ma'm, come right in by the fire," he said to me, and then peering out still farther into the darkness, he called cheerfully, "and you, sir, drive out to that shed at your left and I will come right out with the lantern as quick as I can get on my coat."

A sweet faced, motherly-looking woman, with snowy white hair, came forward and helped me off with my wet wraps, which she at once put a-drying. She brought a large rocking chair covered with bright patchwork and placed it for me before an odd-looking high-oven stove in which she stirred a brilliant fire. She then lighted a second tallow candle and proceeded to cover the table with a heavy linen tablecloth which she told me she had spun and woven herself.

"I haven't got much cooked," she said, " but I can give you something hot and it will help you get warm."

After the two men had returned from caring for the horse, and were properly washed and dried, we sat down to steaming hot hominy and milk and baked sweet apples, and I thought it the best supper I ever ate. The kitchen was small but clean and orderly, and the furniture rude but comfortable. Poverty was everywhere discernible, but there was not a trace of neglect.

After the supper table was cleared we drew around the fire and after a little general conversation my husband asked a question which to his delight drew our host into relating incidents of bygone days when the country was new and railroads and modern conveniences were unknown. At the conclusion of one of his stories I turned to my hostess and said, "Have you and your husband always lived here?"

"Oh, no," she answered, "we have lived here only forty years. Before we came here we lived among the mountains of ——, and we might have been living there now if something had not happened. I've a mind to tell the lady that story, Father." she said, looking at her husband inquiringly.

"If you tell the whole of it she may think you are lying to her," he said, regarding me critically.

My hostess shook her head. "I believe I'll risk it," she said slowly; "some way I feel as if I had got to tell it to her."

"Then do so, by all means," said my husband, kindly.

Thus encouraged the old lady began, timidly at first, but with a clearness and vigor that surprised me as she went on. As nearly as possible I will give the story as she told it to me.

"It was in the month of April that it happened. Father here"—nodding in her husband's direction—"left me the Monday after Thanksgiving and went to a lumber camp in Canada and I did not see him again until the next May. I was a young woman, and had two children in those days. At the time of which I am telling, my boy was twelve and my girl ten years old.

"We lived in a little village built upon the left bank of river. The channel of the river at that place was narrow and a very high and rocky hill rose almost straight up from the bank opposite the village. Several miles farther up the river there was a large dam and above that at this time there was an ice jam. We had a late spring, but about the middle of April it suddenly came on very warm. A soft wind blew from the south and the skies changed from a cold gray to a soft golden look and the birds began to come back and the maples began to turn red. Then it began to rain, and how it did pour! The snow in the fields and on the nearer hills disappeared as if by magic, and great brown patches began to appear upon the sides of the more distant mountains. Every tiny stream suddenly assumed gigantic proportions and came leaping and roaring down the hills and mountains with a fury that swept every obstacle from its pathway. The villagers and those owning farms upon the banks of the river began to gather in unusual numbers upon the steps of the store and in the open door of the blacksmith's shop, and as they talked they kept glancing anxiously up the river. It was early in the morning of the 18th, and we had just got up from the breakfast table when I noticed there was a great excitement in the street; men and boys were running here and there shouting, and dogs were barking excitedly. I rushed out of doors just at the right moment to see a black horse covered with foam, whose bare-headed rider was shouting, 'The dam is giving way—run for your lives! to the hills! to the hills! The inhabitants at the lower end of the village and nearest the river were already flocking out of their homes. It was a scene of wild excitement. Women were running here and there, men shouting, dogs howling and children screaming with fright. Some were hastily snatching their most treasured belongings which could be carried, some were liberating horses and cattle, and all were looking out for themselves and those they loved best.

"It probably did not take me longer than a second of time to take all this in. Then I hurried into the house and while my children were hurrying on their wraps I tied a few small articles into a bundle and giving them to my son, and telling him to take his sister's hand and under no consideration to get separated from her, but to hasten with our neighbors to the hill at the west of the village, I put on a few light wraps and flew down the street in an opposite direction. One thing I have always remembered as being peculiar and that is that in that hour of deadly peril I took notice of little things that were of no importance. I remember that I noticed that old Grandma Smith had her best bonnet on backside front, and Miss Dunn, the dressmaker, carried a bird cage in one hand and a struggling gray cat in the other, while little Pat, the blacksmith's boy ran with a squealing little pig clasped to his breast, and I can now distinctly recall the delicate look of the pink and white ears that flapped against the boy's ragged jacket as he ran.

"On the edge of the river lived a dear friend of my mother's who was old and lame and I was filled with concern lest her nieces with whom she lived might leave her to her fate. Near my friend's home was the stable where I kept my horse, my father's last gift to me, and of which I was both proud and fond. I rushed into my friend's home, which seemed to deserted and called loudly, 'Aunt Hannah! Aunt Hannah!' She answered me from her bedroom where she lay covered in bed. "Oh! Aunt Hannah!" I shouted as I burst into the room, "the dam is giving way, and the village will be destroyed!"

"I know it, child," she answered calmly; "the girls have left me, but I can die here just as well as anywhere."

"Get up quickly," I said, "and get on some clothing. I am going to the stable and get Billy and will come for you."

I rushed out of the house and down the narrow pathway over the bare and slippery ledges to the barn. I threw open the stable door and was greeted by a shrill neigh followed by a whimper. I untied the trembling horse and led him out. 'It is true than an animal senses approaching danger just as I have read that it is,' I thought, as with eager hands I threw the harness upon him.

"It had for some time been growing dark, and as I worked I became conscious of a deeper gloom. Great black thunderclouds came rolling up over the snowy tops of the mountains and the rumble of thunder grew louder. We were to have the first thunder shower of the season to add to the other horrors. As I put the frightened and impatient horse into the wagon that had not been used since the fall before, there fell upon my ears a mighty rishing roar that although far away seemed to swallow up and overwhelm every other sound in its awfulness. It seemed to me that my fingers were sticks of wood and that I could never buckle the straps of that harness. I felt like one in a nightmare who climbs stairs only to slip backward. I must have worked with great rapidity, but each moment seemed an hour. At last I stood before the door where my aged friend, white-faced and shaking as one with the palsy stood awaiting me. Clearer and stronger came that mighty roar. With a strength I never before or since possessed I lifted my friend into the buggy. At that moment there crawled to my feet a small dog whining piteously. He was the picture of abject terror and his great brown eyes met mine with a human look of pleading. I tossed him into my friend's lap and sprang into the wagon and away we bounded through mud-puddles and snow-drifts, with patches of solid ground between. There came a vivid flash of lightning and a heavy crash of thunder, but more awful than the thunder came that appalling roar—even now in my dreams I sometimes hear it."

"Billy heard it and he ran with a speed I never before knew that he was capable of. We left the village street for a rough and rocky road leading to the mountain where the villagers had gathered. Streams of water ran upon either side of the road and often crossed it, and I could hardly tell whether we were in the road or out of it. I knew by the sounds that the flood was gaining upon us but I dared not look behind me. I expected every moment that we would be overturned and I said, 'Aunt Hannah, have you got a knife with you,?'

"She answered with apparent calmness, 'yes.'

"'Is it sharp?' I asked.

"With a visible effort she again answered 'yes.'

"'Get it ready so I can have it if I want it,' I said. 'If we are overturned I shall cut the straps and free the horse. I will not desert Billy if he is only a horse.'

"Aunt Hannah burst into tears. 'Oh, Betty,' she sobbed, 'if it was not for me'

"'Hush,' I said, 'if I only knew just where to go we would be all right.'

"'As I spoke there appeared suddenly before me a beautiful female figure floating in mid-air. Her long dress was white as snow and a mass of dark hair fell about her shoulders. On her forehead was a star that flashed like dew-drops or frost crystals in the sunlight. The angel stretched out a hand and arm looking very white and beautiful, and pointed to an open barway just before me. I drove through and found myself in a hill pasture without a trace of a road before me. In and out among the knolls and snow drifts we made our way steadily up, up, until my angel guide paused and made a gesture toward the ground.

"I never knew how, for no word was spoken, but I understood and sprang from the wagon and went to the spot indicated. There in a hollow among some bushes lay two little children. One was sound asleep but the older one was sobbing as if her little heart would break. I spoke kindly to her and taking her hand I lifted her sleeping brother and soon had both children safely in the wagon with my friend. The hill was so steep I did not dare add my weight to that already in the wagon, so I put a hand upon the thill and walked beside the panting horse as he struggled upward. We had no cause for haste for the flood must have swept past us some minutes before, but I did not stop to reason. My ears were filled with the dreadful roar mingled with the crash of thunder and the rush of wind and rain. How long after I picked up the children my angel guide remained visible I do not know. It might have been seconds or minutes—I dare not say—but at last she again paused and pointing straight up the hill she vanished and I saw her no more. We struggled on for some time and then I I heard above the din of the elements the sound of human voices shouting, and such a thrill of joy passed through me that I could scarcely keep from shrieking. Then through the rain and gloom I saw my boy come bounding toward me, followed by four of our neighbors. I suddenly grew very dizzy and fell headlong to the ground, but was at once taken up by a strong young man and carried easily onward. Looking back I saw that my boy had Billy by the bridle and the three men were pushing behind the wagon and I heard one of the men say, 'this is the only horse that we are sure is saved.'

"When we arrived at the top of the hill the drenched and excited villagers crowded around us, all talking at once, and I never knew before that I had half so many friends. When the children were lifted out of the wagon there came a wild scream and a woman rushed through the crowd, and falling upon her knees upon the water-soaked ground, she clasped the babies to her breast and covered their stained faces with kisses. They had evidently been deserted by some hireling. A silence fell upon the noisy crowd, which was not broken for several minutes. At last the lady staggered to her feet and coming to me she took my hand in hers and pressed it to her lips. She looked in my eyes and tried to speak but could not. Dropping my hand, she took from her bosom an odd-looking pin and fastened it to my dress under my shawl. She then picked up the children and walked away and for some reason I do not know, I saw her no more. I have always kept the pin and I will show it to you."

My hostess arose and went to a small cupboard in the wall and took down a cracked china sugar bowl and extracted from it a curiously formed gold pin in the center of which flashed a diamond.

"I have not shown it to anyone before for many years," she said simply, as she laid it in my hand.

For a moment I stood speechless. I looked from the costly jewel in my hands to the bowed figure before me clad in her scanty and faded cotton gown. I noted her toil-worn hands and her sweet, sad face traced with lines of care and suffering and the poverty-stricken room in which I stood reeled before my bewildered eyes. My hostess lifted the candle so that its feeble light fell upon my face.

"What is the matter?" she asked anxiously; "are you sick?"

At her question the two men arose and came to us. "Lady," I said as calmly as possible, "this is indeed an odd-looking pin, but the diamond in the center is valuable."

The woman looked at me in a dazed sort of way as one just awakened from sleep.

"You don't mean to say that piece of shiny glass is worth anything?" said our host, eagerly.

"It is not glass," said my husband, taking the pin from my hand, "it is a diamond and valuable."

The aged couple stood regarding each other fixedly for what seemed like several minutes. The only sounds that broke the dead silence were the ticking of the great clock in the corner, and the monotonous dripping of the rain from the low eaves. Then the woman spoke, stretching her withered hands upward, and, with tears streaming down her thin cheeks, "Oh, God, I thank thee for thy mercy. O blessed angel, I thank thee for the deliverence thou hast wrought."

Then looking at her husband who stood speechless and trembling before her, she exclaimed, "Oh! father, just think what this means to us! The farm will not have to go on the mortgage now. We have not got to be sold out of house and home in our old age—it is ours—ours after all these years," and she threw her arms about her husband's neck and clung to him, sobbing.

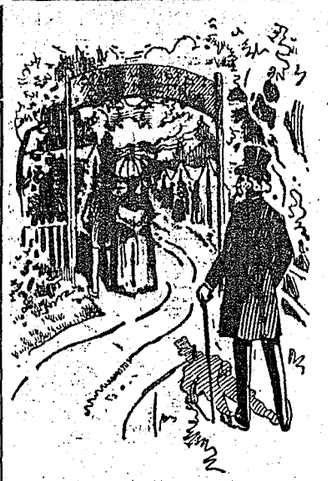
Spirit Manifestations.



To the Editor:—As I read the article in the issue of May 28, entitled "Spirit Manifestation on a Pane of Glass," I felt I, too, must in justice to the efforts of the spirits to produce photography, relate a fact that I saw demonstrated in a humble home in a California town. The inmates of the home are the father, mother and son. The spirits over six months ago photographed on a window pane a hand. When discovered the mother became much disturbed about the phenomenon. They tried every way to remove it, but could not. About two weeks later it disappeared entirely. After a few weeks it came again. This time a mountain and lake were also there. Again it disappeared, only to again return with the mountain, lake and hand, but also two other hands came. At the time we beheld the spirit wonder—there was but one hand, the mountain and lake. While watching the hand we saw a mitten form on the hand, also saw it fade away. Saw the name Joan come in the palm of the hand. That was the name of the father's sister in spirit life.

Three weeks from that day I called again, this time to bid the friends farewell, and they again showed me the window. This time no name was there, but a face was very visible in its stead I glanced up to the upper pane and was surprised to see it almost covered with phenomena. Three faces were plain to be seen, one a lady with a hat on. Now, at my first visit there was nothing visible on that pane. We could see the picture change shape and expression while watching it. Now this wonderful production is as much of a mystery to the family as myself. They do not show it to the gaze of vulgar curious, and lest it might become public have made a ceiled partition back of which the window is hid and another one inserted instead; thus no one sees, only those the family feels—their sacred manifestation. Will hold—as sacred. Therefore we will not give the family's name or town of residence, until they bid us to so do. I only give the facts, that the readers of the same may lay aside their doubt and thus in a measure make condition for more of similar or even better productions. Anyone could plainly see these I have mentioned. I was told that they showed much better after sunset—a fact I observed upon my first visit. I hope we shall soon have spirit manifestations in every way. We have predicted for twelve years that the time would come when materialization would come independent of curtains and cabinets, and in the bright light of day, or gaslight.

We are entering a cycle of Light then let's live to help turn on more light. It is time to do away with dark circles and seances; let's have materialization of spirits above the floor. It is time to cease looking for spirits to come up out of and go down through the floor. Let us give our spirit friends or foes a higher berth and thereby also give them a higher birth. Clairvoyantly we never see spirits coming up or descending through the floor. We are in the period of the great sifting time, and every tree shall be known by the fruit it bears. We can no longer go blind, for the light of truth is our midst. If Spiritualists would not become as the blind leading the blind they will have much work to do to rid themselves of their blind infatuation with the personalities of the deceivers that are squirming under the searchlight of Mr. Hale's honest offer.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and cure temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this last treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. Address' Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 23 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass.

This excellent camp opens July 31, and continues for 30 consecutive days. For full programmes address Albert P. Blinn, 61 Dartmouth street, Boston, Mass.

TREATMENT BY HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION; or Psycho-Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D., Aberd. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price, $3.

This is the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, 376 pages 8vo, of a most valuable and standard work, by an acknowledged authority and expert in the science of healing by hypnotism and suggestion. The method of treatment by suggestion is clearly and exhaustively considered, and illustrated by descriptions of numerous actual cases in the author's personal experience. The work will be found a valuable auxiliary to physicians in ameliorating and curing the mental and physical ills of their patients, and is worthy of most careful study not only by physicians, who should be thoroughly informed in the nature and methods of curative hypnotism or suggestion, but also by all students of hypnotism who desire to thoroughly understand the subject. It is a valuable mine of information to all who consult its pages.

Man and the Spirit World as Disclosed in the Bible. By Rev. Arthur Chambers, Associate of King's College, London. An excellent book for Christian people who would investigate and learn the facts of Bible teachings as well as modern spirit phenomena. Price, cloth, $1.10.

KAREZZA Ethics of Marriage. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

DEATH ITS MEANING and Results. By J. K Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting narrative relating a series of wonderful psychic manifestations occurring in the writer's experience. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

PSYCHE Is the invention of a practical medium, under spirit guidance, and is designed to develop mediumship. Many, by its use, have received long communications from spirit friends, and express great satisfaction. Price, $1, and 20 cents extra for expressage.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

THE DIAKKA. The Diakka and Their Earthly Victims. By the Seer A. J. Davis. A very interesting and suggestive work. It is an explanation of much that is false and repulsive in Spiritualism, embodying a most important recent interview with James Victor Wilson, a resident of Summer Land. Price, 50 cents.

THE SOUL: ITS NATURE, RELATIONS AND EXPRESSIONS IN HUMAN EMBODIMENTS. Third edition now on sale. Price $1.00. This is one of the best books given by the guides of Mrs Cora L. V. Richmond. They are really lessons, published primarily, as a book of reference for those who have been members of the classes receiving them. This volume is a careful compilation from reports of lessons, containing the bases of the teachings.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar, HON. A. B. RICHMOND, Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Do You Know What Is Doing In the Ranks of Spiritualism To-day?

If Not It Is Very Evident that You Neither Take Nor Read the Spiritualist Papers.

This Is the Camp-Meeting Time and Much Is Being Done for Spiritualism that You Will Know Not Of.

Especially you should read the opinions of Master Minds in the OPEN COURT commenced this week. You can not keep up with the Procession unless you read THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. The Open Court will be an Arena in which will be considered what is for the best interest of Spiritualism, on a variety of subjects.

A BLAST FROM THE "RAM'S HORN."

Effectually Squelched by Hudson Tuttle, Editor-at-Large, N. S. A.

It is said that we should be generous with the dead. I have heard orthodox funeral discourses that were so generous they seemed in irony—they were not given over Spiritualists.

It may appear unkind and forgetful of the gentle amenities of social life to call things by their right names, a spade a spade, and a lie a lie, even if spoken by the dead, but there are occasions when it would be treason to a cause not to do so.

It may be disagreeable to resist by force and to use strong language, but the consequence of not resisting may be more disagreeable, and this is a case where soft words will not turn away wrath. It is an occasion which demands plain speech, and justice to the living as well as the dead.

If a man bears false witness against us, it is weakness to remain silent, and if he creeps behind the pulpit or editorial chair, refusing to listen to our reply, we have a right to brand him as a coward.

The Ram's Horn is an organ of the "church militant," and its editor, like Dowie, would him of the Flaming Sword, follows the style of Sam Small and Sam Jones in low down vulgarity rather than elegance of diction. It is for Jesus, first, last and all the time—Jesus in his blood—and has no toleration or respect for anyone who differs. The opposition has no rights it is bound to respect, and the plain truth opposes no protective barrier.

Some time ago the Ram's Horn proclaimed in tones that would be expected from the twisted horn of a black merino, that it had become possessed of a secret. A most distinguished man, in his "nineties," just ready to die, had made a clean breast of it and prepared an article in which he and he alone was declared the founder of Modern Spiritualism; and A. J. Davis an imitation and the Fox sisters cheats of the most common order. Holding this "scoop" in its hands, it expected to take in subscribers by the million and after the appearance of the confession Spiritualism would be so covered with obloquy that its believers would not dare to say a word in its defense.

Now the denouement has come. The blow has been struck out of darkness with an assassin's purpose, and proves as harmless as a bran-stuffed club.

The matter has been held till the man in his nineties" is dead and hence cannot be cross-examined, and the fifty years since the occurrences, have taken nearly every witness out of court. There have been many important cases at law decided in this manner. Many infamous criminals escaped punishment because the lawyers continued until the evidence was difficult or impossible to be obtained.

This wonderful man, it is now revealed, is no other than J. Stanley Grimes, school teacher, pettifogger, "professor," and all-round lecturer on mesmerism. In the latter character he gained notoriety. His books exploitered these lectures and are examples of the frothy style, assuming, bombastic, egotistical and arrogant which marks the fakir catering to win the applause and shekels of the public. They are now obsolete.

During his long life, and he boasted of being "the oldest public man in the world," he put forward various theories in explanation of spiritual manifestations, being a bitter enemy of the cause, and to say the least, it is a strange thing for him to wait until at death's door for a representative of the Ram's Horn to come and take his deposition or confession.

When the young seer, A. J. Davis, was wakening the world by his wonderful gift, why did not "Professor" Grimes come forward and blast him by this confession? Why did he not satisfy public curiosity and win the fame he so coveted, by giving his knowledge of the Fox sisters? He remained silent fifty years with his explanation!

But enough of the man. If he tells the truth, his character is of secondary consideration. In his "confession" he says:

"I developed the first trance speaker that ever addressed an American audience. It was in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1843, during a course of lectures which led to the public advent of Andrew Jackson Davis."

He then states that his successful experiments with a young man, led the friends of Davis to put him forward in imitation. In his own words: "The motives which actuated the Davis clique will be more apparent when it is further stated that they expected to make a large sum of money out of the book, 'Divine Revelations of Nature,' that he was dictating under spirit influence." Compare this statement with the one immediately preceding it:

"Among his converts were no less than ten clergymen, including Mr. Sprague, Mr. Newton, Mr. Partridge, Mr. Brittan, Gibson Smith, Mr. Fishbough, and Prof. Bush of the New York University."

These with a few others equally eminent, formed the "clique" that fostered knowingly a fraud that they might make money out of the sale of a book! Does such an assertion require refutation?

The accuracy of "Professor" Grimes is shown by his not even giving the title of the book correctly, and the unblushing arrogance with which he accuses these "ten clergymen" with conniving at fraud is only equaled by the slanderous falsehoods of his statement as a whole. A. J. Davis never claimed for his revelations a spiritual source, nor was it claimed by his friends. He passed into what he called the "superior" state, in which it is to be inferred the intuitions are more keenly sensitive than in the normal condition. He entered the mediumistic state, but at that time it was not claimed and the movement he advocated was not Spiritualism but the Harmonial Philosophy. In his first great work there is no mention of its being of spiritual origin. The light thrown over the trance state by Spiritualism may now explain the wonderful passages it contains by the inspiration of spirit-intelligences, but at the time it was referred to the mental exaltation of the trance, or independent clairvoyance.

If the motive of the "Davis clique" was to make money by publishing the book, why did they not publish it? Why did it go begging for a publisher until some one outside the "clique" furnished the means? Spiritualists acknowledge that A. J. Davis led in the psychic part of the movement. He received messages claimed as such by himself, from departed spirits, but he did not nor did his friends claim for him that he was a medium. His development was unique, and there is every reason to conclude that it was independent. That is was not, rests solely on the word of "Professor" Grimes. He does not attempt to strengthen it by supporting evidence. His vanity is so great he seems to think the world will ask for nothing more.

Why did Grimes hate A. J. Davis? Not because he believed that he was a fraud, but because he could not use him for his own purpose. The autobiography of Davis, confirmed by William Fishbough, proves this to have been his motive. Grimes in his confession does not say that he ever met Davis, for that would have broken the force of his libel. It was before the boy Davis knew of the wonderful faculty, that with "some fifteen other young men," he submitted to the magnetism of "Professor" Grimes. When the "Professor" came to Davis, he said imperiously, (quoting from the autobiography, p. 201); "You can't open your eyes. He was mistaken. I did open my eyes with perfect ease. I make this statement to correct the subsequent unqualified assertion of Mr. Grimes "that he was the first to magnetize me and reject me as a subject because he recognized a clairvoyant propensity in my mental organization that would not serve his public purpose."

Instead of "dictating a book," young Davis was for a time almost exclusively engaged while in the "superior state" in prescribing for the sick, and he was prepared by successive steps for engaging in that task.

When he did begin the dictation the "clique" was composed of Dr. Lyons and Fishbough who acted as scribe.

After hearing the version of the story, the brazen cheek of Grimes' assertion that "I was present at the very birth of Modern Spiritualism, and in some sense accidentally the very father of it, and knew that it had a purely mesmeric or emotional origin," will be admitted to be incomparable. The "father of Spiritualism," because he attempted to mesmerise the boy Davis and utterly failed!

His "expose" of the Fox sisters has no more evidence in its support than his claim of "discovering Davis!" His witness is a Mrs. Culver. This woman pretends to have been made a confident of the sisters and assisted them in giving correct answers by rappings. Margaretta agreed to reveal the secret for this assistance. Quoting Mrs. Culver's own words:

"After I had helped her in this way a few times she revealed to me the secret. The raps are produced by the toes. All the toes are used. After nearly a week's practice with Catherine showing me how, I could produce them perfectly myself. At first it was very hard work to do it. Catherine told me to warm my feet or put them in warm water and it would be easier work to rap; she said that she sometimes had to warm her feet three or four times in an evening. I found that heating my feet did enable me to rap a great deal easier. I have sometimes produced one hundred and fifty raps in succession. I can rap with all the toes on both feet—it is most difficult to rap with the great toes."

When this agreement between Margaretta and Mrs. Culver was entered into, and the wonderfully adroit scheme to deceive concocted, Margaretta was eleven years old! This "agreement" leads to the conclusion that this eleven-year-old child was an adept in planning a deception such as no one in the world had ever before dreamed of!

The "cracking of toe joints" was the theory of "the Buffalo doctors," but was almost immediately shown to be inadequate to explain the facts. After half a century it was put forward as demonstrated! Admit that it was done by the toes. If Mrs. Culver could have been taught, then others can be and the matter at once be demonstrated, and made useless. The persons who can rap with "all" their toes or even with one, would become famous. There is not a dime museum in the country having a more wonderful freak than a person would be who could move any one of his or her toes at will! He might put his feet in hot water or on a hot brick, but he never would get a rap. This explanation is imbecile and would be so taken by any one not stultified by bigotry.

It is well that the old vanguard of Spiritualists have not all departed this life. There is at least one whose testimony is as weighty as that of "Professor" Grimes, whose hatred of Spiritualism from its beginning, if there were no other reasons, would vitiate his evidence.

Titus Merritt, of Yonkers, N. Y., whose word is unimpeachable says:

"At the time the rappings began, the behavior of the young girls was everything that could be required by the most fastidious. They were modest, unassuming and gentle in manners. When they went to New York many of the wealthy invited them to their homes to give seances. They were the guests of Horace Greeley, Joseph LaFames, Alice and Phoebe Carey, William Cullen Bryant, George Bancroft, Dr. Hawkes, N. P. Willis, Dr. Marvy, Dr. J. W. Francis, J. Fennimore Cooper, Dr. Griswold, and a host of the best citizens. Their seances while with these hosts, attended by people from almost all parts of the United States and the world. The evidence given through their instrumentality was overwhelming and convinced thousands."

Where was "Professor" Grimes at this time? Why did he wait fifty years to make a death-bed confession?

There are many other manifestations to dispose of after the rappings are accounted for. "Professor" Grimes is fully conscious of this and enumerates and disposes of them by one blow, they are all frauds!

If "Professor" Grimes should return, would he not be ashamed and in the broader experiences that have come to him since his physical death, desire to correct the errors that he so strongly advocated here? Would he not clear away the rubbish he threw in the way of spiritual advancement and knowledge of future life? Most men would, gladly, thankfully, but Grimes with his opinions, his desire for church favor, his arrogant self-conceit, would more probably confirm every word he has uttered, or possibly declare he had found an orthodox heaven and hell from which none were allowed to escape to earth.

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Editor-at-Large N. S. A.

That man is not poor who has the use of things necessary.—Horace.

Yon gray lines that fret the clouds are messengers of day.—Shakspeare.

Questions of Great Interest Considered by "Sar'gis."

To the Editor:—"The Widow's Mite and Other Psychic Phenomena, by Isaac K. Funk," is the title page in part of a very solid volume of 532 pages, and as the justice of the peace said of the statute book of his state, has been read "from kiver to kiver." And it is, all told, a very unique production. As its story is familiar to your readers, this is not intended as a rehearsal of its contents, but rather a comment.

The investigations of the author, the recital of phenomena, the quotations from distinguished men, make it a remarkable array of testimony in favor of the central claim of Spiritualism—the existence of man after death, and that he can and does communicate with living people of this world. For this the author is entitled to honor for candor and fairness in presenting these evidences. At the same time his so often repeated declaration that he personally "is not a Spiritualist" provokes a smile or wonder as the case in sight may suggest.

But, then, when it is remembered that the author is a theologian, a book-maker, a publisher, a clergyman, a D. D., and LL.D., etc., the wonder ceases. To see a man pile up testimony on testimony, that convinces all reasoning minds as to the good faith and competency of the testifiers, and then say, "I am not satisfied," is one of the mental—or moral—curiosities we sometimes meet. And the temptation is often very strong to say that nobdy but a creedal clerical theologian could be so queer.

One thing is suggested, not alone in this voluminous array of witnesses, but it is so in all like presentations: That is, that there is nowhere as a result of investigations a single fact contradictory of this central claim. All that is said or given in opposition by non-investigators is that it is "trick," "fraud," "impossible," "nonsense," "credulity," and in late years, "hypnotism" and "subliminal subconsciousness."

Another curious fact has always run parallel with these assertions, and by men claiming to be impartial and scientific: That is, that the methods employed to test the truth of this claim have ever been those used to detect crime and expose criminals. In brief, the whole process may be summed up in the one expressive phrase of the police detective—the "sweat box." Mediums are tied, handcuffed, blindfolded, gagged, and subjected to every device the criminal school and police method can conjure up. All proceeding is on the presumption that the medium is dishonest, a cheat and a fraud by profession—as the lawyers say, a villain prima facie. The common law is more human that this, as it presumes innocence and honesty.

And all this for what? To determine whether the man "for whom Christ died," really lives, or doesn't, or whether he is immortal or mortal only. Was there ever under the sun such a travesty on intelligence, common sense and decency? A hottentot, a man-eating savage, a scalp-hunting Apache would never be guilty of such treatment of their ancestors, or of "the loved ones gone before," as this saturnalia of bigotry in our Christian civilization.

And then the logic of it: Take the Psychical Research Society of both England and America and what is the governing rule in all their investigations? It is this in substance: If in a manifestation in the presence of a medium, there is any possible way in which the same may or can be accounted for or explained as possible or thinkable, then the spirit source must be rejected and some undetected device credited with it. Or as this book approvingly remarks: "The burden of proof lies with Spiritualists, who assert things that are contrary to the common experience of mankind." Page 36. * * Again on page 35 this: "As long as any other reasonable theory than that of spirits will explain the phenomena, this one will not not be accepted by the average man. There is common sense in this requirement."

This "reasonable theory" is fully exemplified in the police methods of investigation. But one thing runs all through this book—the explicit and implicit faith in the statements of the Bible and the miracles recited in the story of Jesus. In fact the author in terms rejects all messages or statements through mediumship that in any way contravenes even seemingly the Bible narrations. In regard to the Bible reports of angels, spirits, seances or apparitions, this Psychic Research rule does not apply. Duplicate and endorse them or you are no medium. What a peculiar position for a scholar and thinker to occupy.

Suppose that rule is applied to the miracles and other things ascribed to Jesus—and which "infidels" have applied with a force never refuted—what becomes of our religious creeds? Is the church faith to become a thing founded on "trick," "fraud" and "credulity," inspired by ignorance, as is the verdict of the church as to spiritual phenomena of a remarkable family likeness.

Take, for one example, the central claim of Christianity, without which the church says it has no mission—the scene and story of the sepulchre and the absence of the crucified body. Put a medium in the place of the Magdalene, and the story of the resurrected as that of a seance. Then apply this rule that if the claimed phenomenon can be accounted for on any other natural or reasonable theory than as claimed then the claim must be rejected. Let us try it. First, the relation between the dead and the Magdalene—for had he not "cast seven devils out of her"? And next the military report, that while the soldiers on guard slept the body was stolen away. This sleeping on guard post is as common as soldiering, so there is nothing improbable there. Now what is natural next? The strong personal attachment of thewoman to the dead, and her desire to save the body from profanation by his enemies. The body was buried by a disciple in a private tomb—a very essential part of the plot. And next to circumvent the guard at the tomb. Owing to the Passover the sacredness of the intervening Sabbath was intensified with the Jews, and two nights and one day were available to carry out the purpose. And what more natural than to enlist the blandishments of beauty to entice the gallantry of the soldier—and where one more versed in the ways of endearment than her that was "first" at the sepulchre. Beauty and brass buttons have been the refrain of story and song from time immemorial. The Magdalene at the sepulchre "first," and the sleeping soldier is a far more human story than that of the angels. How can the Psychical Research Society and Dr. Funk look logic and nature in the face while rejecting their rule in this case?

This illustration is not used in any levity or sense of irreverence toward the essential tradition of so many millions of honest people, but as an object lesson, from the subconsciousness of the writer, for the cavillers, doubters and denouncers of spirit phenomena ten thousand times better authenticated than this vital claim, this very foundation claim of Christianity. Apply the rule under consideration to the miracles of the Old and New Testaments, and not one of them can stand alone without the corroborating mediumistic facts of modern Spiritualism.

Is it not about time that Spiritualists quit running after "respectable" endorsements, when this is all that half a century of toadyism to ignorant science and bigoted theology has gained. "Believe" is the shibboleth of the church, and "idiotic credulity" the retort of text-book scientists.

But there are other things disclosed by the compilations and quotations of this remarkable volume. Not only are the processes of criminal detection followed to prove or disprove immortality, but deception, falsehood and every thinkable device to induce contradiction, confusion and failure has been employed. Take the case of Mrs. Piper for example: Here was a woman, in private life of respectable character, in humble circumstances, with no cloud upon her. The Psychical Research Society heard of her as being a medium. And securing her consent to "sit" for them exclusively, she was their property, so to speak, for some sixteen years—and at the end of that time she was the same respectable woman she was before they discovered her.

But what was their action? She was at once treated as a suspect, and every device conceivable employed to confuse, detect and expose her as such. It was a rare thing for her to be treated as a woman of integrity. Her interviewers were introduced under false names, sometimes disguised in what theatre people call a "make-up," to hide even their natural features. For example let this extract from the account of her treatment in England stand as a sample of all the sixteen years' ordeal. It is on pages 247-248. Mrs. Piper was brought over to London and put in charge of the Psychical Research Society there. Sir Oliver Lodge met her at the landing stage in Liverpool, and turned her to the custody of Frederick Myers, the secretary of the society. She was kept under constant surveillance by hired attendants. But here are Mr. Myers' own words. As to persons invited to sit with Mrs. Piper, he says: "I chose these sitters in great measure by chance * * and (except in one or two cases where anonymity would have been hard to preserve) I brought them to her under false names—sometimes introducing them only when the trance was begun." And again: "Mrs. Piper, while in England, was twice in Cambridge, twice in London and twice in Liverpool, at dates arranged by ourselves; her sitters (almost always introduced under false names) belonged to several quite different social groups and were frequently unacquainted with each other."

Think of this system of deception kept up for sixteen years. So far as the record goes in all that time Mrs. Piper never met her investigators in a frank, honest atmosphere. What a terrible arraignment do their own statements make. Even the criminal detective seeks to extort confession from his sweat-box sitter by dealing honestly with him and convincing him that he knows his record by telling him the truth. But these psychical researchers tell the spirit lies, give false information and then ascertain truth by being themselves detected in deception. Or, in other words, by false pretense be convinced of the "immortality of the soul"—as they put it.

This is the moral lesson of the story of the Psychical Research Society—deal falsely with mediums and spirits in order to discover the greatest truth in human existence. Such is the fact in last analysis of this organization, its motives and methods discloses—the ultimate result of theology and science to get together on the great problem. No wonder that the issue is a child of unascertained lineage.

What is the lesson, if any, of all this strange, anomalous proceeding? Plainly this, that the central claim of Spiritualism—the continuity of personal human life, proved by the testimony of the "dead"—is a fact. And that after sixteen years masquerading with every devisable scheme of deception this fact is admitted by the Psychical Research Society.

But, does the general world and the church accept this testimony? Rev. Dr. Funk says not. He is not convinced, he is "not a Spiritualist" yet. And yet he almost truculently asserts that anything that even hints at doubting the Bible stories is anathema. Is not the human mind a curious thing—particularly when it has a speciality that holds a living behind it. The book-scientist who rejects the testimony can be excused, but to see the church whose whole stock in trade rests on the return of one man from the tomb, so bitterly averse to have its possibility proved is the curious thing. And yet for centuries the church has outlawed the Jew for adhering to this Psychic Research rule so strongly endorsed by it.

The strange anomaly is presented by Christianity of adopting the scriptures of the Jew as from God himself, and then persecuting him as a human outlaw for adhering to them. But this is aside. Only that it is curious the story of the Magdalene should be taken before the national testimony of the chosen people. This parenthesis is only a parenthesis here. Modern Spiritualism was impossible of introduction before the nineteenth century. There was no portion of the human race capable of thinking practically the lesson of its phenomena before that time. Practical minds and human institutions had to be born to understand and safeguard it, and reason left free to think without a priest—to realize that it was no more out of the order of nature to evolve a form of life that involved a spirit than to develop a caterpillar that contained a butterfly. And so was born to the human mind the fact of immortality as a fact of nature—that man is immortal because he is at all—and of course the consequent death of church legends, as a mere theory of uninformed imagination.

After all has been said that is about the cold fact residuum.

But to the book, to close up this rather desultory notice. It is of value even to the Spiritualist, for the latter half is made up of extracts from among the ablest modern men of science: Hare, Wallace, Crookes, Zollner, Myers, Lodge, James, and others. There is their testimony in a compact form that would require a small library to get from their own works. So after all, enemies are made to praise, and no candid mind can lay aside the book without a feeling of gratitude to the author-compiler, who despite his half-tone deprecation, has been too honest to attempt their depreciation. And the feeling on the part of Spiritualists will be rather of sympathy than otherwise—for in the summing up his own testimony is in favor of the great central claim.

But, Mr. Editor, can you excuse here reference to a thing that underlies all that the author accepts, without even consciousness that he does so, and which is so common in the average Spiritualist—making spirit thinking impossible. And that is that spirit is, per se, supernatural—omniscient, omnipresent and omnipotent. They will dispute this, but their actions, their questions, their "test" conditions are all born of this concept. They never seem to conceive that a spirit is like when in the body—a being of limitations.

This is not a strained statement, but a very pregnant fact. Take the Psychical Research Society. For its reported sixteen years it has pursued a studied persistent and carefully guarded system of false pretenses—or in other words of falsehood. And though composed of many of the brightest minds in the English-speaking world, the self-stultifying absurdity of the situation seems never to have dawned upon them. To lie for sixteen years in order to discover a fact or a truth, is enough to convulse a thinking world with amazement—or amusement as the moon may be for the time.

Yet it is not alone the Psychical Research Society that is so affected. It is this nursery-theologic concept of the nature of spirit that handicaps the spread of spiritual truth, and almost crucifies mediumship. All that is needed is to listen to the great body of questions asked a "control" in the seance-room or on the platform. It is at the bottom of the "business seance" and the natural promoter of the "blue book" tests. The intellect ignorant enough to ask the average "test" is thick-headed enough to cry "fraud" at the answer—just as some of the psychic researchers are at their own results. For how can a falsifier accept truth from any source—that he has anything to do with?

It is this superstitious concept as to spirit that is behind nine-tenths of this cry of fraud that so frets the air upon occasion. Read their tales and then read their schemes for "testing" mediums. You will find as a rule an utter ignorance of the principle behind spirit communication, and a method of testing as crude in its way as ever witch hanging, burning or drowning exhibited to the world. All these plans are of a piece with the old idea as to the "power" of the uncanny. To a well instructed Spiritualist the "frauds" we read about are as impossible as the old belief that the devil had horns, hoofs and a tail. It is enough to make angels weep to witness such exhibitions by some men and women whose names in the spiritual press are but synonymns for discord, bad blood and jarring variance among those who ought to be in harmony.

In the name of all that is good to humanity, what would sixteen years of honest rapport with spirits, mediums and seekers after light free from false methods and bigoted criticism, bring to the cause of enlightenment, human content and happiness? All that is needed is to turn our faces to the light and seek truth by open methods instead of insisting on "fraud" and thus inviting its shadow.

To the Editor:—The following clipping is from "Signs of the Times," an Advent church organ, of Oakland, Cal., and in as much as this paper has from time to time given the "solar plexus" blow to Spiritualists, it seems that the article headed, "Lessons from the Story of Cornelius," of which this clipping is a part, is one to make a Spiritualist smile. From "Signs of the Times."

Heavenly beings still visit the earth, as in the days when they walked and talked with Abraham and with Moses. Amidst the busy activities of our great cities, amidst the multitudes that crowd the thoroughfares and fill the marts of trade, where from morning till evening people act as if business and sport and pleasure were all there is to life, where there are so few to contemplate unseen realities—even here heaven has its watchers and its holy ones. There are invisible agencies observing every word and deed of human beings. In every assembly for business or pleasure, in every gathering for worship, there are more listeners than can be seen with human sight. Sometimes the heavenly intelligences draw aside the curtain which hides the unseen world, that our thoughts may be withdrawn from the hurry and rush of life, to consider that there are unseen witnesses to all we do or say.

We need to understand better than we do the mission of the heavenly visitants. It would be well to consider that in all our work we have the co-operation and care of heavenly beings. Invisible armies of light and power attend the meek and lowly ones who believe and claim the promises of God. Cherubim and seraphim and angels that excel in strength—ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands,—stand at His right hand, "all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."

"Therefore let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the Author and Perfecter of our faith, who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God."

TRANSPORTATION RATES.

M. V. S. A. Camp, Clinton, Iowa.

The Western Passenger Association has kindly granted the rate of one and a third fare for the round trip upon the certificate plan from all points in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri, going tickets to be purchased on July 28-30 inclusive, and on each Tuesday and Friday thereafter during the continuance of the camp session. Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket on each road. Read this carefully, and be sure that your ticket is dated as above mentioned.

The Diamond Jo line of steamers has granted one fare transportation for the round trip on their magnificent steamers plying between St. Louis and St. Paul. These steamers are scheduled, and a time-table giving the name of boat, date, etc., can be procured of agents at the various points named in circulars which can be obtained by addressing

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

Resolved, That while we condemn fraud and dishonesty in mediumship, as well as in all other things, we believe that the continual "cry of fraud" from our platform and in our press is detrimental to the best interests of Spiritualism; in that while it does not prevent frauds who are posing as mediums from practicing such impositions, but it invites unprincipled persons to enter this field to the detriment of Spiritualism and our genuine mediums.

The above is an impresive resolution adopted by the New York State Association of Spiritualists, intimating that the "cry of fraud" in the press and on the rostrum is very injurious to Spiritualism, and that through "suggestion," others weak in moral strength would be apt to increase the ranks of fakes. The resolution condemns fraud, thus actually "crying fraud" from the rostrum, and doing the very thing it condemns in others. It sends the resolution to various papers for publication, thus carrying out what it fully condemns the press for doing, and in both cases badly injuring Spiritualism, according to its own estimate, and by "suggestion" increasing the number of fakes, presenting an astonishingly curious medley that we will not make it our business to unravel, it is too tangled.

The Spiritualist press has never overburdened its readers with the "cry of fraud;" it has been the secular press that has done that. When Elsie Reynolds' style of "making dear spirits" out of herself dressed in artificial toggery, was exposed in Los Angeles, Cal., the same was read by at least 2,000,000. When the materializing methods of Houghton and wife in Philadelphia were published, at least 5,000,000 read the same, as the press dispatches flashed it all over the country. When May French and Neva Murivale Jenneau were arrested in Boston, (dressed in garbs saturated with phosphorus, etc., playing the "dear spirit" to gullible mortals) millions upon millions in various parts of the country read and commented on the same. We might enumerate many others who, when caught personating spirits, were dressed in flimsy draperies made especially for the occasion. According to the New York resolution we ought to have at least 500 fakes now in the course of preparation with bogus tests for the rostrum and cheese cloth and illuminated dresses for materialization, making arrangements for confederates and test conditions such as will easily deceive the gullibles—all caused by "suggestion," as intimated in the New York resolution. We thank the New York State Association of Spiritualists (composed of those who stand high in everything that pertains to true manhood or womanhood) for passing that resolution, for it gives us an opportunity to Open Court according to law and allow our readers in brief articles to talk about SUGGESTION; talk about the CRY OF FRAUD; talk about CHEESE CLOTH AND ILLUMINATED DRESSES found on the exposed mediums and their confederates; talk about the BLUE BOOK and fake tests; talk about materialized spirits that smell sometimes of whiskey and onions, and found to be the medium or confederates —all of course labeled "Pure Spiritualism."

We fully and most cordially endorse the above resolution by the New York State Association of Spiritualists, in the following language, and we wish our readers to study it most carefully:

First.—THE CLAIM THAT THE ONE WHO CRIES "FRAUD" OR DECEPTION WHEN IT ACTUALLY EXISTS, IS INJURING SPIRITUALISM, IS ABSOLUTELY TRUE TO THE FULL MEASURE OF THE DECEPTION PRACTICED.

We also fully agree with the following, as clearly expressing the actual facts in the case. Read it, re-read it, and then reflect and ponder over both statements carefully:

Second.—WHEN THE DECEPTION, HOWEVER, IN SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA IS ALLOWED TO CONTINUE, WITHOUT MAKING IT PUBLIC, IT THEN TAKES FAR DEEPER, WIDER AND MORE INFLUENTIAL ROOTS, AND FINALLY TO A GREAT EXTENT STRANGLES THE TRUTH, AND WEAKENS GREATLY THE CAUSE IT REPRESENTS, AND IN THE END IS FAR MORE INJURIOUS THAN GIVING IT CONTINUAL PUBLICITY.

In this OPEN COURT (inaugurated by the wise denizens of spirit life, those who have made The Progressive Thinker the greatest financial success of any Spiritualist paper ever published), we wish to introduce Theodore J. Mayer, one of the noblest of men, a philanthropist in every fiber of his being, and who has done as much financially for Spiritualism as all other Spiritualists of our boasted 10,000,000 combined. His statement can be considered in the OPEN COURT. He says:

"I do not wish it to appear that I am excusing fraud, or condoning trickery, far be it from my desire. I KNOW THAT FRAUDS AND IMPOSTORS ARE IN OUR RANKS. * * * We HAVE TO DEPEND ON OURSELVES, AND AFTER HAVING BEEN TAKEN IN HALF A DOZEN TIMES WE HAVE OUR EYE-TEETH CUT, AND ARE ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF OURSELVES AGAINST EVERY FAKE AND FRAUD."

His position may be considered in the Open Court. The question naturally arises, What is the condition of a religion, a cult, a sect, or creed, in which, in order to arrive at the exact truth, you have got to run the gauntlet of fraud and deception at least six times, in order to get at the golden grains? Mr. Mayer's position should be considered carefully in the OPEN COURT.

Spiritualism in its purity is grand and beautiful; its true mediums are Angels of Light, bringing nothing but the truth to mortals seeking for the higher knowledge. Their homes are heaven itself; their presence is one continual blessing. They comfort the mourning; they dispel the darkness of error; they bring sunshine into the life of the sorrowing; they have words of cheer for those whose burdens of life are heavy. For them we have a reverential feeling; for them we have nothing but praise. In their behalf—to separate the wheat from the chaff—this OPEN COURT is inaugurated. None but rotten fakes will find fault with it.

The Fraud Question. How It Can Be Settled.

J. S. Loveland is an Octogenarian, and for nearly a half-century he has been an enthusiastic Spiritualist. A man of unquestionable honesty and integrity, his views will be carefully considered by Spiritualists generally. He opens the Discussion on the Fraud Question with an interesting article, wherein he takes a somewhat gloomy view of the situation as at present presented.

It seems that the "Fraud Question" will not down. Writers persist in its discussion, and the frauds go merrily on in their nefarious work. Proving the existence of cheats, the existence of "Blue Books," or any other books, does nothing toward the cure of the evil. Now, it must be clear to every person that the only important problem is how to arrest the terrible progress of this corruption. I have very mildly suggested the method, but the suggestion has been accepted by only here and there a single person. I now see that the time has come to make a full exposition of the entire subject, even though it may give great offense to many. But truth and justice demand that it be done, and as I am beyond the fourscore mark, I must do it now or not at all.

It is unnecessary to say that "commercial mediumship" is at the basis of fraud. And it is just as true that until the commercial spirit shall be eliminated from the practice of mediumship the prevention of fraud will be an impossibility. Among the most popular lecturers and platform test mediums have been the most consummate cheats. But that does not touch the question of prevention and cure.

Can fraud be prevented? Can the frightful evil be cured? It might be presumptuous to answer these queries in the negative. I will, therefore, propose another question. Will the fraud and cheatery so rampant in the Spiritist ranks be cured? To this I answer No. Why? Because the entire organization and mode of action on the part of the Spiritists creates and perpetuates the conditions which evolve and continue the fraud manifestations. And the most enthusiastic and persistent opponents of frauds are the ones who are doing the most to uphold it. Not that they have any intention of so doing, but their earnest work is a stupendous mistake, and a wide departure from the true conditions of genuine mediumship.

The grand effort of organic Spiritism is to get mediumship upon the platform, before the public eye. The N. S. A. in all its gatherings exploits Spiritism by the public display of mediumship. State organizations do the same, and local societies pursue the same course. It is the universal fashion. The organic bodies endorse and ordain mediums for this specific work. More than this, in all the large cities there are probably five times as many meetings carried on by private parties as by regular societies and the distinctive feature of them all is the presentation of mediumistic phenomena on the platform. Many of these meetings have been kept up for years by the same parties, and notwithstanding the fact that they weaken the regular societies, their leaders are usually ordained reverends of some state society.

The nest of the primary Spiritistic movement was the circle. The public system, which I have described, has killed the primitive circle. The modern, commercial mediums have assumed the exclusive business of the circle at so much per head. They feel under obligation to give every one of the attendants a "message," or they will not be likely to come again. Being strictly a business, the principles of business must prevail—customers, patrons must be satisfied. No stronger temptations to dishonesty could well be imagined, and all the Spiritist organizations, from the National down are creating and sustaining these temptations to fraud. And just so long as organized Spiritism keeps up its platform shows of medium manifestation, just so long will it reap the harvest of fraud. Organized Spiritism is the manufacturer and the upholder of the fraud system. Will it discontinue the system? No! The fraud element controls it. I don't mean that the leading controlling persons in the organization are dishonest. Far from it. But they are identified with and upholders of commercial mediums and their manifestations. They recommend, license, ordain and employ the commercial mediums. And it amounts to very little for them to denounce a single case of a detected fraud when they are all the while parading the temptation to dishonesty before the eyes of the many.

But I must specify one more form of influence inducing to dishonesty, and that is the love of distinction and power. Among the inherited superstitions from the old church is the widely accepted notion that mediumship is a sort of peculiar sanctimoniousness. It is a gift from God, or some other holy personage, and the function of mediumship is, therefore, especially sacred. The exercise of these sacred functions entitles them to be ordained and called REVEREND, the same as church dignitaries. This is a very strong temptation to young boys and girls who are mediumistic, or wish to be thought so. It is a mighty power to puff up with pride and self-sufficiency unsophisticated persons. And it is a wonderful help to a fraud to have Rev. prefixed to his or her name and to commence their services with a devout invocation. Now, a medium is just as sacred (and no more so), as a telegrapher or a telephoner. And conversing with spirits is as holy as talking with your friends on the street, or in the house. Mediumship is as much a gift as your capacity to talk, sing, or walk. Mediumship is the result of a specific physiological condition. And without that special physiological make-up, all the gods in the universe could not make you a medium. Hypnotism, mesmerism and mediumship are equally holy, equally gifts from God, Jesus, the Holy Ghost or spirits.

NOW, WHEN MEDIUMS ARE REGARDED SIMPLY AS MEN AND WOMEN AND MEDIUMSHIP AS A PHYSIOLOGICAL CONDITION, AND THE COMMERCIAL PHASE SHALL BE LAID ASIDE, FRAUD WILL CEASE TO FLOURISH, FAMILY AND NEIGHBORHOOD CIRCLES WILL BE HELD, AND BROTHERLY LOVE WILL PREVAIL.

There is one more point which has a most important bearing upon this fraud question as well as upon the character and progress of the cause. Very largely the especial work of the spirit world has been taken out of its hands and assumed by a special class termed developers who have made it their business to "develop" or make mediums. NOW, IT IS A FAIR INFERENCE THAT IF THE SPIRIT WORLD KNEW ENOUGH TO PLAN THIS MOVEMENT THEY KNEW ENOUGH TO SELECT THE PROPER PERSONS TO MAKE THE MANIFESTATIONS. And the manner in which the first mediums were pressed into the work is ample demonstration of the fact. The Fox girls, the Koons, Mrs. Foye, Conant and many others needed no developer to become mediums.

But the inauguration of commercial mediumship created the demand for the developers, as hundreds, who were slightly amenable to hypnotic influence, were anxious and ambitious to become mediums. They were ready to part with coin in order to be able to abstract coin from others. The result of this has been the creation of many innocent frauds and some criminal ones. An innocent fraud is one who doesn't know the difference between hypnotic and spirit influence, nor are they able to distinguish between psychometric or telepathic perception and spirit impression. Hence, they think they are spirit mediums and most Spiritists think so too. So there is a double deception and a twofold fraud. Psychometrists and telepathists are urged upon the platform, and it is a patent fact that some of the most popular platform mediums never go beyond the power of psychometry and telepathy in their messages. They are victims of suggestion. Their Spiritist friends suggest to them that they are spirit mediums, and auto, or self-hypnotic suggestion helps them out in their fraud. The extent of this phase of fraud is beyond calculation. And for this the great body of Spiritists are responsible. Not criminally so, but responsible in the same sense that every ignorant violator of law is responsible. The consequences are unescapable.

This brings us to the prime cause of all the difficulty—IGNORANCE! And although over fifty years have passed since the Rochester rappings, the great mass of Spiritists are as densely ignorant to-day of the real nature of mediumship as were the first witnesses of the manifestations. And the most regretable feature of the case is that they don't wish to learn. This is as true of the professed teachers as it is of the common people. Comprehension of the mediumistic condition demands a knowledge of physiology and psychology, as both are involved in the condition and working of mediumship. And instead of investigating in the scientific manner, the old notion of miraculism is rampant to-day. A large per cent of Spiritist lecturers are ignoramuses so far as the science and philosophy of mediumship is concerned. They have been urged onto the platform with the idea that the spirits will teach them. Spirits will do no such thing. It would be a curse if they could or would do for us what we can do for ourselves. Being thus ignorant of the real nature of mediumship so far as the physiological condition is concerned and, if possible more ignorant of the character and power of psychological or hypnotic suggestion they are the veriest tools of all forms of magnetic influence from mortals with no capacity to distinguish it from that of decarnate spirits. And in that condition they are not able to distinguish between auto-suggestion and spirit impression. And, as the audiences are in the same deplorable state of ignorance, we have any amount of innocent, ignorant fraud. And this ignorance furnishes a most admirable field for the dishonest fraud. He can produce just as good, and in many particulars just the same character of tests as the honest performer, as he or she often possesses telepathic and psychometric powers, by which a very large per cent of real tests are given.

It is then no wonder that the dishonest frauds are upheld and patronized by so large a portion of the Spiritist public. They don't know any better. And they don't wish to know any better. They will not employ and listen to those who can instruct them in the science of hypnotism and mediumship. They will pass by such an opportunity and select the fraud instead. The general public is in the same condition and will choose the fraud instead of the real.

One of the damaging results of this ignorance to the Spiritist movement is, that the conviction is almost universal, in the church and elsewhere, that the whole mediumistic phase is dishonest fraud. In view of all these facts, I can see no possibility of present escape from the fraud evil. It is too strongly entrenched in the notions, institutions and practices of modern Spiritists to be overthrown by them.

As I think I have clearly shown, the public platform methods, linked with the spirit and practice of commercialism, are too firmly established to be overthrown. And so long as the present system of public mediumship is practiced, fraud is unescapable. Public mediumship must be completely discontinued. THE FAMILY AND PRIVATE circles must be re-established. The science of hypnotism, as a potent therapeutic agent, and an educator mentally, and a renovator morally, must be taught and made practical by the Spiritists, or they will sink into obscurity with the Christian church they are so servilely imitating at the present time.

J. S. LOVELAND.

The Bogus "Spirits" of H. E. Crindle and Wife.

After the exposure of the methods of Mrs. Elsie Reynolds at Los Angeles, Cal., it was not supposed her son, H. E. Crindle--by her second husband--and his wife would be brought within the meshes of the law so soon, and their arrant trickery be exposed to the millions of readers of the secular press. Sad as it may appear, such has been the case. The picture drawn is enough to make angels weep. We believe it is our duty in connection with this Open Court, to let Spiritualists know what is going on in our ranks, as a matter of important news.

FOR TRUTH ONLY.

The Halo Proposition—Fakeism—The Blue Book—"When the Smoke of Battle Has Lifted, True Spiritualism Will Shine in More Effulgent Ray."

To the Editor:—Spiritualistic matters of this city are just at present in a state of perturbation which will ultimately be productive of good effects to the cause of Spiritualism.

The exposure here of the fake materializing mediums, the Crindles, their arrest, imprisonment, and subsequent begging off from trial by agreeing to leave the city to escape the penalty of law, are but of recent occurrence.

Following closely upon this, at Sawtelle last Friday, one Mrs. Hynsdale, upon her own motion, exposing her trick work in so-called materialization, is the latest type of deception and fraud.

Members of the orthodox (?) fold point to all this, and in the antiquated form of expression, "I told you so," proceed to enlighten Spiritualists to the extent that all this but proves that Spiritualism is based upon fraud. The writer has several times been thus approached, but to all and sundry I have answered, "Set thine own house in order"; "Thou hypocrite, pull out the beam," etc.

But those of the orthodox (?) cult who judge Spiritualism from the counterfeit brand, strangely attempt to deflect the shaft of their logic (false in one, false in all) with regard to the frauds practiced in the name of Christianity. Should their false reasoning be applied to the Christian system, the fraud and hypocrisy wrought therein are sufficient to condemn it to all eternity.

At the morning meeting of the Truthseekers' Spiritualistic Society of this city last Sunday, Brother Hale, who has recently gained considerable notoriety by offering one thousand dollars for a genuine case of materialization, spoke at length upon Spiritualism debased and prostituted by those practicing fraud, deception, chicanery and charlatanism, and was roundly applauded when he called upon Truth Seekers to be true to their name and profession by endeavoring to expose all fakes. He created a ripple of sensation by holding up to view a small note-book which he alleged contained certain "tests" given time after time from the rostrum of the Truthseekers' hall. Sunday afternoon, Brother Hale in the Christian Spiritualist Society spoke even more plainly than he did before the Truthseekers, and gave his drastic views concerning materializations generally.

Brother Hale's campaign against fraud should be effectively aided by every society and by every Spiritualist in the city by laying upon fakeism the indelible stigma of abhorrence. Judging from articles in the Spiritualistic press concerning Brother Hale's one thousand dollar proposition, I can but infer that the conditions attached to the aforesaid proposition are not well understood. Brother Hale believes in calling things by their right names, consequently his utter unbelief in materialization is founded upon the fact that in order for a spirit to materialize, it must come clothed in its fleshly body. No medium need build air castles regarding the appropriation of the proffered $1,000, for it is defended by a bulwark impervious to attack.

The discussion has elecited considerable criticism, but when the smoke of battle has lifted, true Spiritualism will shine in more effulgent ray.

FULLY EXPOSED.

The Son of Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, and His Wife, Exposed in Their Attempt to Palm Off on the Public Bogus Spirits—The "Medium" Found Dressed in Artificial Toggery—A Sad Picture for Spiritualists to Contemplate.

A complete exposure of a bogus Spiritualistic medium at No. 822 South Hope street last night was followed by a fight which almost caused a tragedy.

H. E. Crindle and Ethel, his wife, live at that place, and there they have been conducting Spiritualistic seances. They are fakers pure and simple, and have been making their living by spook performances at which they pretended to produce the spirits of departed relatives of their dupes. Three times a week they have been holding seances at their house and charging 50 cents admission. It paid them, for last night they had thirty-two persons there, and that meant $16 clear for nothing. But they had not counted upon the exposure, which came, and which was one of the most dramatic performances in this city for months.

The expose resulted in a free-for-all fight and the arrest of four persons. Somebody had informed the Tax Collector's office that the Crindles were having seances without a city license, and Deputy License Collectors Shearon and McCoy were sent there to make a raid. They secured the services of Special Officer G. W. Livesey to assist them. Last night's seance was also selected by opposition Spiritualists to expose the game, but the officers did not know this.

Very Shild Medium.

For more than an hour or more the seance was about the same as one might expect, at any such foolish exhibition, but soon after 9 o'clock, Mrs. Crindle asked for the appearance of spirits of relatives, who were in her audience. Mrs. Selma Savoy, a firm believer, asked that her mother's spirit be called. That supposed spirit responded and in the darkened room seemingly began wandering from place to place answering questions, which Mrs. Savoy put to it. Unfortunately for the spirit, it went too near Mrs. Savoy, and that lady grabbed it and held on. She found he said, "and I got a taste of the truth. It a very substantial spirit, which stuck just enough to make me understand that there is reality in the teachings of Spiritualism. Then I was ready to believe anything, and I was deceived. I had asked you for bread, and you gave me stones. In this city has begun a crusade against fraud in the ranks of Spiritualism, and, please God, it shall never stop until not one fakir remains. I want the truth and all of it there is in Spiritualism, but I warn you, do not feed me on stones, for I cannot digest them."

gled and screamed, and Mrs. Savoy by a deft movement sent flying the mask the "spirit" was wearing; there before her stood Mrs. Crindle, very much in the flesh.

Then there was a riotous demonstration. Mrs. Savoy screamed for assistance and Officer Livesey responded. H. E. Crindle tried to stop him and a fight commenced in which a score of persons participated. It resulted in the wrecking of the place, and the turning on of the lights, and the complete exposure of the fake. Crindle got a sore head, for he was roughly handled while resisting the officer.

As soon as the fight commenced G. E. Beeson and P. A. Baxter, friends of the Crindle outfit, tried to rescue the medium, but they were knocked down and beaten before they could do anything in that direction.

When the first noise of the struggle was heard License Collectors Shearon and McCoy forced open the front door of the house and took a hand in the fight. Tables were overturned, chairs broken, women thrown from the room, faces bruised and heads cut. Throughout it all, Ethel Crindle, the medium, shrank into a corner where, scantily dressed, she waited until the row was over. She became the center of attack by the duped women in the audience, and they proceeded to tear nearly all her clothes off.

Upon the arrival of the police the Crindle woman was cowering in a corner and it was necessary to wrap her in a blanket to take her to jail. On the way she dropped half a score of wigs in the bed of the patrol wagon and when taken to female ward of the city jail she tried to secrete other wigs in a water closet, but was caught at it by Mrs. Gilbert, the police matron.

Crindle was also arrested, as were Beeson and Baxter. The Crindles were charged with violating the city license ordinance and the other with resisting an officer.

Before the trouble started Miss Myra Mauzy had been told that she was conversing with the spirit of her mother. The expose was too much for her and she relapsed into pretended unconsciousness, from which she was aroused by the suggestion that she be sent to the Receiving Hospital.

Up to midnight the fake medium and her husband had not been able to give bail, and their assistants, who tried to act as bouncers, also remained in jail.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Daily Times.

They Talk of Expose—Spiritualists Who Profess Honest Intentions Uphold Action Against Fakirs in the Business.

Spiritualist societies of Los Angeles have been agitated over the Crindle exposure conducted last week by the Express, and the subject was one of universal comment with adherents of this faith yesterday. Among those who profess to be honest in their investigations there was general denunciation for the Crindles and their methods, and many expressions of satisfaction over the complete exposure were heard. At the same time, it is evident that there were those present who would like to have covered the facts in the case and induced dupes of fake practice to believe that there is, after all, something of truth in materialization as practiced by these notorious frauds.

At the meeting of the "Truthseekers," held in Burbank hall, there was a gathering of many Spiritualist clans. It had been hinted that the subject of the Crindle exposition would be brought up, and suppressed excitement over the outcome was manifested. In accordance with the custom of the Truthseekers, a limited amount of time was given to each person wishing to talk on Spiritualism, and before the meeting had advanced far Robert Hale, a man of local business prominence, who has delved more or less into the belief, gained permission to speak.

Mr. Hale was interested in the recent expose, but because it was known that he is an enemy to the fakirs he was not in position to gain admittance to the Crindle seances. From the fact that he was duped by the methods of Mrs. Elsie Reynolds he has taken up arms against all deceivers who pretend to be Spiritualists and yesterday was ready to say in strong terms what he thought.

It was remembered by many who knew about the Elsie Reynolds expose that at the time Mr. Hale attempted to speak of it before the Truthseekers he was not allowed to do so. Yesterday when he arose there were murmurs in various parts of the house.

Witnessed the Fraud.

It so happens, however, that Mrs. Marie Pennington, vice-president of the society, was at the Crindle seance, and if she never before was fully convinced that materialization in general is fake, pure and simple, she was brought to that conclusion last Wednesday evening. Mrs. Pennington declares she never had any faith in the Crindles and had gone to the seance Wednesday night because she received an intimation that there would be an exposure. She wanted to see, and when the lights were turned on took a good look at the medium, and secured a piece of her celestial robe as a souvenir of the occasion. This robe, as previously stated, was made of cheesecloth, and the more censure for those in the Truthseekers' looks at it the more convinced is she that it still gives no evidences of the supernatural.

She was willing that Mr. Hale should speak yesterday, and invited him forward. He had a scripture text on which to build his remonstrance against fraud. "This is the house of God, but ye have made it a den of thieves!" he began, and then followed a vehement denunciation of the fakirs, as well as censure for those in the Truthseekers' society, who have, from time to time, countenanced persons believed by the public to be frauds.

"I came as an honest investigator," he said, "and I got a taste of the truth. Would Wink at Fraud.

T. J. Burk, who followed Mr. Hale, wanted to smooth over the situation, and suggested that if the former speaker found fraud in the ranks of Spiritualists, he should let the religion alone, say nothing about what he saw and join the Baptist or the Methodist church, or any other organization where he would be sure of not coming in contact with fraud. The argument in favor of such a course dwindled into a long, thin speech of mere words, and then the speaker used more words. Finally Mrs. Pennington called him to order, stating that he had talked long enough, and then gave her version of the Crindle raid. Mr. Hale was right, she said. While the society which she represented was looking for truth and not fraud, it should not be placed in the position of winking at deception when brought face to face with it.

Mrs. Lettie Allen, another advocate of Spiritualism, also spoke in favor of Mr. Hale's position, and A. M. Buck, who was in the party of raiders last Wednesday night, told what he knew of the Crindle expose, and urged that all persons interested in the establishment of the truth should lend their best efforts toward ridding their ranks of the disgraceful frauds that now invade them. Several other persons spoke in the course of the morning, and one or two made weak attempts to attack Mr. Hale's position, but no one came out boldly to defend the Crindles. In the back of the hall P. Baxter, one of the men arrested at the Crindle seance for resisting an officer, was seated, but he had nothing to say, and went out quietly before the meeting was concluded.

Not only at the Truthseekers' meeting, but at many others in the city yesday, was the matter of the Crindle scandal brought up, and Spiritualists who profess honesty warned their people that the time has come when they must eliminate fraud from their ranks unless they wish the outside public to do it for them.

When the Crindles were released from the custody of the law it was with the understanding they should leave town within a week, and if they fail in this it is declared that further action will be taken against them.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Express.

Elsie Reynolds' Son and His Wife Acknowledge They Were Fairly Caught in Their Trickery.

H. E. Crindle and his wife, Ethel, who were exposed as fakers at a Spiritualistic seance at No. 822 South Hope street, Wednesday night, were permitted to leave the city jail yesterday afternoon on the condition that they leave the city immediately. The "medium" and her husband stated that they intended to leave Los Angeles July 1, anyway, and will hasten their departure.

G. E. Beeson and P. A. Baxter, who were also arrested when the South Hope street spook joint was raided, and who incidentally received a few taps on the head when they resisted the officers, were permitted to depart. Crindle—who says that his name is Crandall, although it appears otherwise in his "ads"—exhibited a license taken out for purposes other than the practice of fake seances.

Mrs. Crindle managed to secure clothing yesterday morning, and the pink quilt used to shield her when taken to the police station in the patrol wagon, was discarded. The pair spent several hours in the office of the District Atorney while a decision in regard to the prosecution of the cases was reached.

Both acknowledged that they had been fairly caught in their trickery, and appeared greatly relieved when told that no warrants would be issued.

Many persons were court waiting for the cases to be called, and their disappointment was keen when they learned that there would be no prosecution.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Daily Times, June 17, 1904.

AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE.

To the National Spiritualist Association, to All State Associations, and to Honest Spiritualists Everywhere.

The Following Is Presented for Your Careful Consideration.

What every man wants, whether he is honest or beastly dishonest, is pure food—food unadulterated with health-destroying chemicals.

What every Spiritualist should want, whether he is honest or dishonest, is a Spiritualism uncontaminated with deception.

Where dishonesty commences in imitating genuine spirit manifestations, there the truth ceases to exist, and deception in all its hideous deformity commences, and a lie is labelled "Genuine Spiritualism."

A sect, a club, a cult, or a creed that harbors, or in any way defends the exercise of deception, is to that extent rotten.

Truth ceases to be the exact truth when it forms a copartnership with error.

To have to admit there is fraud and deception practiced in the name of Spiritualism, just exactly to that extent you have to admit that it is impure.

The claim that the one who cries "fraud" or deception when it actually exists, is injuring Spiritualism, IS ABSOLUTELY TRUE TO THE FULL MEASURE OF THE DECEPTION PRACTICED.

When the deception, however, is allowed to continue, without making it public, it takes deeper, wider and more influential roots, and finally to a great extent strangles the truth, and weakens greatly the cause it represents, and in the end is FAR MORE INJURIOUS THAN GIVING IT CONTINUAL PUBLICITY.

Lies and deception constitute a rotten companionship for angelic Spiritual Truth. Spiritualism can only stand forth peerless when it is freed from deception.

Truth is invariably tarnished, its influence weakened or destroyed when it allows itself to be promulgated by deceptive methods.

The cry goes forth from many conscientious Spiritualists that "It is bad enough for the outside world to 'cry fraud' into our ears, without having to hear it from our own ranks."

But so long as we make no effort to purify our Cause when we know it is to a certain extent impure, we give the outside world a license to cry out against us, besides, the world in a great measure is prejudiced against us, no matter from what cause, and people are most apt to criticise along the line of their prejudices.

The only way to purify a system is to get at the seat of the impurities and remove that; it is as correct a method for an institution like ours as it is for the Human System, a Nation, a State, or Municipality.

The renovation must begin within. The cleansing must follow the desire, but we must do it ourselves, and not leave it to disinterested people or our enemies.

In the battleground of human advancement and spiritual progress, Truth does not need Error or Fraud for an ally; on the contrary such an alliance is a source of weakness and invites destruction to any cause thus supported. Such allies are more dangerous and harmful than open and avowed enemies.

Impurities in the mind darken it, and in the same proportion, deception in a club, cult or sect throws a dark cloud over it.

If it is not in the province,—if it is not the bounden duty of a paper that represents a holy and divine Cause, to stand for the highest principles of that Cause, where lies any province? Where lies a duty?

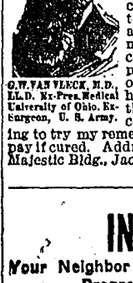
A paper that fears to speak the truth has no business to represent a Cause like ours.

A paper that dares not stand for principle has no standard of excellence and can hope for little prestige in this world.

"Truth wears no mask, bows at no shrine, and only asks a hearing."

The fact that spirits can and do communicate with mortals, is the grandest, the most beautiful, the most sublime, the most soul-exalting truth ever presented from the angel world to mortals, and the same will receive favorable recognition from the world at large, just in proportion as it remains uncontaminated with deceptive practices.

There are hundreds of honest speakers and mediums in this country, whose lives are pure and spiritual, and whose homes are veritable heavens.



They should be esteemed as true saviors of Spiritualism; they always receive the cordial endorsement of Angels of Light. For their sake—if for nothing else—the fakes should not be allowed to represent the cause of Truth, thereby in the end proving a curse.

PILES CURED ON APPROVAL

Don't Neglect Piles—They lead to the Deadly Cancer. My New Three-fold Absorption Treatment Promptly Relieves Even Most Malignant Cases.

I want to send every sufferer from piles, ulcer, fissure, prolapse, tumors, constipation, or other rectal weakness, my New Three-fold Absorption Cure and my New Book, in colors, about rectal troubles. (All in plain wrapper.) If you are satisfied with this benefit from my treatment, send me One Dollar. If not, send nothing. You decide after you have tried it.

My treatment cures by absorbing the growths and healing the membrane. It is bringing cures where everything else has failed. It has cured cases of 30 and 40 years standing. That is why I can afford to send it on approval. Here's what you get without paying a cent in advance: 1. One tube of my Absorptive Plastic, with my new Rectal Applicator, which quickly heals all itching and soreness. 2. Starella: A Spiritual Story. By Mrs. Abbie A. Averill.

"Starella, Starella, where are you?" The shrill voice of Mrs. Marston rang out as she stood in the kitchen door of the old-fashioned farm-house. The bees hovering over the clover blossoms swaying in the breeze heard her; the birds singing in the trees in the orchard behind the house heard her, and stopped their music for an instant, but apparently Starella did not hear her, for there was no response.

"I never did see such a child in all my life as that one," said Mrs. Marston as she turned back to where one of the neighbors sat making a morning call. "It does seem as though she can't bear to stay where folks are; just as quick as she gets her morning chores done, she is gone. I'll bet this very minute she is down in the lower orchard lying under some tree dreaming. I don't know how I ever come to have such a child; it almost seems sometimes that she does not belong to me, that she must have changed when she was a baby, like stories that I have heard; even her name doesn't seem natural; whoever heard of a farmer's girl being called such an outlandish name as Starella?"

"How did you come to name her that?" asked Mrs. Gowen.

"Oh! I didn't do it; her father's sister—I guess you never knew her; she married young and went out west to live—was here on a visit, and she thought the world of the baby; she never had any of her own. She was another just such a dreamer, she believed a person's name affected their lives or their lives made their names, something of the kind.

"Starella takes after her in nearly all her ways. One night she sat rocking her a long while and singing to her and when she got up and put her in my arms to take to bed, she said, very solemnly, 'Eliza, heaven has lent you one of its brightest stars for a little while; take care that you return it with its brightness undimmed.' What in the world she meant, I'm sure I don't know, and the next morning she began calling her Starella and the name stuck to her. I tried to break them of calling her by it, but when I found that her father had written it in the family Bible I thought I'd let it go. She was never like other children. She won't go to Sunday-school, and I can't get her to without whipping her, and she is most too big to whip. The first time she ever went she came home and said she didn't want to go any more; she didn't like to hear the teacher tell about God, she was afraid of him, but now she says she ain't afraid, for she has found out that there ain't any such God as they tell about in Sunday-school."

"Why! Mrs. Marston!"

"Yes, I wouldn't tell anybody half the dreadful things that child says. Do you know, Mrs. Gowen," lowering her voice and looking carefully around, "she sees things?"

"Sees things? What kind of things?"

"Spirits."

"Oh!—well, perhaps she does; there are people that can see them."

"I don't believe it. I believe when we die we shall go so far away from here that nobody can see us. I just can't believe it. I believe it's all her imagination."

"Well, I don't know. We ain't all alike. There's Mary Ann Simmons; she can draw your picture and paint it so life-like that anybody would know it; and there's that boy Martin Prays, he'll sit down to a piano and play any tune that he ever heard, without a bit of teaching. You nor I couldn't learn to paint pictures nor play the piano, but perhaps we can do some things that they could never learn to do. I know some folks have strange peculiarities. There's my Aunt Phebe Smart, she can always tell when she's going to have company, and she tells lots of little things that are going to happen."

"Starella can, too. About three weeks before Susie Murray died she came in one day—she had been gone all the afternoon—and she said 'Mother, you will have to go over to Mrs. Murray's to help before long, for Susie is going away.'"

"'Where is she going?' says I, and she says, 'She's going to heaven.' She knows that I don't like to have her say such things, and she is pretty shy about talking to me. I scolded her well, but she stuck to it; she said she had seen her in her coffin; it was a white coffin and lots of flowers on it, and Elder Whitney was preaching the funeral sermon; and sure enough, he was over to a quarterly meeting at Little River and they got him to attend the funeral."

"That was strange, wasn't it?"

"I've done everything I can to make her like other folks, but I can't account for her."

"Well, I wouldn't worry. You know you used to fret about James when he was small, because he didn't care anything about the farm, and was always fussing with all the crippled cats and dogs he could find, and you are proud enough of him now; worked his way through medical college and settled down with a good practice. I was over to Greenfield the other day and I heard some one say that Dr. Marston was one of the smartest physicians in the city."

"Yes, James has done well, no mistake, but there seemed to be something more sensible in his notions than in Starella's. Suppose such a thing, that she can see spirits, what good does it do her? Just unfits her for any good for anything else. It ain't natural; keeps one worrying all the time for fear she ain't right in her head."

"Well, well, I would not fret about it if I was you; she might be much worse. I'm sure she is a good obedient daughter; but I must be going. Good-bye."

It was true, Starella was a peculiar child; nobody understood her. Kind, affectionate, but too shy to be demonstrative. So extremely sensitive that she was never a favorite with the other children; they always said she was too touchy to have any fun with; the roughness of play which other children took in good part and returned in kind always seemed to her sensitive soul as an intended hurt, and she usually spent the most of the play time in her desk, dreaming as the teachers called it. Her dark brown eyes always had a far-a-way look in them, as though she saw things invisible to others. To her mother she was a constant source of trouble and anxiety because she did not take more interest in house-keeping and patchwork and all the things so dear to the bustling, energetic home-maker

"James," said Mrs. Marston to her son, who was home on a short visit a few days later, "I wish you would have a talk with Starella. I don't know what is to become of her if she don't wake up and try to learn something."

So, in the late afternoon, when the sun was going down behind the western hills, he sought her and found her, as usual, under a wide-spreading apple-tree in the orchard, engaged in examining the mysteries of a late rose which she held in her hand. Throwing himself on the soft grass beside her, he began, "Starella, I want to talk with you a little while. Don't you think you are about old enough to be doing something more useful than pulling roses to pieces?"

Starella looked at him in confusion. "I didn't know it was any harm; I only wanted to see how it was made, what was down in the heart of it."

"It isn't that it is any harm but you ought to be learning something about cooking and keeping the house. You are fifteen years old now, and it won't be many years before you will be old enough to be married and have a home of your own, and you should know how to take care of it."

"But I shall never be married."

"Yes, I suppose you think so now, but you will think differently a few years from now. It is natural for all women to wish for a home and family of their own. What are you going to be if you do not get married, a school teacher, or milliner, or dressmaker? or perhaps you want to be a doctor. I don't know as we need two doctors in the family."

"I would like to heal people, but I would never give them poison stuff as you do. I would give them the pure healing herbs that nature makes for them. Oh! I wish you would use the power you have in your hands (placing her hands upon his) to cure diseases instead of giving them all the horrid things that poison their blood. Don't you remember when I used to have such dreadful headaches, how you would place your hand on my head and the pain would all go away in a few minutes; and nights when I couldn't get to sleep, if you came and sat beside me and held my hands I would go to sleep so quickly? Oh! James, there are many, many sick people that you could cure by the healing power you possess if you would only learn to use it for the benefit of the sick; and for those that do not need medicine, there is something that grows for every disease. When nature makes or develops any living thing it provides something for it to eat and all the means of sustenance it requires, and it also provides something to cure all its ailments. If we were as wise as the animals we should know right where to go every time we were sick to find the means to relieve us."

While Starella was talking James was surprised to see that her nervousness all dropped away from her; her eyes changed in their expression, she talked with an earnestness and assurance entirely foreign to her usual manner.

"Why do you say nature makes any thing? Why don't you say God?"

"I don't know anything about God," she answered.

"I don't like the kind of God they talk about at church. I don't believe there is any such God, and I don't listen when they tell about him. I look away or shut my eyes and think of other things, and then I don't hear it. They say God is a person like us, and if he is he can't be perfect; he would make mistakes sometimes and if he did, everything would go all wrong, but nature never makes mistakes."

"What do you read?" asked James.

"I don't read much anyway. I don't care much for stories, or for any I can get, and I don't like the Sunday-school books, so I don't have much that I want to read."

"Don't you read the Bible any?"

"No, not now. There are so many horrid things in it that I don't want to think about, and I have to read them to find the good things; so I don't care much about reading it. I'd rather come out here and listen to the birds sing. Don't you love to hear them? Don't you feel as though they belonged to you? I do. I feel as though every bird there is is mine and I am theirs; I am a part of them, and of the trees, and of the wind that blows through them, and makes their leaves whisper, and of all the flowers and of the grass, and everything that lives and grows. We are all one. I am only a part and you are another part, and it's all ours, and nobody can take it away from us and we can never go away from it."

James studied her animated countenance intently. "Surely," he thought, "here is something that I can not understand. Where does she get these ideas? In what is she different from other children?"

"Are you never lonesome out here alone by yourself?" he asked.

"I am not alone," she answered quickly, as the color flamed over her face.

"What do you mean?"

"Will you let me tell you, James?" she cried, appealingly. "Mother won't let me speak of it, and if I tell father he only says, 'Well, you'd better not tell anybody else what you think.'"

"You can tell me anything you like," James said kindly.

"James, the folks that you call dead come and talk to me. When I am all alone and nobody talking to me, then they come, and they tell me the most beautiful things and I am so happy. Don't you say you don't believe it, or that it ain't so, for it is true; I do see them."

"But, Starella, it can not be so; you must imagine it. The dead are gone far away from here, and how can you see them?"

"Where have they gone?"

"I don't know. The Bible says the good go to heaven and dwell with God."

"Where is heaven?"

"I don't know; we none of us know about these things."

"Yes, we do. You can't tell me where they go, nor where heaven is, nor anything about it, because you don't know; but I can tell you because I do know. I see them and talk with them, and they have told me many things about where they live and what they do."

"What do you see?"

"Oh! so many. Susie Murray comes to me almost every day. She wants me to come out here alone so she can talk with me; and I see Aunt Jennie. You know mother tells us about her, how she went away when she was a girl, but she ain't a girl now; she is the most beautiful angel you ever saw; always dressed in a lovely white robe, and she says she has taken care of me ever since I was a baby, and grandpa—you know I never saw grandpa—but one day he came and put his hand on my head and I knew it was him without anybody teling me, and when I looked at him I saw that he was real lame and couldn't walk without a cane, but I didn't know it before. I asked mother what made Grandpa Marston lame and she told me that he broke his leg before he died, and he was so old it never healed properly, and it always bothered him, but when I told her that I had seen him, she scolded me and said for me never to tell such a thing again."

"What do they look like, real people?" asked James.

"Yes, just the same, only more bright and nice. I can see them all right but I can't touch them. If I try to touch them, I don't feel anything."

"I don't know what to think," said James. "It was only grandfather's body that was lame; his spirit can't be lame."

"It ain't; they tell me all about that. It is only when they come close to us that they look and act as they did when they were in the body. We wouldn't know them if they didn't; but the real 'they' is just the same all the time, they have only just took off the body, just as you will throw away this suit of clothes when it gets soiled and worn; you will leave it off and put on a nice new suit, but it will be you just the same; you've only got a better suit of clothes to wear, that's all."

"And it makes you happy to talk with them?"

"Oh, yes! I'd like to talk with them all the time. I try and mind mother and do what she wants me to, and get my lessons at school, but all the time I am wishing I could be out here or in my room talking with them. I want to learn all I can about their lives and their homes."

"Why do you want to learn theset things?"

"Because I am going with them before long, and I want to know all I can about it before I go."

"Why do you think you are going with them?" and a pang smote his heart as he noted the transparency of her complexion and the unearthly look in her eyes.

"They tell me that I am. Aunt Jennie says it is natural for some plants to die without growing to maturnity; that if all the little trees that start up were to grow up, the earth would be overgrown with trees, that of every thing than grows there are more that do not live their full lives, or what we think is their full lives, than there are that do, but they are only transplanted. I shall never die. I shall only go away a little ahead of the rest of you; I shall get my new suit before you do yours, and I shall be so busy getting ready for the rest of you. Aunt Jennie says there will be plenty of work for me; work that I shall love to do. I don't know yet what it will be, but it will be what I can do best."

"If it were true and you knew you were going, wouldn't you feel dreadfully to think you were going to die and leave us all?"

"James, do you remember before you decided to settle at Greenfield, you thought you would like to go to California and start in your practice; you got very enthusiastic over it. You thought it was a beautiful country; you had heard so much about it, you thought you could do so much better there than here. You hated to go so far away and leave us all, but you said you would write often, and come home once in awhile, and you said that if you liked it, perhaps after awhile father would sell the farm and we could all come. That's the way I feel; I am sorry to leave you all and I hate to have you feel bad about it, but I do want to go. It is so beautiful, and I can do so much that I can't do here, and it's better than California, for I can come and see you every day, and talk with you if you will let me. I shall be in my lovely new home, and still shall be beside you all too. I shall know what you are doing and all that happens, and, James, you will tell father and mother about this after I am gone, won't you? and tell them not to feel bad or to mourn for me the least bit, for if they do I shall know it and I can't be happy while they are mourning. I am not going right away, and perhaps they will let me talk to them about it before I go."

"Well, little sister, I hope it will be a long time before that day comes, but it is getting damp, and we must go into the house."

James thought long and deeply that night but could come to no conclusion as to whether Starella really possessed a power or faculty that others did not, or whether it was all owing to an over developed imagination.

Before going away the next morning James told his mother to be careful of her, not to make her study any more than she liked, to give her only light household tasks to do, but to try and provide as much cheerful company for her as possible. He thought it might be well if she could go away from home for awhile, have something to change the current of her thoughts, new scenes and new companionship, a suggestion which Mrs. Marston tried to carry out by writing to a cousin who lived in the city and asking her to take her for awhile; but Starella pleaded so hard not to be sent away that the project was given up.

The summer passed away. Fall came with its cold bleak days and the trystings in the orchard had to be given up. School began, but Starella came home so very tired at night, and took so little interest in her studies, that, with James advice, she was allowed to stay at home. As winter wore away she did less and less of the household duties, but seemed content to lie upon the couch by hours, gazing into the fire in the old-fashioned fire-place. It came to be generally understood that she was going into a decline. The neighbors openly discussed the probability of her living until spring. Everybody but her mother seemed to recognize the fact that she was not to be here long. Mrs. Marston stoutly insisted that there was nothing serious the matter with her, she was only ailing a little, and would be all right when it came spring and she could get out of doors.

On one of James' visits home, he brought with him a brother physician in whose judgment he had great confidence. His opinion, plainly stated, was, that she would probably not live long. She might, if she could go to some warmer climate, linger a year or two, but she would never be strong or healthy. She had been born with a delicate constitution, predisposed to a weakness of the lungs, which the rigors of the severe New England winters had aggravated. In short, he gave them no hope that she would ever be better.

As the fact grew more certain that she was fading away, her spirits seemed to rise; she grew more cheerful; seemed to try in every way possible to brighten the days for her father and mother. Her cheery laugh was heard much more frequently than before she was sick.

James called the corner of the big kitchen where her couch was, "the happy corner." The girls of the neighborhood enjoyed coming to see her, declaring that she was twice as jolly as she used to be. But her mother noticed that often when she had to leave her alone while she was performing her household tasks, in coming back into the room she would find her with the old rapt, ecstatic look in her eyes, as though she was permitted to see the glories of the land to which she was fast hastening. At last, the sympathy and love in the mother's heart conquered the old prejudices, and she was allowed to tell her her experiences, and many hours were spent in conversation upon the subject upon which Starella had so longed to talk, in which she would use every argument she could think of to convince her mother that God was not a God of wrath as she had always believed, but that God was love, and that heaven was with us all the time if we would have it, and that the loved angels who had left our mortal sight were still near us, and that she would herself after a little while become a daily visitor to the home from which her bodily presence should have passed away. Gradually a peace and hope was born in the mother's heart that helped her to be ready for the day in which she must give up her only beloved daughter, a day that came all too soon.

The first warm sunny days of April had come. Starella was very restless; a weary night has passed, and in the morning she said to James, who was at home, "I wish I could go down in the orchard once more. Can't I go?"

"You can't walk, I am afraid, but if you want to go real bad I will carry you."

"I wish you would. I feel as though I must go. So she was wrapped up in warm shawls and in her brother's strong arms carried out under the apple trees and laid in a reclining chair.

"Oh! isn't this heavenly!" she whispered, as she lay looking up at the fleecy white clouds that were chasing each other across the sky. "I wish I could go from here; it would be so easy. Mother, they are all here. I wish you could see them. Aunt Jennie is waiting and she smiles so sweetly. She says I shall not have a single pain in going, that the way is all ready and they are all waiting for me to come. Mother, please do not cry for me, now, nor after I am gone, but every morning when you get up, think that I shall be there, and every night at dark give me a few minutes; let me come to you. I will do all I can to be a good helpful daughter to you. Father, don't work very hard the rest of your days. It will only be a little while. Your work is almost done. I will help you, too. James, you have been a dear brother; I know you will look after father and mother, and sometime the angels will open your eyes, and you will see them, too, and know that it wasn't imagination. I am sleepy. Kiss me, all of you, and I will go to sleep."

She slept so long, that, fearing she would take cold, James took her in his arms and bore her gently into the house.

Just as he laid her on the couch, she opened her eyes and with a glad cry, "Oh! Aunt Jennie, can I go now? I am coming," her freed spirit joined the dear ones who had tried their best to prepare and fit her for the life in the beautiful summer land.

Notes From Texas.

With the summer months there comes a slight lax in the work of the Spiritualist societies, as in other places; yet in several of the cities actual work is continuing.

Mrs. Laura B. Payne, who some months ago took up the work in Beaumont is just recovered from typhoid fever and lately delivered a most impressive and helpful lecture at the Temple in Galveston on the subject, "In the Valley of Shadows," prefacing her lecture with the poem lately published in The Progressive Thinker, which came to her as an inspiration almost immediately upon leaving the hospital from her illness. Mrs. Payne is now in San Antonio with her daughters and will lecture there and in Austin until time for the state convention which will be held in San Antonio late in September. Mrs. Payne is one of the earnest devoted lecturers with the life-giving beauty of Spiritualism in our ranks, who lives the philosophy she teaches and thus impressing those to whom she ministers.

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner is spending a few months in Chicago but expects to resume her work in the "Lone Star State" early in September, and persons desiring her services should address her at 619 Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill., or address President John W. Ring, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas, relative to the matter. Mrs. Kayner's work was highly appreciated in every one of the various places she visited, and there are already requests for her return.

Mrs. Alice Baker continues to uphold the banner of organized Spiritualism for the society in Dallas. Her work is generally acceptable. Her son, Master Milton Baker, is at present at the Temple in Galveston, and attracted a large audience of earnest, intelligent listeners for his lecture a few Sundays since; though a lad of but fifteen years, his ideas are advanced and his language pleasant, thus making him attractive not only as a prodigy, but as a valuable worker for Spiritualism.

Mr. John W. Ring continues his work in Galveston, and also issues regularly each week the Progressive Lyceum, a lesson sheet for the various lyceums. If those persons having charge of the lyceum department at the various camp-meetings will address Mr. John W. Ring relative to literature for the lyceum they will find it helpful.

Regardless all the hubbub concerning fakes and regardless their actual existence the pure white banner of our beloved Spiritualism floats steadily before the breeze of progression. It will no doubt be further reaching and more favorably conspicuous when workers moved by the holy impulses of loving devotion will cease to stoop beneath the standard of the very highest and best. It is time that we take a permanent stand for the pure and good, utterly disregardless the questionable and unworthy; thus attract by actual merit the attention of that element of people who will support Spiritualism in its rightful position as a religion of comfort and peace.

The Home Progressive Lyceum of Galveston, Texas, intend to hold an Apron Handkerchief Sale some time during August and kindly solicit these ever useful articles from the various friends to whom this notice may come. Please address all donations to Miss Clyde Garrett, 1604 Avenue M.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them or particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to the higher life, June 23, Abel Davis, of Watertown, N. Y., aged 94 years and 1 month. He has been an earnest Spiritualist since the truth first came to his notice in 1849, and a healer of great power. He has been called to treat patients in the family of the chief executive of state, and in many a poor working man's home, with a graciousness born of love and sorrow for their suffering. His work was done freely. Early in life he learned the molder's trade and went into business for himself, and quite early retired from business with a modest fortune which he invested in such a way as to help the borrower, and gain for himself legal interest. In this way he amassed a large fortune. He never speculated, but was content to gain by methods he thought were right.

His good wife passed to the beyond in October last. Years ago they built a temple and donated it to the Spiritualist society there, and with a kindly interest have provided for its future, if the workers there will show an interest in its perpetuation, and we know they will. These friends planned their gifts together, and many thousand dollars in notes and mortgages were cancelled at his death, if those who had given them showed a disposition to be honest. Spiritualists, Presbyterians, Catholics and other denominations were treated alike. The only relations of his present at the funeral were a niece and a cousin, but his wife's family were equally dear to him, and they were present, in fact the church was full inside and many from the outside were mourners, and hundreds looked their last that day upon one who had helped them in some way. So he died rich in all that is most precious, for he has sowed seed that will bear rich fruitage in life immortal.

The writer officiated at the funeral.

CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Passed to spirit life, in Westboro, Mass., June 29, 1904, at 11 p. m., Mrs. Sarah M. Temple, aged 78 years, 7 months and 2 days. She has been a faithful worker in the Spiritualist faith for fifty years.

Passed to the "world beautiful," from North Collins, N. Y., July 1, 1904, H. Wesley Ford, aged 54 years. Mr. Ford was a firm Spiritualist, and his wife, Mrs. Ellen Landon Ford, has been a medium since childhood. His funeral was very largely attended, he having been a Mason, also an Odd Fellow, a member of the Eastern Star and Rebecca, all of whom paid him the highest tribute of respect, as did other of his town people. His wife, four brothers and two sisters miss his physical presence, but expect a glad reunion by and by. The writer officiated at the funeral.

CARRIE E. S. TWING.

Passed to spirit life, June 9, Joseph Reeder, the brother of the Rev. Mary Mann, 829 Eighth street, Louisville, Ky. He said he saw the beautiful light and that he had crossed over. The services were conducted by the Rev. George Heinsohn. He was an admirer of The Progressive Thinker and read it to the last.

A PRACTICAL COURSE FOR Physicians and Students of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to MISS NETTIE WINTER, 466 LaSalle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Telepathy in a New Role.

Some prominence has recently been given by the daily press, to the case of a lady of Quincy, Ill., who, according to the published accounts has been carrying on courtship, with all its usual accompaniments of a loverly character, by means of telepathy. As stated by the Daily News, courtship by telepathy, including kisses transmitted through space from an ardent wooer to his fiancee, are features of an engagement announced from Quincy, Ill., and which have excited interest in the belief in telepathy and its practice. While there is no organization in Chicago formed for the purpose of study of telepathy as one of the psychic manifestations that puzzle science, there are many persons who devote much reading and research to it. The instance of the courtship by telepathy is taken by some of them in a vein of seriousness. By others it is taken in the light of a joke, the humor being in the enthusiasm and acute powers of imagination of Mrs. Georgia Lathrop, the Quincy woman, who says that she received kisses from a preacher in a Missouri town while they were separated by many miles. Mrs. Lathrop recently secured a divorce. She soon will wed the preacher, who continues conducting a devoted courtship by the subtle force that they have almost a monopoly on.

"Regarding the case of Mrs. Lathrop," said Elmer E. Carey, assistant editor of a journal of the new psychology, "I would say that imagination, expectation, desire and auto-suggestion, coupled with a romantic temperament, will sufficiently account for the experience which she relates. She knew about what kind of message her lover would be likely to want to send and imagination would fill in the details.

"Such cases are not worthy of any serious consideration, except that they show that the interest is growing in psychical matters. But real telepathy, or the transmission of thought, other than through the recognized channels, has been amply demonstrated.

"Telepathy frequently occurs when one is in great bodily danger or when the mind is under great strain or when death is imminent. At such times a person's thoughts may travel to a loved one, to a relative or friend. Sometimes the telepathic impression is received as a visual perception, sometimes it is perceived by the ear or touch or by all of these methods.

"The artificial production of telepathic phenomena for experimental purposes is not unknown, but it is limited in its scope. A word or number or diagram may be perceived telepathically, but it has never been demonstrated that it is possible to carry on a conversation by this means.

"The study of practical psychology is to-day impressing the minds of many thinking men and women. The discovery of radium has opened the door for new and startling theories. It now seems that all is matter, and that thought is but a form of atomic energy. If so, why could not one brain send emanations to a distant brain on the principle of the wireless telegraph?

"In this view of the case thought is material; as matter is indestructible, it follows that thoughts are indestructible and everlasting. Why, then, under proper conditions, might not thoughts of others be recalled and be made manifest?"

A Valuable Device.

Because of a severe rainstorm it was impractical to hold church service, near Benton City, Mo., recently; so the pastor, Rev. W. T. Moore, utilized his telephone, made connection with all the phones on a party line, which embraced the leading members of his flock. Then, with a telephone booth in which the preacher was ensconced, services commenced in regular order, and were carried to their conclusion, the large congregation joining in singing. Says the report: "Every detail of the usual service was carried out excepting the taking of a collection." That, the most important of all, had, unfortunately, to be omitted. That will be a glad day for the whole country when such church exercises become universal. Then, with his phone nicely adjusted, the auditor can drop back in his chair, have a nice sleep and perchance dream, and the gospel-banger will be none the wiser for it. There is no end to the possibilities of such an arrangement.

Spiritism and Mrs. Leonora E. Piper, and Dr. Thomson J. Hudson's Theories in Regard to It. By Ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey. Demonstrates futility and inadequacy of Hudson's explanations of spiritual phenomena. Price 25 cents.

An Epidemic Cry of Fraud.

There is an "Epidemic Cry of Fraud" sweeping over the country, resulting from certain exposures of fake mediums. Honest mediums have nothing to fear. This epidemic cry of fraud will soon exhaust itself, leaving the moral atmosphere clearer, leaving Spiritualism in a more exalted condition, leaving the hundreds of honest, pure, loyal mediums in all the various phases, in the full possession of their God-given rights. This paper is the especial friend of all honest mediums. Their gifts are angelic; their homes are heavenly, and they have done a grand work for humanity. The cry of fraud will not injure them personally, and the tendency will be to purify our ranks. Running water gradually purifies itself, and this temporary agitation in our ranks will do the same good. A constant calm would prove ruinous in the material world. A stream with no current soon becomes corrupt. A cause that is not torn at times by internal convulsions never existed. Spiritualism is rent now by the cry of fraud that has emanated from the great dailies reaching not less than thirty-five millions of close readers. The Open Court on the second page will do much toward exhausting this epidemic cry of Fraud, and will result in placing Spiritualism on a higher plane, the same as the discussion of the Great Psychological Crime did. There were giants in intellect in that contest, and for several weeks the battle raged furiously. The dismal cry went forth from a few timid Spiritualists, "You are injuring Spiritualism; you are driving away investigators; you are preventing the development of mediums; you are working in harmony with the Jesuits," etc. What was the result of this discussion? Simply this: Our Cause was very much benefited, and the circulation of The Progressive Thinker largely increased. Now the cry of fraud is strictly legitimate in the estimation of many, when one's own sad experience knows absolutely there is fraud. When a materializing medium is exposed and found dressed in artificial toggery prepared especially for the occasion, should the earnest cry of fraud be suppressed, and perfect silence reign? Can a great Cause prosper while it devotes its time to covering up wrong doings? All these various questions will be discussed pro and con by our many contributors in the Open Court, making a Symposium that every one in our ranks should read.

Amazing Facts.

We presume it is well known to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, that all the translations of the so-called Holy Bible extant, have followed along the lines of the original translation, and that the Latin Vulgate, instead of the "Original Greek," as alleged, was the base. The Bishop's Bible, and the King James Bible, were, in fact, but revisions of former translations. The committee in charge of the latter, says their report: "Were favored with all the former translations. These were held in hand by members of the committee, while another read the Greek or Hebrew text." And, as any one can see by their comparison, the Douay rendering, to agree so accurately in many places with the "authorized edition," must have adopted a similar method.

The late revisers wished it "borne in mind that it was their duty not to make a new translation, but to revise one already existing."

The American revisers found and corrected 35,000 errors which existed in King James' rendering. How many others did they neglect to correct because they could not comprehend what the original writer meant by terms, some of which were given without an attempt to find an English equivalent? And then the obscenity concealed in Hebrew words were piously left untranslated.

We make these statements of facts to introduce the following paragraph from the pen of Charles W. Smiley, M. A., which we find in a Boston journal of recent date. He says:

"A correct, honest, scholarly translation of the Hebrew Old Testament and of the Greek New Testament will give us an entirely new set of writings, so different from all translations heretofore made as to amaze the world. It will entirely explode all the creeds of Christianity; will reveal an amazing system of hidden knowledge and command the admiration of every honest-hearted man. I say this from months of hard study of these untranslated documents and from some comprehension of the 'hidden mysteries' concealed therein."

What will astonish all of us is his further statement that:

"Neither the word 'Jesus' nor the word 'Christ' occurs in the New Testament codexes of ancient date. In the Bates Hall, Boston Public Library, any evening, I can show the Sinaitic Codex, the Alexandrian Codex and the Vatican Codex, proving the absence of these words. There, too, can be seen the books regarding the Catacombs, and copies of inscriptions in the Catacombs of the first and second centuries, among which the name Jesus never occurs."

The only way to discredit such statements is to raise the cry of infidelity.

Learned Christian scholars from the principal universities of Europe and America have been sent out to make explorations among the ruins in Palestine, in Egypt, in Babylonia, in Assyria and Chaldea, hoping to find corroborative evidence of Bible narratives. So far as our knowledge goes, each archaeologist in turn has been denounced as a skeptic, so soon as he made his report, and the learned the world over are branded "Infidels!" Once the favorite pastime of the church was to burn such bold thinkers at the stake. Now it has to be content with applying opprobrious epithets.

What are to be the methods of the future?

Ignorance of the Bible.

The preachers complain that the Bible is no longer read by the people. They say the book is kept in their houses for fashion's sake, to lie unread from year to year, the possessor taking his pastor's statement for its contents:

A gentleman told us a while ago of his son, a business man of prominence, who felt he was really ignorant of the book, the base on which so many conflicting churches were built, and he asked his father to spend an hour each evening in reading aloud from the sacred pages. The aged parent commenced to carry out the son's request and read:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

Chapter after chapter was read, and the young man learned all the nice processes of creation, of the making of man out of dust, and a woman out of a rib, and her great naughtiness in eating an apple and seducing the man to eat; of their discovery that their wardrobe was exceedingly scant, and of God, just through with his world-building, turning tailor, and making aprons for the hapless pair; and thus on from incident to incident, through the changing panorama, passing the story of the great flood, and Noah's valuable services to succeeding generations in consequence, of his drunken debauch, of the building of the tower of Babel, and of God's scattering the builders abroad over the face of the earth and confounding their language so they could not go on with the structure, scale heaven, and drive him from his throne.

Then, on the third evening, he commenced on that very interesting narrative in the 11th chapter

"These are the generations of Shem: Shem was a hundred years old, and begat Arphaxad two years after the flood. And Shem lived after he begat Arphaxad five hundred years, and begat sons and daughters. And Arphaxad lived five and thirty years and begat Salah. And Arphaxad lived after he begat Salah four hundred and three years, and begat sons and daughters. And Salah lived thirty years and begat Eber—"

Father," said the young man, "the story is intensely interesting; but let the whole d——d crew go on in their begatting business, and I will go to bed, quite satisfied with my knowledge of the Bible. If God had time and patience to write such a book let him find his own readers. I can't afford to waste my time any farther in learning its valuable contents."

The faculty of Johns Hopkins University has evidently found others whose ambition for Bible knowledge was eclipsed at an early day; for in a reading text, in a class of eighty students, a newspaper editorial was read containing a reference to the Ethiopian who could not change his skin, only one in the entire eighty was able to locate the country of the Ethiopian.

Of such preachers are made, and it is they who howl the loudest about the ignorance of Spiritualists.

CLAIRVOYANT VISIONS.

Dealing With Incidents at a Spiritualist Meeting.

In The Progressive Thinker of June 25 an article appeared entitled "Interesting Clairvoyant Visions," dealing with incidents at a Spiritualist meeting in this city at which Mr. J. Clegg Wright was the speaker.

The writer describes at length rites and forms of the Catholic church which she claims to have clairvoyantly seen enacted in the hall at the service mentioned. A powerful priest is described in conversation with her guides in which "they represent themselves as working in harmony with the good influences in life." So, she says, "I was a little surprised when Mr. Wright was unable to go on with the lecture, and they showed me that the band of Catholic priests had caused the condition."

As usual, Mr. Wright prefaced his lecture with a few remarks, among other things saying: "No man has ever seen God; no man ever will see God," and it is to the utterance of this statement that the writer seems to attribute the occurrence that followed.

Mr. Wright was "controlled" and spoke for a few minutes only when it became very evident that something was wrong. Spirit John Shaw (one of Mr. Wright's invisible body-guard) took possession of the medium, placed him in a chair saying that he (Shaw) would give expression to the thoughts of the spirit he had displaced, but in a little while he was unable to do so, and Mr. Wright was taken from the platform in a very weak condition.

As I was one of "the mediums who were to give messages" and the one who took the platform when Mr. Wright was assisted therefrom by kind friends, a few words from my pen may be in point.

It was by following the directions of one of my spirit guides (a powerful Indian, who took control as I stepped upon the platform) that Mr. Wright was restored to his normal condition. The treatment prescribed was not that employed to remove an evil influence, but such as would release a spirit not familiar with the organism it was controlling, and also stimulate the heart action of the medium.

As all trance or semi-trance mediums doubtless know (most of them from experience, especially where the physical body is weak) it sometimes happens that the control thrown over a medium is very deep, bordering upon or even producing a state of catalepsy. When in this condition, the heart beats very slowly.

Mr. Wright had been ill for some time, and on the morning referred to went to the hall and attempted to lecture, practically without having taken any breakfast. A spirit apparently not familiar with his organism attempted to deliver the discourse, but the medium was not in a physical condition to permit such a deep control as the spirit threw over him. The spirit was willing, but the flesh weak.

So far as my clairvoyant powers were able to discover, there was no Catholic or malicious influence thrown over the medium to prevent him giving the lecture intended by the controlling spirit. Indeed, the same intelligence took up the thread of the discourse where it was broken in the morning and completed it at the evning service the same day. (So I was informed by Mr. Wright, being unable to attend that meeting myself.)

To send broadcast an implication that Catholic or other malign influences had gained such power over a long-established society like the First Association of Washington, that they could seriously interfere with the work of one of the best known trance lecturers in the world, does not seem altogether just, unless the evidence is conclusive.

The cry that Jesuit spirits are ever around seeking to destroy the work of capable and honest toilers in the cause of Spiritualism is an old one. But it seems to me it would be far wiser for mediums and Spiritualists to cease bemoaning the superior power of the hosts who would destroy, and to so fortify themselves by a thorough understanding of the known laws of spirit return, that all such forces would be powerless to affect conditions in any way.

When this is done, all impersonating or deceptive spirits of whatever cult, will lose their power to impose upon us. In knowledge alone lies safety and strength—especially is this true in mediumship.

We become the tools of deceptive forces when we cease to exercise the God-given rights of cool judgment and common sense.

The statement that "No man has ever seen God; no man ever will see God," coming from the lips of an entranced medium should by all the rules of reasoning arouse no greater opposition to the control, than the assertion made on a subsequent occasion through the same medium that "the church is the damnedest institution on the face of the earth," yet he was not struck dumb for saying this!

The lecture one Sunday morning (perhaps Easter) was especially directed against the churches, with no bad effects upon either the controlling spirit or the medium that were apparent. Then why should a collapse of the speaker, on a day when he was physically in bad condition, be credited to the efforts of an enemy?

I followed Mr. Wright with spirit messages each Sunday morning during his last engagement with the First Association of this city—seven Sundays, I believe—and at no time were the conditions unfavorable for my work except just after Mr. Wright's collapse on the platform and its inevitable exciting influence over the audience, which was very soon overcome.

Had the room been so filled with Catholic spirits at that time and immediately afterward, would they not have interfered with my work and that of Mrs. Lees who followed me?

Is it not more reasonable to suppose the condition described was of a purely subjective nature, and that perhaps the "priest" working "in harmony with" her guides was able, through some process known to spirit, to throw before her clairvoyant sight the panorama delineated, and also to surround her with the same influence during the following week?

A mirage appears before us in a desert, deluding the sense of vision, but we, knowing the nature of this phenomenon, are not deceived by it nor lured into danger by its charming illusions. In our opinion the folderol under the banner of a Catholic priest, thrown into the field of vision of a sensitive was simply a mirage, and could have had no effect whatever, either good or bad, upon the work of a medium so fully protected by spirit helpers as is J. Clegg Wright.

While we should "give the devil his due," let us not credit opposing influences with the power to undermine all the beautiful temples of truth erected by the hosts of spirit guides for the ennobling of humanity.

ELLA ROYAL WILLIAMS.
Washington, D. C.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By W. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

"Ad Leones!"

"Ad leones, ad leones!" fierce and wild the vengeful cry
O'er the little band of martyrs who for their belief must die.
Eager, hard and pitiless faces throng the wide arena round,
And the vaulted dome above them thrills and shudders back the sound.
"Ad leones; kill and spare not." Savage head and hooded claw
Rend the helpless captive Christians by the will of Roman law,
And the blue smiles calm above them as their last faint prayers arise
Clear, untroubled by the anguish in the Christian's dying eyes.
Golden sand blurs wet with crimson. Fled is sense, and sound and breath.
"Habet," and the show is over of the carnival of death.

"To the lions, to the lions!" Still the cruel cry goes on
For the hero who would usher in the new and glorious dawn.
Still the man-hate and the blood-lust lives, and urges on its slaves
Craving yet the feast of slaughter, filling the unnumbered graves.
"To the lions; kill and spare not!" Stifle out Progression's breath!
We must feed old superstition in a carnival of death.
Stab and strike in newer fashion at the little hero bands
That would lay the cross of knowledge in our unbelieving hands.
Slay in slower, colder manner all whose eyes (where ours are dim)
See beyond the ancient heaven peopled thick with cherubim.

To the lions, to the lions, cast the foolish dreamer down!
We believe in harps of heaven, golden throne and jeweled crown,
We believe the Great Jehovah, God of strife and King of war
Curses in His lonely greatness at a dreadful judgment bar.
We believe a hell of horror for our kindred, wife or friend,
Where the unbelieving sinner writhes in torments without end.
To the lions with the dreamer, crazed by blasphemy, untold
Who refuses to acknowledge hell's despair or heaven's gold.
Who dares say the unfleshed spirit lingers still to bless and cheer
And no dreadful gulf of darkness yawns for those we once held dear.

To the lions of the world's wrath fling the earnest helping horde.
They have laid a rose of gladness on the edge of Terror's sword,
Shook the prison doors wide open, drawn the veil and burst the chain,
Let them meet their fate, who labor for the world's most glorious gain.
On the pain and stress of heroes true Progression builds her home
In this Christian century's tortures—on the savagery of Rome.
Every day or hour of anguish changes to enduring rock
Which shall rear Truth's sacred altar far above the tempest's shock.
Let the noble strife go onward. Set the standard firm and high.
To the lions? Aye, the lions—if for truth we fight and die.

ESOTERIC AND SPIRITUAL NOTES

Of the St. Louis Exposition, From Our Own Correspondent.

"Some power is bringing all nations together."

Whatever one may believe has brought him to St. Louis, whether business, or education, or philanthropy, or if he lives here, it very soon dawns upon him that only one thing is here and that is the exposition. The one thing, however, soon resolves itself into many parts, and one is able after a little to discover the real thing or things, thoughts or experiences that he came for.

That the St. Louis Exposition is a culmination of many similar events, commencing with a culmination at Chicago in 1893, no one can fairly deny. That it is greater in many ways, it is also futile to deny. That its defects are very obvious, the most casual observer can see—but one must bend in homage before the beauty, the grandeur of the scheme, and the ideal conception of the complete plan of the exposition.

It is beautiful, it is as a whole, sublime.

The faults are there is too much space, and while the important exhibiting buildings are most artistically grouped around a center of splendor, many almost equally important things are miles from each other and from the common center. Not easily reached even by the encircling intermural railroad. The other fault, growing out of the first is the unfinished condition of many parts of the ground, leaving bare places, muddy streets and walks, and general discomfort, especially among the state buildings and the Philippine and Indian reservations; only years could perfect the grounds.

However, one comes to see the beauties, not the defects. And one who has "eyes for beauty" instead of "eyes for blemish" is delighted at every turn.

The park in which the exposition is held was and is one of the finest in the United States, over 1,200 acres of this "Forest Park" (twice the extent of Chicago exposition) were devastated of the trees—trees planted by nature and man—many of them of 30 and 40 years' growth, to give place for the exposition. Shall we ever forgive this massacre of trees?

The scenery, small hills, vales, streams, plateaus, was such as could easily be adapted to most artistic effects. And although there is no ever-delightful Lake Michigan here from which to supply the lagoons and grand marine effects, still the lakes and lagoons here are very beautiful. The arrangement of the grounds, the St. Louis Plaza being the main approach, places the large exhibition buildings along three main plazas—these are intersected by suitable avenues; the whole converging around the lagoons, cascades, and gradual steps adorned on either side by most magnificent groups of statuary, crowned at last by Festival Hall, situated on an eminence, in which is the large organ. The approach to this is sublime. The view from it most beautiful and varied.

The state and national buildings are grouped in a way that complete the plan without interfering with the main purposes of the scheme.

The "Pike" (the Midway of the exposition) is a part of the general exposition plan and is under the management, or rather surveillance of the administration of the exposition. The entrance to it is near the main entrance. It is not so "naughty" as the Midway, but it is very attractive. These outsider "concessions" are remarkable for their artistic conception, the extent of ground occupied by them and the wonderful mechanical effects in producing scenic verities that charm one into travel in the many lands visited.

But why elaborate?

The exposition is a most wonderful conception, carried out on the whole with great and perfect fidelity to the conception itself. The president, D. R. Francis, is a remarkable man; to use the hackneyed and not altogether agreeable phrase, "a self-made man," and like another man by that name in Chicago (J. R. Francis) he never fails in what he undertakes.

If I were making a word picture of the scenes and effects in and around this fairy or dream city, I would write of the monoliths, towers, statuary, domes, of the clouds, trees, sunset glories, storm pictures, moonlight glories, and of the shifting, ever-changing light and shade, sunshine and storm—but no time is within the scope of this letter or others that are to follow, to do this.

There are three things that your correspondent will take up in the order mentioned, viz.: 1. The spiritual aspect and outlook of the exposition and in St. Louis because of its presence here;

2. The Indians; their schools under U. S. Government; their future, and some of the other "wards of the nation" and their probable future;

3. Esoteric matters and matters fraternal and educational.

This must be my outline although one is always tempted to digress, and one is privileged to wander a little into unexpected paths and grottoes of thought.

Until the next, Y. O. C.
Exposition Grounds, St. Louis, Mo.

MEDIUMS, ETC.

A Few Words From the N. S. A. Headquarters on Mediumship.

To the Editor:—In some quarters the misleading idea has been set afloat that the N. S. A. trustees, as a body, and personally, are not friendly to mediums or mediumship; such an idea is entirely erroneous, for I venture to say that every member of this board is a friend to mediumship of every phase and manifestation. However, there are those among us who have strong thoughts against whatever is given forth in the guise of mediumship that is not of the honest and correct stamp; perhaps these friends have expressed their opinions rather strenuously, but I know beyond doubt that the majority of our trustees—your secretary included—would far rather err on the side of the medium, than to hastily condemn anyone.

These remarks are occasioned by words recently written to our honored treasurer, Mr. T. J. Mayer, whose manly article against favoring the formation of a board of censors to investigate mediums, recently appeared in the spiritual papers; the words to him, referred to, are from the pen of a true and prominent Spiritualist, who expressed commendation of the article of Brother Mayer, and is "pleased that at least one officer of the N. S. A. is a stalwart defender of mediums." We recognize mediumship as the bed-rock of Spiritualism; without it, our cause would lose all value, therefore it is nonsense to charge the N. S. A. officers as against mediumship. On the other hand, we detest fraud in our ranks, as all Spiritualists must do.

But have we not too much cry of "Fraud" and "Fakes"? Would not an unbeliever be prone to consider that we have no faith in our own claims in regard to what Spiritualism brings to the world? One would surely think that all mediums are false and untrue to spiritual truth, to read some of the accusations against the practice of mediumship, which are made by some prominent Spiritualists. We are giving in some directions, a great prominence to tricksters, and ignoring the thousands of honest mediums who have made Spiritualism an honor and a revelation of "glad tidings" in the world.

On the one hand, we are told by those who are after the frauds, that they will not rest till platform mediums are driven out of the work that tempts to fraudulent practices; on the other, our old time and present day mediums who are honest in their work, affirm that the fraud cry is causing them, and all self-respecting mediums to shrink from the exercise of their spiritual gifts at any time. A true medium does not like to feel that he is considered a trickster who must be watched at all times, and we know that there are thousands of true and unselfish mediums in the ranks of Spiritualism. Therefore, Mr. Editor, it does seem as if something might be said in favor of the true and good mediums, and less of the false deceivers.

Brother Mayer's article has the true ring. I had the pleasure of reading it before it went to press, and I endorse every word of it; so will others of our board. We do not want to be censors over mediums, and we do want our mediums, however humble or high in the work, to feel that they are free to go on with their good work for the blessing of mankind. Of course people who are ever ready to run after every sensational fakir who comes along, must expect to be tricked, but a few such experiences should teach them where to look for better things. We do not want our mediums to be driven from the field. All honor to them for their good work for humanity; we love them and the glorious light and comfort and instruction they bring from on high.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

THE WIDOW'S MITE,

AND

OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide repute, making a volume of great value. 538 octavo pages. Price, cloth. $2.

A Poser Sure Enough.

A dramatic writer in New York says it is claimed our present advanced civilization has been reached through Christianity. He adds, in substance:

"The Japanese have taken from our civilization only scientific treasures. They show an advanced civilization in which Christianity has played no part. It took only fifty years to advance Japan from a state of semi-barbarism to her present proud eminence; because there were no Christian obstructionists to throw obstacles in the path of progress, as has been the practice of ecclesiasticism from its very inception."

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

A Revelation of Healing Power.

An Interesting Account By Thomas H. B. Cotton.

(Conclusion.)

And the last but not the least of those that have troubled her is now withdrawn! She was one on the earth plane that desired to be a singer, a musician away beyond herself, or in other words she was stage struck. She was not obsessed, but she had an exalted opinion of her own powers; the gift of music that was given her. She had a more exalted opinion of her own views than mortal friends had of her. She passed out of life in that condition. She met that medium, who by that power has suffered much and suffered long. Taking her at the piano when singing (she had a sweet voice), she took and handled her very successfully, as an uneducated, earth-bound spirit. And when she said she was going to get her robes ready, to be married, that was the first impression of her friend that she was insane. This spirit would whisper in her ear, "He is no mate of thine; you are to be the wife of the great Mozart." She prepared that robe. That was the first that made her friends believe that she was really insane. Then those that were spiritual people themselves, could not do away with that one thought, and all believed she was insane on this subject. But it was because an insane spirit has partially obsessed her so long.

Her brother and husband and family would not look upon it (because they desired not to see it), in that light. That spirit has left her. She has been with our people and felt generally better through the week. The spirit has taken quite a fancy to this gentleman (Mr. Johnson). A girl of rather low degree. She came to Mr. Johnson a week ago bearing a bridal wreath. She was on the steps.

Mrs. Gunn: Can you get her name?

Mr. Johnson: Alice.

Mrs. Smith: She has been out of the earth-life and the old existence three years.

Johnson: Where did she pass out?

Mrs. Smith: She says "east of here." She was like a great many girls that were stage-struck. The growing opinion of her great ability; she was brought here the other night, and she went and stood by him. She thinks she has found a good test subject; another subject, but she thinks he won't be easily handled.

Mrs. Smith, continuing: For a while I could not concentrate with the mediums. My eyes were looking down here at the carpet. I raised my eyes but the eyelids dropped over them. I saw two slates written just as full as they could be written. I could not tell you a word that they contained, however. A new force comes here to-night to help you. Greater numbers also come in from near the earth-plane; not with a mischievous intent, but with a desire to benefit and learn. A larger number are here now than on any previous occasion.

Mrs. Gunn spoke under control, in response to an implied question of mine concerning the office and mission of guardian spirits, saying in part as follows: The time is to come on this planet, as it has on certain others, when the soul will alone formulate its own physical body for the plane which it shall be upon at that time. It is not necessary for that soul to come back to mortality; for the human to go back into the granite again. He has had that experience. He has now to gather to himself the atoms for the new existence. You are living now as a mortal; but there is but very little difference between the lowest manhood and the highest animal. The man in some respects is in more perfect equilibrium, and when we speak of man, we mean both man and woman.

At present the soul has to come through the father and mother principle, in order to clothe his spirit body with a fleshly covering. When he has planted his feet in matter, so to speak, and has gained the strength he needs from matter—and this may only take months, or it may take years of time—he then is taken to the spirit realm that surrounds your earth. Here a great change takes place; where expectation, hope and faith is the rule on the planet. In spirit life he becomes conscious of the positive current from the spiritual sun toward which he is journeying. When he becomes so strongly charged with this finer force, he outgrows the condition he is in and must take a step higher. But a time must come when he will reach the limit of the earth environment, the seventh sphere it is called by some spirits. But there are other planets to become acquainted with, to thoroughly understand, not as a visitor but as a resident. Don't for a moment think he must have as coarse a body on the other planets, as the earth requires; for such is not the case. After he has become acquainted with your solar system, there yet remains the sun, but best of all, the source from which the whole constellation receives its light; the spiritual or soul mate of the orb of day. The grand spiritual center of your universe; but not of the whole universe. Here he learns how to build worlds in their entirety. Now he can travel on the wings of light that cross great magnetic waves of ether, to other solar systems, and his journey is only just begun.

But to go back to where we commenced with this subject: If he is an intelligent person, on entering the spirit world, he may be permitted to look back over the road he has traveled. In doing so he finds he has made many journeys from spirit to matter. He finds he has never lost his identity; it is when he is in the lower condition that he is not conscious of his own consciousness. "He is asleep in the mineral, dreams in the animal and awakes in man." And it is plain to be seen that the animal longs for a continuous life, an identity, a greater intelligence. You watch a pet animal's eyes, and at times you will see it is thinking and is trying to read your thoughts. You cannot measure its capacity of thought because it has no language to express it. Do you ever wonder why the whole world is looking for happiness? Simply because when on the awful road of Evolution, as your spirit has come in touch with the central suns to which you were attracted on being released from matter, you will find there you have known perfect unalloyed happiness; and as you cannot imagine anything that does not exist somewhere, so could you not imagine perfect happiness had you not experienced it sometime and somewhere.

And then the spirit or soul travels back and forth from spirit to matter, one endless chain of experiences. It will ever be so. You have been back and forth many times. But in the future, matter will never chain you again. You will be master, not slave. I go; good night.

I then asked, "Who is it that speaks?" The response came "One who knows."

Adjourned to Tuesday night, February 8, 1898.

In a general conversation previous to the hour of 8, I suggested what a desperate piece of tyranny it is that no communication is allowed between Mrs. Wimble in the asylum and her friends outside, through the legitimate channel of the mail. Mrs. Gunn seemed instantly to take up the thought by way of adverse criticism. She was disposed for the nonce to justify the husband of Mrs. Wimble on the ground that he is doing from his standpoint precisely what she would be disposed to do under similar circumstances were she in his place. Catholics, for instance, are the uncompromising foes of Spiritualism and mediumship. Mrs. Gunn's idea is that were her dearest relative to leave her at regular stated intervals and go off and attend Catholic service and gatherings, and she was forced to see that he was being led into the meshes of Catholicism, she would be disposed to protest with all the means at her command, just as Mr. Wimble is now doing.

Mrs. Smith's guides then took up the thread of the argument, vigorously objecting to Mrs. Gunn's favorite maxim, that "we are all just as good as we can be under the circumstances," declaring that that husband was conceited in the last degree, and proceeding without the least regard to justice, ready to sacrifice every other motive, merely to carry out his own purpose. She further declared that the spirit world are going to see that he is brought low in the scale of prosperity and made to suffer the very woes and pangs best calculated to show him the absurdity of his present course. At the close of this spirited though perfectly friendly argument, I suggested that perhaps the cause of truth might be better subserved by substituting the phrase "as good as we permit ourselves to be," instead of "as good as we can be."

We then proceeded with the concentration as usual. After the fifteen minutes were past, Mrs. Gunn reported entire failure to see anything at all. This was the first such report from her in all the meetings. Mrs. Smith also brought the same report, from her being very tired on account of moving and extra exertion during the day, and also from recent illness; (to-night's meeting being held in Mr. Smith's new quarters at 562 11th street). Mr. Johnson had severe headache and could not help in any way except to merely hold the mind steady.

No one had seen Mr. Wimble during the past week. Mrs. Gunn was still anxious to find his address with a view to meeting him and making a general inquiry as to his wife's condition. The guides of Mrs. Gunn informed us, "the reason that there has not been apparent success to-night is because you are all out of vibration. One is vibrating slowly and another quickly. Secondly, we have refrained from sending her out to-night (meaning Mrs. Gunn), it being better for the folks to sit quietly and do good in another way."

I had been very anxious to know more definitely the meaning of a phrase used by an ancient in control of Mrs. Gunn at the previous meeting, and intimated as much about this time. The phrase ("back and forth") related to the visit of the spirit in the course of future changes as it left one body to be clothed with another. It passes each time to the great center or spiritual sun of our system, and after remaining for a time, passes into a new body suited to its existing status; then by the process being repeated on an entirely higher plane of advancement, it once more passes to the great spiritual sun, and later, back again to take a new form or body, and so on, "back and forth, back and forth." This guide to-night, kindly began by explaining as follows: You must recognize that there are centers and centers. You recognize that the sun is the center of this constellation. But you must further recognize that there are other suns and stars which are both visible and invisible to your eyes that do not revolve around your center. So also there are spirit suns that accompany every material sun on its starry journey through space. Each time the earth makes a revolution around the sun, it fills a different space; for the sun is circling around another material sun and carrying its family of planets with it. When this revolution around the sun is made, it leaves a pathway behind it; this being in a round form, in time becomes spiral. Within each spiral swing there is a center. These centers are the changing places, where the spirit of things on this earth changes form. Therefore there are centers and centers. As the earth becomes more spiritualized, these spiral rings become more perfect. This is the place where mineral changes form; that is, the rings nearest the earth. But as these rings become numerous they congeal, contract, come together and form a nebula, unseen by any mortal eye; nor has any instrument ever been made that these nebulae could be discovered. Hrere is a center which for its brightness resembles your sun. Therefore it is called a center sun, by us. On one of these the vegetables, trees and flowers change form to again be drawn back to matter. It may be on this earth and it may be on some other one. But in time spirit calls again and this time it goes to another of these centers, again to change, and when matter claims again, this time another kingdom is reached, i. e., the animal. But nature is not yet satisfied; the production is not yet completed. This is not the highest that can be produced by spirit. So she gives it back to the spiral for transformation, and this time man is the representative of the work of spirit. If the change takes places on the ring which the sun has more lately thrown off, a man is produced which is but a step higher than his predecessors, namely the animal. But if the animal has been like your deer of the forest and many of the feathered tribe, it is drawn much further out, and a more perfect man is produced on the return to matter. These are the two extremes with many degrees between. This is evolution in spirit and matter; always a step higher and better.

Re-embodiment as taught in the past, and by the Theosophists of to-day is only partly true. They think they remember past experiences, when it is only the working of another mind on theirs, that they are entirely en rapport with.

You sometimes wonder why the whole world is wishing for perfect happiness, that is, a happiness that has no sting, regret or remorse connected with it. This is because, when at one of these centers, that condition was perfect, and a feeling of perfect happiness was theirs; that is as much as they were capable of understanding in their existing degree of unfoldment. The central sun which you as a mortal, and we as a spirit, are hastening to, is not one of these rings; we have passed through them; it is the soul mate, the spirit sun of your grand orb of day that we must sometime reach. Do we change form then? I do not know. But there are many steps that we must rest upon before we reach that orb where unalloyed happness is ours again. There are the spheres surrounding this planet. Then comes Mars. We must become thoroughly acquainted with this red, fiery planet. Then Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune. Then the physical sun. Then comes the one we all long for, its spirit mate. We could write a whole volume on this subject and then have hardly begun. But we must wait until you are a spirit; then we will be pleased to show you all you wish to know, make it one grand object lesson. But remember, you will experience great happiness in spirit life before you reach the spirit sun. Great pleasure and joy will attend you on your journey. However not what it will be when you reach the long-looked-for goal of your spirit ambition.

Wild Flower (Mrs. Smith's guide): All the little folks in town seem to be here to-night. I guess to-night my medium is pretty tired. I's goin' to tell her the big white man chief wants Wild Flower—not White Wild Flower me say. (Suggestion: Wild Flower doesn't like the new quarters.)

W. F.: Yes, she does, too. I like the garden and the flowers. We've got to be just as well satisfied as we can be, where our medium's got to live. Here's my little girl. She has the sweetest face! She is a very cute little girl. That is the word I got from the white folks in the earth life. A very cute little girl. Sometimes she talks just like a little babe, though she's nearly 8 years old. She went out of life before she ever knew what life was in the earth plane. If she was on earth to-day, she would be almost 9 years old. Now, good white folks, we'll try with all our might to heal that sick lady; to heal her there, all the while. (A suggestion: We have got to keep ourselves in good condition.) W. F.: There is a big company besides ours at that work. They come here as visitors, and go there as visitors. Much gets done by them, and through their aid. There are three bands. Our circle is one, and our spirit band who are with us, and then a band stationed there.

Wild Flower, continuing, (to Mrs. Gunn,): That husband is not so good a man as you represent him to be.

Mrs. G. replied, contending that it is best to say to all, we, or otherwise they, are just as good as they can be. Then followed a spirited, though friendly contention, for the triumph of opposing thought, namely, whether to cling desperately to the idealistic view of human nature in all cases, would not be better for the uplifting to a higher plane; or to be ready, when gross wrong is being perpetrated, to say to the offender, "you are living far beneath your privileges, and laying up for yourself a store of punishment, an experience that will cost you dearly by and by."

After this, Mrs. Smith's guides spoke in part as follows: Evil spirits are forever at work to prevent our success. A man, after many different defeats, secures a position. He knows he is capable of doing justice there, and of right should hold that position for a long time; but for some mysterious reason, is unable to satisfy that man, and off goes his head before he knows it He doesn't know why. He can't see the spirits that hold him. He says to himself, "there is a way out of it. There is no use talking." You are just as capable of holding that position as any man. You will shake off all this terrible spell and raise yourself up out of such a condition and the influence of these foolish thoughts." But all unknown to you, that force of evil spirits bring to bear their mischievous intent and away goes all your good resolutions. And thus goes his wit: In this case as in any other of the kind, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Those evil spirits can be overcome and put out of the way.

Mrs. Gunn: My work is done; she will come out. My work is ended.

Tuesday, February 15, 1898. Present, Mr. and Mrs. Smith and the writer. Absent, Mr. and Mrs. Gunn and Mr. Johnson.

After a little preliminary talk, it was decided to concentrate for a little while in the usual manner, in behalf of the patient.

Mrs. Smith very soon began speaking as if in conversation with the invisibles: "Has he been here before?"

Spirit: Did you think that because you were alone we would not be here? She has been in the habit of coming here every Tuesday. She would be attracted by you here, as much as if they were present. Mrs. Gunn's guides or controls are perfectly ready and willing to do all they can for them. They now have a different control than they have had.

We bring her first here to you, because it is the desire to aid her personally. She is attracted to you and your present home also, and spirit friends that come round about you. Our own friends are much pleased with you and your desire to do good to others, and though you oppose in a measure, the conflict is nothing that will be of a harmful nature, or that would prevent their meeting.

Your little Indian girl is to be a strong control for you. We greet you as a spirit. We are greeting you as we have greeted you many times before. We come to-night from Mrs. Wimble, and from the homes of those we have been in the habit of meeting with you. I am the one asked to take charge of Mrs. Wimble, in that circle. We are much pleased with the progress of the work that is being done, with the spiritual welfare of Spiritualists and Spiritualism. This will be a great work. Though by the world it may not be acknowledged as a spiritual healing. Mrs. Wimble, spiritually is much better. Physically, about the same, and we now take control for the time and protect her, directing all things well for the lonesome one. The spirit world doth stand round about her.

Here is a box as precious as that in ancient times, used in anointing the feet, to anoint thy head. That box, as a gift comes from the Higher, the Better Land. It is a peace which passeth all understanding. A peace and balm, more precious than the box that was broken in twain to anoint the feet, or pour upon the head. Similar words of cordial blessing were also spoken to Mr. Smith.

As to the patient, a new day of hope has been imparted to her brain. And those that we helped on former occasions, they, too, have the light, and return to us again. A messenger has just come within our midst. He comes from her and reports her reposing for the night. We bring back this message with a greeting to all. She is resting. She is happy with a new found joy, a bright light.

We thank you, friends. The spirit world wishes to give you their blessing again, and through these for this one (meaning Mrs. Smith). She seems to be as one who has fulfilled a mission, and fulfilled it well. To thee, O brother (addressing the writer), a peace, a light of another world is dawning for thee, spiritually. Thou shalt see. Look aloft and see those beautiful lights. Whatever thy fate may be, weary and sore, we will comfort the heart. We will bring to thy sight new gifts, new glories and new delights. Be hopeful, persevering, cheerful, and keep thyself well; for a work there is, and a work to be done, ere we call thee hence to dwell with the loved ones gone before, who are waiting at the portals for thee. So be careful, brother, and be cheerful as you can; for much is dependent upon the condition of man, and the man.

Tuesday, February 22, 1898. Present, same three as at last meeting; Mr. and Mrs. Smith and T. H. B. Cotton. The exercises began with the singing of two stanzas of "Home of the Soul." During that singing Mrs. Smith saw what she denominated the prettiest sight she ever saw. It was two horse-shoes, each some twelve inches in diameter, having all the colors of the rainbow. These were leaning against, or touching one another at the apex or "toe." Each was a solid wreath of flowers of indescribable delicacy and beauty, with all the colors, shining in dazzling brightness. This was interpreted to indicate good luck combined with happiness, and tender love bestowed by our guides. They further told us that we should have good news, a double portion, before our next meeting. Concentration then began, and continued somewhat beyond the usual 15 minutes. During this time Mrs. Smith engaged the spirit friends, with invocations and thanksgivings on behalf of the circle. In this the blessings of the angel world were showered upon members of the circle, both present and absent, (the causes of absence being unknown to us), but especially upon the tried and true who have been faithful, never missing a night. The interest of the spirit world goes on increasing in this matter; and if only temporary respite from the terrible monotony can be afforded that patient, once a week, our work is not in vain. But she is still growing freer mentally. While physically she is about the same. She came again as usual into our circle and a sense of relief, indescribably sweet, took possession of her as it always does. She still wonders why it is that on Tuesday night, she has these blessed seasons of rest; and why they come on no other night except Tuesday. She says, "Can't you aid me some other evenings as well?" Yes, my friends, you can, and I trust you will. Myriads and myriads of spirits are assembled to witness this Tuesday night work, each week.

Tuesday night, March 1, 1898. Present same three members as in last meeting.

That good news prophesied, came on Friday, the 25th ult. It was to the effect that Mrs. Wimble had been sent home on leave of absence, nearly a month previously! This was of course the occasion of great rejoicing of the members of our circle. The letter conveying the news reached me between 1 and 2 p. m. on that day. I hastened to see Mrs. Smith, in order to advise with the guides, inasmuch as it seemed very desirable that Mrs. Wimble should be seen before she completed her visit (in case she might possibly return to the asylum). The guides thought well of the plan to visit Mrs. Knott and inform her of the good news. This was done before 3 o'clock, and Mrs. Knott promised to visit Mrs. Wimble at the earliest possible time. This appeared this very Tuesday evening. She came, however, the same evening to tell us the visit was fruitless of results, except to obtain information that Mrs. Wimble is with her husband at Port Costa, a railroad station some distance away from Oakland, and no immediate prospect of seeing her. However, she also brought the information that the patient is physically well, and very happy.

The guides gave us to understand that the reason we had not been informed by them of her release, was that we would not have been likely to be so assiduous in our work of concentration as we were without the information. It was not because they had not known it. On the contrary they knew it well. After a season of invocation and thanks giving, long, deep and pathetic the guides let us know that they regard the event of Mrs. Wimbles release as a very great triumph of diligence and faithfulness on the part of the members of the circle, both present and absent; that the medium Mrs. Smith had been especially, severely taxed, and that two weeks' rest would now be in order; and not to call up any of this work until the 15th, or two weeks from to-night. The medium's health, physically, being still delicate, she was so weary from the effect of recent work, moving, etc.

With this evening, the guides say, closes volume I. of this mission work. THOMAS H. B. COTTON,

The Work Goes Bravely On!

In the July number of "Success" may be seen a portrait of the Rev. Hensley Henson, canon of Westminster Abbey, and under it, the following notice of his recent article:

"Canon Henson, known in this country as a theologian of radical tendencies, has just published an article on "The Future of the Bible" which has startled the world. He holds that the Bible contains many glaring faults and incongruities which are being discovered by parishioners, with the result that contempt is taking the place of respect. He claims that a drastic revision of the Sacred Volume is necessary, so that the Christian compositions which have been universally accepted may supplant what to his mind are 'the incredible, puerile, or demoralizing narratives which the Old Testament contains.' Canon Henson does not attack the Bible in any way, but he very frankly declares that something must be done to change the ecclesiastical abuses, errors in doctrine, and blunders in policy, which suggest to the masses that Christianity is false."

And so, Rev. Henson is finally forced to acknowledge that "the Bible contains many glaring faults and incongruities," which he no doubt would not have acknowledged had it not been for the fact that he has discovered that those "glaring faults and incongruities" are being "DISCOVERED BY PARISHIONERS" and "with the result that contempt is taking the place of respect" for the Bible. As long as those "glaring faults and incongruities" were known only to the clergy, it was all right and things moved along smoothly. But now, since the "parishioners" have discovered them, "something must be done." And it is a question how much longer those "parishioners" would have been delayed in their discovery, had it not been for the fearless, independent, progressive thinkers outside the church, who have forced upon it what is known as the "Higher Crilticism."

It is amusing to notice the attempt at an apology for Rev. Henson's position, as contained in the above notice of it. The writer says: "Canon Henson does not attack the Bible in any way," etc. Oh, no! He does not attack the Bible at all. He merely says that "it contains many glaring faults and incongruities, and incredible, puerile, or demoralizing narratives." If this is not attacking the Bible, for heaven's sake what is it? If this is not attacking the Bible, why should it "startle the world" as the writer asserts it has done?

Bosh! If The Progressive Thinker or any other publication independent of old orthodox theology, had given utterance to the same views, our orthodox friends would have considered it verily, an "attack on the Bible," would have "considered its source," and given it a wide berth. But coming from a high dignitary of the orthodox church, Canon Henson's utterances must not be considered an "attack on the Bible." Bah! H. V. SWERINGEN.

THE OTHER SIDE OF JORDAN.

Oh, the other side o' Jordan may be bright as bright kin be,
But I ain't a-faultin' this old world; she's bright enough fer me!
You've got to be a swimmer when you strike that Jasper Sea,
Yonder, on the other side o' Jordan!

I make no doubt the country is a country out o' sight,
With all them fields o' livin' green an' rivers o' delight;
But I jest ain't in no hurry fer to rise an' take my flight
Yonder, on the other side o' Jordan!

I know the time they're havin' in the sweet old bye-an'-bye,
Must set the stars to dancin' in the blue bend o' the sky;
But I'm jest no good at flyin'—an' a angel's got to fly
Yonder, on the other side o' Jordan!

Oh, no matter what the trouble, an' no matter where I roam,
This world to me is sweeter than the sweetest honeycomb,
An' I never shall resign it till they holler, "Come on home!"
Yonder, on the other side o' Jordan!

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

They should be heard in every home in the land. For sale at this office. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Captain Geo. W. Walrond, the veteran lecturer and clairvoyant, has returned from a two months' vacation in the East where he went for the benefit of his health. He has recently recovered from another attack of complete nervous prostration. The doctors anticipated that paralysis had set in, but with careful watchfulness and much attention this fatal disease was checked. Mr. Walrond is again back at his offices, 1512 Glenarm street, Denver, Colo., and will be glad to hear from his thousands of clients in every state in the Union. He also proposes to resume his Spiritualistic lectures and test work the first of September.

Dr. J. M. Cowan writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "The premium books have been received. Many thanks for your kindness. The one book, 'A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands,' is worth three times the price paid for the three."

Aurin F. Hill writes from Boston, Mass.: "I hope Dr. J. M. Peebles may be moved to publish facts about spirit obsession. Such evidence as he has collected should be placed among the people. I am sure medical men as a class, formerly of colleges, are ignorant about the subject of human minds and their power after leaving a body at the revolution called death. Spiritism is established in the minds of millions of people. Tell the old teacher to strike a blow on the subject of spirit obsession, or obsession by spirits."

L. M. Cobb writes from Norwich Ct.: "The Spiritualists of this city and Willimantic held a picnic at Ravine Park, June 28. About 2 o'clock the meeting commenced with singing. Charles A. Dowsett of this city presided at the piano. George W. Burnham of Willimantic presided over the meeting. He is one of the old pioneers of Spiritualism and is very bright and active although 83 years of age. Mrs. Effie I. Webster came from Montpelier, Vt., gave an address, then messages from those who had assembled there although unseen to their friends who remained in earth life, all being very satisfactory. At the close of the meeting a vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Webster. All returned home in good spirits, and well pleased with their day's outing. It was informally decided to hold another of these camp-meetings some time in August."

L. H. S. Kingsbury, secretary writes: "Mrs. Irene Smith of Tacoma, Wash., who has been doing some grand work for Spiritualism in Chicago for the past two months, will give her last lecture on Sunday night, July 17, at the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, 378 S. Western avenue. Her subject will be 'The Triumphs of Modern Spiritualism.' This subject is one of Mrs. Smith's masterpieces and will be ably handled. There is no doubt, but a very large attendance will greet her on this occasion. This is the last opportunity to hear this gifted lecturer, and should be taken advantage of by all Spiritualists. There will also be the usual good singing. All welcome. Seats free."

Mrs. Abby L. Pettengill, the president, has completed arrangements for the opening of the Lily Dale Assembly, on July 15. Harrison D. Barrett will act as chairman during the sessions, which will terminate September 4. In addition to the program as previously announced, Rev. Henry Frank of New York will appear on July 16 and 17; Edward C. Randall, a well known Buffalo lawyer, will speak on Mission work on July 22; while Golden Rule Jones, of Toledo, has promised to appear during the course of the season. Peace Day will be held on August 7, and Woman's Day is scheduled for the 17th of that month. A successful season is assured.

New York.—A beautiful young lady, a member of one of the richest and most aristocratic families of Henderson, Ky., married a few years ago and went with her husband to New York City to live. The affection between her and her "old black mammy" was very tender, and the separation was hard to bear. After the young wife had settled in the east she determined to have "mammy" come on to visit her, and sent money for her ticket. Imagine the surprise of the prim New Yorkers when they saw an old colored woman coming through the station gate suddenly pounced upon by an elegantly dressed lady, who threw her arms around the old woman's neck and kissed her time and again. Dropping her bundles, the old woman seated herself on a truck, and drawing the lady upon her lap, tenderly stroked her hair and exclaimed: "My baby; I'se so glad to see you, honey." To her the fine lady was only the little girl whom she had tenderly nursed in sickness and in health and on whom she had lavished all the love of her simple heart. From an exalted spiritual standpoint it was a beautiful scene. To the average mortal it was somewhat disgusting.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Special invitation to the Japanese Lawn Party and Entertainment, given by Mrs. Irene Smith and Mrs. C. Kirchner, for the benefit of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, Saturday Evening, July 16, 1904, at the home of the president, C. Kirchner, 697 W. Madison street. Refreshments will be served. Collection 25 cents. A special program has been arranged for this occasion as it will be the last appearance of Sister Smith before leaving Chicago.

E. J. Bowtell has completed the course of class lessons given in New London, Conn., since last October. He is at liberty for lecture engagements for the season of 1904-5. Address him at Pine Grove, Niantic, Conn.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley did a most excellent work at the Rockford, Illinois, Grove Meeting, and at Rockford. She has more calls to lecture than she can possibly answer. Her tests are always genuine.

Anna E. Baird writes from Elyria, O.: "You are a fearless advocate of truth, and it is a pleasure to know our friends have an opportunity to receive it through the columns of The Progressive Thinker. Long may you prosper and be permitted to continue your noble work to set man free from the slavery of ignorance."

O. Merritt writes: "It is with pleasure I send you a report of our grove meeting at Harlem Park, in Rockford, Ill., on June 24, 25 and 26, under the management of the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Circuit Association. The meeting proved to be a wonderful success both financially and otherwise. Many good workers were present and at the close all felt that a profitable meeting in every sense had been held, and it was arranged to meet at the same place annually and we hope to build a permanent camp at or near this park."

Dr. M. I. Webster writes: "There has been a great spiritual awakening at Lauderdale Springs, Lauderdale, Miss. A camp-meeting has been opened, and lectures, platform tests and psychometric readings are the order of the day. There is also a fine medium on the grounds who gives private readings. Good music charms the listener and lends wings to the feet of the dancers who trip the light fantastic in the pavilion. The hotel accommodates about a hundred and twenty-five guests. The rooms are large and airy and the cuisine is in competent hands. Everything is being done for the comfort and pleasure of the guests. This is one of the most beautiful places in the South, and is the ideal spot for a summer camp-meeting. The mineral waters which flow from the many springs at this place are very healthful and people flock from the surrounding country to drink these waters and regain their health and strength, which quickly returns to them through the balmy air, the inviting shade of the grand old trees which dot the lawn, and last but not least, through the divine healing power which broods over the place and makes itself felt by those who are at all susceptible to the higher influences. These meetings will continue throughout the summer."

G. H. Clark writes from Spokane, Wash.: "Mrs. G. Hawley Clark celebrated her fiftieth birthday, June 28, at our new home, 2329 E. Providence avenue. The society turned out forty strong. The Ladies' Aid, of which she was secretary, gave her three fine presents. All had a very enjoyable time. About $50 worth of presents was received. Many friends from the spirit side of life came to enjoy the occasion. Refreshments were served in the afternoon and evening. Mrs. Frances A. Sheldon returned home on June 28, to get ready for camp-meeting. She will return to our society September 1, to fill a year's engagement. She is the right woman in the right place."

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie writes: "The camp at Lake Brady opened in splendid shape, a perfect day, and a very large attendance. The auditorium was filled at the morning service, and the afternoon found many who could not be seated, save on the outside under the great trees surrounding it. The board of managers, with Mr. Rouse as president, make everyone most comfortable. I am pleasantly situated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. I. B. Mofatt. I have one more Sunday here. Will then be in Chicago for a few days before my next camp work."

Secretary writes: "The Auxiliary of the Students of Nature Society, name Hephzibah, which means 'My delight is in her,' held a meeting at 149 W. Randolph street, in the parlors of Sister and Brother H. Smith, Saturday, July 2. There was a large attendance, mostly orthodox, to witness the Spiritualistic ceremony of baptism of the child of Mr. and Mrs. C. Duwel. The pastor, taking the child, placed it in the mother's arms and said: 'Beautiful as a flower from heaven, this child is to bless your wedded life. May the ministering spirit accompany him as the years go by. On the dear child I strew these petals, symbols of the baptism of heaven, where the flowers never fade. I christen you for this world Carl, and for the heavenly name we will call you the Shepherd's Purse (meaning I offer you my all). The services were appreciated by all present. Mrs. M. Schumacher, pastor and organizer of this new order."

Frank T. Ripley, speaker and platform message medium, goes to Chesterfield (Ind.) camp-meeting, where he is engaged from July 14 to Augst 28. He is now ready to make engagements for winter work. Write all letters after July 14 up to August 28, to Chesterfield, Ind. While at the camp Mr. Ripley will assist in extending the circulation of The Progressive Thinker. Permanent address, Tipton, Ind., P. O. Box 326.

John A. Miller, M. D., writes: "For a new beginner or skeptic, Mediumship and Its Laws is the very best book I know of and for higher thought and wider reading, the Arcana of Spiritualism is the next in order. Allow me to suggest that it would be a great convenience if a number of copies of Mediumship were indexed and cloth bound."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

The following is a list of speakers for the popular Freeville (N. Y.) Camp, which opens July 24: Oscar A. Edgerly, H. W. Richardson, Mrs. C. E. S. Twing, Rev. U. S. Milfurn, Rev. N. F. Ravlin, D. A. Herrick. For full programs address W. W. Kelsey, Courtland, N. Y.

S. M. Tucker writes from Wichita, Kansas: "At the annual convention of the Kansas State Spiritual Association at Topeka, Kansas, on June 6, 1904, Mrs. Minnie Martindale of Wichita, Kans., was duly ordained a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism by the association. Mrs. Martindale is well qualified for the work and is an active worker in the cause of true Spiritualism. She will do good work for the cause. She is now president of our local society."

W. E. Morris, M. D., writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "We are having variety in the extreme on this western coast; theaters of every grade, and speakers on all phases of reform, politically, socially and spiritually, may be heard. Many of the prominent workers in our ranks have headed towards your locality on vacations—Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Gillespie, Mrs. Evans and others. But there are plenty left in the field who are willing and competent to fill the positions left vacant and supply the demands of the intellectually inclined Spiritualists. One of the foremost in the lines is Professor Geo. F. Perkins, of whose work many of your readers are acquainted. He is demonstrating his characteristic loyalty by his very entertaining lectures that are followed by tests of unquestionable value in their vivid description and straightforward character. I have been quite familiar with all phases of spiritual phenomena in Boston and elsewhere and can truly say I have never seen a public worker upon our platform so versatile and competent in all manner of mental demonstrations. He is a whole team and a horse to let, when he turns himself loose to entertain an audience. I am of the poinion that he intends heading towards your city soon, which will certainly be a source of regret to many who have listened, laughed, cried, and thought over his unique method of presenting the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism."

Owingsville, Ky., June 22.—A strange story came to-day from Olatown, Ohio county, Ky. Colonel John W. Hurt and Colonel James Mitchell were on the latter's farm, inspecting the wheat crop when they saw several strange creatures rise from a spot near the center of the field and ascend to the clouds. The creatures are described by Colonel Hurt and Colonel Mitchell as angels as they are popularly pictured. Their backs were of snowy white and their breasts of yellow burnished gold. The feathers of their wings were a glistening black, with snowy tips, and about their heads were hoods of beautiful blue and white. The angels rose slowly and gracefully from the ground and without noise or song or movement of their outspread wings ascended vertically until they were lost in the hazy clouds overhead. Colonel Hurt and Colonel Mitchell are men of unquestioned veracity.

"The Progressive Thinker of Chicago, publishes in its issue of the current week, under the caption of 'Brilliant Thought Scintillations,' an article from the pen of Henry Morrison Tefft of Norwich. The Progressive Thinker, as its name indicates, circulates among advanced liberal and scientific people throughout the United States and foreign countries.—Norwich (Ct.) Sun.

Irene Gay writes from Willoughby, Ohio: "Mrs. Carrie Firth-Curran gave a very instructive and interesting lecture at College Hall, Willoughby, Ohio, June 24. A large audience was present, many church members attending. At the close of the lecture an old Baptist exclaimed, 'I supposed Spiritualists repudiated the Bible entirely, but that is a mistake. I am going up and talk with that lady. She has given me a new understanding of the book,' and he started for the rostrum. The lecture created quite a stir among orthodox people, it being the first some of them had ever heard."

Emily E. Philp writes of the Englewood Spiritual Union: "We still hold Sunday meetings, but only in the evenings. We have given up the conference meetings Sunday afternoons till September, when Mr. Moore will be with us again. The Ladies' Auxiliary still continues its meetings."

H. L. Chapman writes from Marcellus, Mich.: "I would say a few words in regard to our Marcellus society as it may be a pointer to other societies. Not being able to hire a hall we have been holding meetings at the homes of different members in the vicinity, and with good success, having added eight new names to our list of members at our last two monthly meetings. Our next meeting will be at the home of the writer in Marcellus, Sunday, August 7. Our last was July 3, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Rudd, near Penn, Mich. After a business meeting, the contents of many baskets were spread upon tables on the lawn under the broad-spreading branches of a grand old elm tree, and all enjoyed the social visit and the many good things for the dinner hour. After dinner, services were opened by singing, then followed a lecture touching on the phenomena of nature, showing the spiritual phenomena to be but a part of nature's phenomena. A few clairvoyant descriptions by a Mr. Comstock, who is developing for this phase of phenomonea, followed. Then a poem by my guides was given on subjects from parties not Spiritualists. They were 'The South Winds,' 'Prudence,' 'Charity,' and 'Chilly Nights.' These were woven into a poem beginning with the darkness before day of an early spring morning when no sound was heard save the water as it rushed over the dam at the mill; then with the first ray of light came the piping voices of birds, and as the sunlight was about to break forth came the warm south winds expanding the buds of shrub and tree, and quickening all nature into new life; the charity of the south winds touching alike the high and the low until all earth seemed wrapped in beauty unlike the so-called charity of the millionaire who gives for his own praise that which has been wrung from the hard earnings of the many poor. True charity consists of the little things of life, the kind acts, the forgiving and helpful thoughts and deeds that reach out like the soft winds to the toiling masses until they send back a wealth of love, and Prudence bids seek these conditions and build for ourselves a place in the hearts of the people ere the chilly nights of old age shall reach us; for the chilly night with its frost may come and the flowers and leaves droop and wither, yet nature rebuilds and renews; and let us not forget that acting prudently, with charity for all, that when the frosty night of death shall come, the infinite laws of nature will bear us onward to that land where the balmy breezes of the south wind of true love and joy shall touch and quicken every soul."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Harry J. Moore is now spending a few weeks' vacation in his summer cottage on Camp Chesterfield, Ind. His camp meeting engagements are as follows: Lake Brady, Ohio, Sunday, July 31; Chesterfield, Ind., Saturday and Sunday, August 6 and 7; Clinton, Iowa, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 12, 13 and 14; Snowflake, Mich., from Aug. 16 to 22, and at Waterloo, Iowa from Aug. 23 to 31. Mr. Moore again serves the Englewood Spiritual Union, Chicago, during the month of September. Any mail addressed to Mr. Moore in care of this office will be forwarded to him wherever he may be.

Mrs. LeSieur writes: "The fifth benefit Band of Harmony sociable was at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, Thursday, July 7. It was the most unique affair of the series. The china hand-painted lemonade pitcher was drawn by Mrs. Bent, and the Surprise we were looking for was a mammoth pie, and every one present drew a prize (no blanks). The entire programme was a continual surprise from start to finish. Our next meeting will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tressness, 379 N. 51st Court, Thursday, July 21. The Lake street surface cars transfer at 48th avenue; on Chicago avenue, ride to 51st Court, then north to the above number. All interested friends welcome."

Will C. Hodge is now located at 1373 Tenth avenue, Oakland, Cal. The climate of California attracts him, and we are fearful Chicago will lose him permanently as a citizen. He is capable of doing a grand work on the rostrum.

Louise E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "We are having very enjoyable meetings at the different homes Sunday afternoons, when all are welcome who desire to attend. During the absence of your scribe, in attendance at the convention at Syracuse, the friends met and surprised Uncle Benj. Rhodes on the anniversary of his birth and presented him with an easy chair as a token of esteem and good fellowship; an enjoyable evening was had by all present. June 27 was the advent of another birthday anniversary, when the friends met and surprised "Auntie" Hatch, presenting her with a purse as a token of esteem. An enjoyable evening was spent in recalling some of the events that transpired in the years gone by, when the older workers, most of them now "over there," made it their home with her while in this city. The last two weeks we have had with us Grandpa Rackyleft, who will soon be 90 years 'young,' another earnest, ardent, faithful Spiritualist and worker for the enlightenment of humanity, who still loves his cause and continues to 'do good.' There are several private home circles from which very encouraging reports reach us, that Truth manifests itself to the satisfaction of its seekers. Owing to illness, which makes it impossible for the writer to leave home, the meetings will be held at her home 112 E. Chemung Pl., until later."

Mrs. Mahala Endicott writes from Quindaro, Kansas: "As a very interested reader of your most valuable paper, I feel that I would like to express my appreciation of the glorious work that you are doing through its columns for the cause of Spiritualism. I am an aged colored woman, formerly a slave, and with but little education; but I can read, and I heartily enjoy reading The Progressive Thinker. It is food for my soul. Although a slave for years, I have felt a spirit power around me, but could never understand its nature until through the kindness of some of my Spiritualist friends I was handed a copy of your paper which enlightened me. Let the good work go on."

Secretary writes: "Rev. Harry J. Moore occupied the platform at the Church of Spirit Communion, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, last Sunday evening, his subject being 'Joan of Arc.' He showed her to have been a medium, a spiritual and self-sacrificing reformer, working in the same spirit that actuated Jesus of Nazareth, and with great success. If Mr. Moore keeps closely in touch with the inspiring forces that now surround him we bespeak for him a fine career. Next Sunday evening Dr. Randall will speak for us on the subject, 'Spiritualism as Expressed in Art.' You may be sure that this most interesting topic will be ably handled by him. Our efficient musical committee has secured the services of Mrs. Pearce for each Sunday evening, so an inspiring musical treat may always be anticipated. Mr. Coates and other mediums always give messages. Services every Sunday evening; will be continued all summer, as will also the private classes and seances at Mr. Coates' home, 233 East 32d street. If any reader wishes to find what Spiritualism really is, we would advise him to join one of these classes."

Thos. H. B. Cotton writes from California: "The Spirit of liberality of The Progressive Thinker is up to the high water mark. Permit me to say that it is my deliberate conviction that because of this liberal tone of the paper, our glorious cause is as safe in its hands as it possibly could be in the keeping of any earthly agency. There is a fullness and clearness in 'Ethics of Spiritualism,' by Nora Batchelor, that gladdens the heart of every reader, while the next number, June 25, contains a message from Theodore J. Mayer entitled 'An Investigating Committee,' which for strength of logic is a real educator, and its sound conclusions are a blessing to the cause. Many other articles, perhaps equally meritorious are omitted here, but deserve due comment, as nothing is more encouraging to the writer than just recognition."

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes from Owosso, Mich.: "I have been away from home four weeks. I have visited in Owosso, Oakley, Chesaning, Flint and Saginaw, but I have not been without The Progressive Thinker. When I know I am going to be away from home I have a three-months' subscription for The Progressive Thinker sent to friends whom I expect to visit, therefore I see the paper every week and indeed I do not feel that I can get along without it. I find that many new members are added to different societies throughout the country."

Jennie Selbrede writes from Billings, Mont.: "At a regular annual meeting of the Spiritualists of our local society, the following were chosen as officers for the ensuing year: Mrs. F. D. McCormick, president; Mrs. Jennie Selbrede, vice-president; Mrs. A. P. Smith, secretary; H. W. Nelson, treasurer; trustees, F. D. McCormick, John Powers and F. R. St. John. The society is gaining and we hope to add many new members to our list the coming year. We are expecting Mrs. McCoy about the 11th of this month on her return from the state convention. She is truly a sincere and worthy medium, gives good tests and is a grand good worker for the Spiritualist field, and now we have Dr. Schlesinger in our midst for a few days. He gives names more readily than any medium I have ever heard of."

Parkland Heights (Pa.) Spiritualists Home and Camp-meeting Association opened its camp on July 3, and will continue until September 1. Elizabeth M. Fish, secretary, Floral Heights, Parkland, Eden, Pa.

Dr. J. A. Bailey writes from Cedar Rapids, Iowa: "On July 3, I closed a very successful two months' engagement at St. Joseph, Mo. Some good, I trust, was done; some soul was drawn more in touch with the infinite, and thereby enabled to give a higher expression to their individual life. We can only sow the seed of right living, hoping that it may take root and blossom forth in all its beauty, that its fruits may be visible to the world. I am on my way home to attend the Clinton camp which I have not missed since it started 21 years ago, and if the readers of The Progressive Thinker want a love feast, come to Mt. Pleasant Park camp-meeting, this August, and they will surely get what their souls are prepared to receive. I expect to lecture here Sunday evening, and then on home."

Mrs. Fred Ferguson writes from Monroe, Wash.: "I think your paper is a grand sunbeam of light and truth. I have started a society in our little town, and we are like little children commencing to talk, trusting and asking the spirit friends for light. Mrs. Esther Thomas Bosley of Seattle, comes here quite often and delivers a beautiful lecture. She is a grand and noble speaker."

Next Sunday Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley will lecture at Rockford, Ill. She has done a splendid work there.

TARES AND WHEAT.

The following lines came to me after reading the philosophy of Daniel Reed, of Danville, Ill., his article being under the above headlines in The Progressive Thinker of June 25.

Daniel's Logic of "Let Them Alone."

I go to the butcher to buy some meat,
Yet somehow or other he will me cheat;
But it's been ever thus for forty years,
So what's the use of shedding tears—
I say nothing, and let him alone.

I go to the grocer, for eat we must,
Yet I know they're combined in one great trust.
I buy adulterated food, but what of that?
It's no use crying or having a spat—
I say nothing, and let him alone.

I buy fresh milk from the dairyman, too,
Which from the pump spout in quantity grew;
But what's the use to fight men of that ilk?
It's no use crying o'er such watery milk.
Since we need him, let's let him alone.

I go to the dairy, fresh butter to buy,
But somehow or other—I cannot tell why—
Some ounces are lacking always to that ball;
Yes, I've paid for a pound, and there's no taste at all.
Yet I eat it, and let him alone.

I now find my way to a dry goods store,
To make some purchases as ofttimes of yore,
And I find the counters so filled with stuff
That's a cheat, yet I buy—if I've money enough,
Or else, I let them alone.

But woman-like, I came forth to buy,
To sift the wheat from the chaff I try;
Yet those horrid bargains only prove to be Another of the cheats of humanity.
I said nothing, and let them alone.

I finally took sick as all mortals do.
A physician was called—a nurse I had, too.
He prescribed, she nursed, and filled me with pills.
They said I had all of the human ills.
I was patient. I let them alone.

As I didn't die, I wended my way
To hear what a preacher to his hearers would say.
He spoke of hell, and of Daniel's tares
That grew 'midst the wheat in life's thoroughfares,
And I wondered why he let them alone.

I then hied me forth to a seance-room
Where all was as dark as midnight gloom;
Yea, I went with the best and purest intent;
I'd been told my mother, from heaven would be sent,
But 'twas fraud; yes, I let them alone.

This was years ago, Brother Daniel, I found
Our ranks so polluted—your principle unsound.
Frauds never our garments of truth will make bright,
So I have taken the sickle, to clip with my might,
And I never will let them alone!

Yes, the banner of truth let us ever defend,
And to all honest workers assistance lend,
For it's only these can give proof, in sooth,
And have ever made brighter the garment of Truth;
Let us give them a helping hand.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIR VOLUME,

By A. LEAH UNDERHILL,
(Of the Fox Family.)

The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism.

Thirty-three chapters, 477 pages, superbly printed, and bound in colors and gold, 15 illustrations, 5 steel engraved portraits of the celebrated Fox Family, a full page engraving of the old house at Hydesville, which to this day, by the act of its wealthy and respected owner, Artemas Hyde, Esq., bears the inscription, "Here Spiritualism Originated in 1848."

A complete history of the initiation of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, from the epochal period which dates from March 31, 1848. Since that day, starting from a small country village in western New York, Spiritualism has made its way against tremendous obstacles around the civilized globe.

Only a limited number of copies of this rare book, now out of print, are to be had, and these can be obtained only at this office. Those who remit at once will receive a copy, post paid, at the GREATLY REDUCED PRICE OF $1.

Note.—By failure in 1885 to complete contract with the author, a large portion of the edition was left unbound, and so remained for a number of years, when they were rescued and bound at additional cost, hence this valuable contribution to the cause of Spiritualism was not properly presented to the Spiritualistic public, and a host of investigators have not had the opportunity of securing a copy until the present time. Do not fail to send for a copy at once. J. R. FRANOIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

"Koradine. By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mary Taber: Q. Who originated the Ouija board? Why will it answer at one time and not at another?

A. The Ouija board was first advertised in England, but its inventor may not have been the advertiser. Its failure to respond at times is convincing proof that the board is moved by an independent force or intelligence. It shows that the mediumship of the person using it is variable and not continuous as it will become by use. The seances should be held at appointed times and with the same punctuality, whether there are manifestations or a failure.

B. R. W.: Q. What of the "Silver Chain Developing Circle"?

A. In a little pamphlet sent out, it is said that this circle has for its objects "the elucidation and development of mediumship, the healing of the sick, and improvement of temporal conditions. It was organized by J. M. and M. T. Allen, in 1896, and has its headquarters in Springfield, Mo. Anyone of good moral character can become a member by sending in his or her application with $1 fee. The dues thereafter are one dollar a month. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are enthusiastic workers, and could a central organization like this be established with numerous affiliating branches, a great and beneficial influence would be exerted. Of course the movers in any task that takes their strength and time should be rewarded, and we only wish that such workers could be endowed that they might labor without price. While we have no inclination to criticise, we constantly feel should be held without price, and thus that mediumship and spiritual truth the greatest motive for deception and misstatement removed.

—— —— Shelton —: Q. Did the Jews, or do they now, believe in immortality of man?

A. Although the future life does not form a conspicuous part of Jewish literature, and seems not to have awakened speculation, yet it was believed and formed a tenet of the Jewish religion. The idea that the body would be resurrected and reoccupied by the spirit was of comparative recent origin.

The Book of Job is often referred to, as containing passages opposed to future existence, and from it is argued that the Jews did not believe in a future life. But it must be held in mind that this book, probably one of the oldest in the world, is not a Jewish production. It is a Persian folk-lore story, a thousand years older than the Jewish nation or tribes.

Inventor: Q. Why do we hear no more of the wonderful things promised of "liquefied air"? It was claimed by its inventor and by those selling stock in a company formed to manufacture it, that it would supersede all other motive agents.

A. There is no question about the power of liquefied air; the trouble comes in with its cost. It requires with the present methods, four or five times the power to liquefy air, that can be obtained from it. Until some way is devised to make it with the expenditure of little more power than can be obtained from it, its use in a large way is prohibited by its cost.

"Electric": Q. That there is immense power in a stroke of lightning is shown by the work it does. Would it be possible to receive it in a storage battery and thus utilize it?

A. A storage battery is charged by a long continuous current, and the high tension of a charge of lightning would not be available. When two cloud strata oppose each other, or a cloud stratum oppoes the earth's surface, they are negative and positive to each other and these states become stronger and stronger until the tension is so great that through some interposing object they rush together and this result is called a lightning stroke. The cloud layers may extend many square miles of surface, the energy of the stroke depends on the extent. If a storage battery could be placed in the path of a stroke, it would serve only as a conductor, perhaps receiving only a slight charge. Could a rod be extended upward to reach the cloud stratum, and thus slowly carry the charge to the earth, a battery in this circuit would receive and store it.

S. H. Mitchell: Q. How are the carcases of animals of tropical climates, frozen into the cliffs of Alaska, accounted for? Must we not suppose the poles of the earth changed, to bring the polar regions under the equator?

A. The hypothesis that the poles of the earth have changed their positions on the surface, thus bringing the torrid regions into the frigid zone, has been advocated and is ready at hand. It, however, does not require a very exhaustive knowledge of physics to demonstrate that axis of rotation of a spheroid revolving in space cannot be changed. The excess of matter at the equator caused by the centrifugal force, holds the planet in that plane of revolution, from which it can depart only within narrow limits. These limits are sufficient to materially affect the temperature, but not alone to the extent the facts require.

The bones of lions, tigers and other animals which can only live in warm climates, found in caves in Northern Europe, show that a tropical climate prevailed at a comparatively recent geological time. This climate extended over the wide plains of Russia, probably the remaining internal heat of the earth, and the oceanic currents which like the Gulf stream bears the warm waters to the north, were important agents. It must be remembered that the form of the land was not then as it is now. These marshy plains were intersected by great rivers flowing to the North into the Arctic Sea. They were covered with vast herds of mastodon, mammoth, rhinoceros, and other tropical animals. The rivers during floods, bore the carcasses of these animals to the north and deposited them in the silt. On the northern borders the mammoth had changed from the hairless form, and adapted itself to the climate by a thick growth of wool interspersed with long bristly hairs. These elephantine species had massive teeth and tusks, and the vast number which roamed over northern plains is indicated by the remains found in the now frozen clefts of the Arctic ocean. Those clefts were then mud deposits at the mouths of the rivers flowing from the south, bearing the carcasses of these animals, and embedding them therein. As the sea cuts into the cliffs, it exposes these remains, and large quantities of fossil ivory have been gathered that have been thus exposed.

Entire carcasses of the mastodon were at one time seen in the perpetually frozen cliffs. These had been carried down from the warmer south, into the frigid north and frozen in the mud before they decayed. The waves washed the soil away, and the summer sun thawed the surface and they fell to the boot of the bottom. The flesh was so well preserved that foxes and wolves devoured it. How long had these bodies been preserved? They must have lived before the ice age, or perhaps in its early centuries. The shortest time which has been assigned to the duration of that age is one million years, and since its passing 100,000 years. I estimate the latter period from the admited fact that near the close of the ice age the waters from melting glaciers began to flow down the St. Lawrence, instead of south to the Mississippi. They plunged directly into Lake Ontario. Since that time they have worn a channel to the site of the present Niagara Falls, or about 12 miles. The time necessary to do this has been calculated all the way from 75,000 to 200,000 years. Roughly stated as an average of estimates, I have placed it at 100,000 years.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This beautiful book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness."

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles, of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Hon. James K. Jones, ex-United States Senator from Arkansas, writes that he enjoyed Dr. Bland's book, "In the World Celestial," greatly. "As a romance of two worlds it is charming," he says, "and its revelations of the spirit world are the most wonderful I have ever read. One naturally hopes that it is true and Dr. Bland's endorsement goes far with those that know him."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price, $1.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

MY RELIGION.

The Experiences and Views of a Progressive Thinker.

My religious experiences and impressions, as nearly as I can recollect them, began at the tender age of ten years. A copy of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress had fallen into my hands and through reading it and attending a revival about the same time, I was soon in that happy frame of mind which the strictly orthodox call "under conviction of sin," At last I was prevailed upon to go to the altar and profess conversion. When I was taken into the church, I was asked a great many questions that I did not at the time understand, but I suppose I answered them all properly, no objection was made to my becoming a member of the Presbyterian church.

It must have been about this time that I began reading Dante's Inferno. I read on until I came to the place which recounted the inscriptions "All hope abandon, ye who enter here," and fearing to enter such a horrible place, I laid aside the book. But I could not lay aside my religion so easily. The sense of my short-comings, my failure to live up to my profession, my struggles with the many boyish temptations that beset me, all weighed heavily upon me. The fate of the backsliders in the Progress and of those who abandoned all hope in the terrible realms described by Dante, caused me many a troubled day and sleepless night. At last I went to my mother for relief. She assured me that I was probably probably as good as the most boys and that as far as religion was concerned, I was expected to do only the best I could and leave the rest with God. This was a great relief at the time, but I have always wished that I could banish from my mind and memory the recollection of those dark and gloomy youthful days.

As I grew older I began to study those around me, with the result that I noticed that very few persons lived up to the strict letter of their professions. I noticed that faithful Sunday-school scholars did not always tell the truth; that men who were very reverent in church, sometimes used very profane language outside of it; that very devout Christians did not always feed the tramps who called at their doors, although they contributed very liberally to foreign missions; that men who were too religious to keep their stores open on Sundays, sometimes forgot that 16 ounces make a pound; that a preacher occasionally eloped with his neighbor's wife. These transgressions of the moral and divine law, I could not reconcile with the injunction of scripture, "Keep ye my commandments," and the seeds of doubt and distrust found lodgment in my heart and brain.

I chanced to read Tom Paine's Age of Reason and my faith in God and the scriptures was completely shattered. I also read Ingersoll about this time and heard him deliver his famous lecture on "The Gods" at the Pike Opera House, Cincinnati. I never regretted hearing this great orator, but I have always felt a little unkindly toward the friend that introduced me to the pages of Tom Paine. I cannot advise any one to read "The Age of Reason," and can appreciate the advice of Franklin, himself a skeptic, who advised Paine to burn the manuscript before it was published. I suppose that this cycle of skepticism must come into every one's life, at least it did into mine. But I soon saw that I was making myself unpopular without knowing exactly why, until later in life when I asked a friend what he thought of Mr. "So and So," and he replied that he did not have any use for a man who did not believe in a God.

I then tried to get back into the old belief gradually. I investigated Universalism and Unitarianism and had there been a church of either denomination in the town where I lived, I would no doubt have united with it. Now after having run the gauntlet of nearly all the creeds and isms, I can say with Count Tolstoi, "In my search for the solution of the problems of life, I seem to have experienced the same feelings as a man lost in a wood. And in noticing the perfect resignation and patience with which the poor and humble went to their daily tasks without complaining, I began to understand that in the answers given by faith were to be found the deepest sources of wisdom, that I had no right to reject them and that they alone solved the real problems of life."

About ten years ago I began investigating Theosophy and soon became deeply interested in the wisdom religion as it is called. This faith has for its fundamental principles these three doctrines: First, the doctrine of reincarnation, which teaches that we live many lives here or in other worlds; that the soul will always live, has always lived; that it gathers experiences in its many lives that are of benefit to it in its next life. Second, the doctrine of Karma, which is the unerring law of cause and effect, which teaches that as we sow, so shall we reap; that every thought, word and act leaves its impression upon the plastic record of our lives; that every good act has its appropriate reward sometime; that for every wrong we do our neighbor either blindly or designedly, we must suffer in kind; that we cannot escape from ourselves or the consequences of our own acts; that we make our own heaven or our own hell; that we shall finally reach a state of heavenly perfection, and that right will ultimately prevail. Third, the doctrine of universal brotherhood, a doctrine which is as broad as the universe itself. After a careful study of these doctrine I am convinced that they are nearer the truth than those of any other religion. Especially to my mind, does the doctrine of Karma seem to solve the problems of accountability, of compensation for good and of punishment for evil in the most reasonable and rational manner. I have only recently began investigating Spiritualism and as yet can not say much for it or against it.

Religions are getting more liberal every day. Religious enthusiasm is on the wane; the old earnestness is fading out of book and creed; the fires of religious ardor kindled by the early fathers are dying out; the myths and miracles are fading from the skies; the hell of Dante, of Calvin and of Wesley has cooled perceptibly in the last few years. What a marvelous change has crept over the minds and souls of men. What a change from John Wesley, who taught that the soul in hell is like asbestos which burneth and is not consumed, to Count Tolstoi who teaches the non-resistance of evil and that evil will kill itself; what a change from John Calvin who taught that some men are everlastingly predestinated to damnation, to Walt Whitman, who says "I am deathless and though I live ten years or ten thousand, I know that I shall come into my own."

Man's physical being as well as his mentality is the result of universal law, environment and will. That is to say, man is what he is, because of heredity, prenatal conditions, astrological influences, blood, ancestry, etc.; of influences by which he is surrounded, and of his own will. I believe that though man's destiny is written in the stars, every man is greater than his own horoscope and that he can to a certain extent, attain to heights that seem almost unattainable. The noblest, grandest thing in the world is the human will. Who can contemplate the will of a Napoleon who changed the face of Europe and of the world, or of a Lincoln who by a stroke of a pen struck the shackles off of four millions of human beings, without concluding that the human will is divine? When we thus recognize the sovereignty of the human will, in the many instances of its exercise for far-reaching good, we can not help but agree with Walt Whitman that "We are a part of God, that we have a God within us, that we are God." Truly we are as divine as the hand that made us.

My religious convictions are partly, therefore, the result of heredity, partly of environment, partly of my own intelligence and will. Through heredity I shall never get away from the idea of a personal God, or Supreme Being. Environment has taught me the idea of compensation or Karma. My own will gives me the inspiration to ignore all man-made creeds but my own, to try to fulfill what I believe to be my destiny, to live out my life here, to do the very best I can, living, loving, learning, striving to help myself in helping others.

I do not believe in a religion which teaches that damnation is almost certain and salvation almost impossible; which teaches that any one sect or denomination is the chosen people of God; which does not protest against the killing of animals or the butchery of men; which does not raise its voice against the horrors of war; which carves the ruling nations of the world from the savage tribes that roam through God's own forest wilds, with the red sword of war and the flaming torch of fire; I can not believe in a God who delights to torture the bodies and torment the souls of the beings that he has himself created. I can not believe in a religion which limits to one short life of three score years and ten, the only opportunity in which to overcome the natural tendency to evil. I can not believe in a religion which teaches that this life, where the very struggle for existence makes brutes of men, is the only chance in which to win from all-pervading nature the right to try again for that for which we strove in vain.

We can not make religion although we can all make creeds. And I consider that I have as good a right to make a creed as had John Calvin, John Wesley, Joseph Smith or the Nicene fathers.

My creed is short. "I believe that a Supreme Force, a Supreme Intelligence, a Supreme Being or a Supreme Entity, call it what you will, governs the universe; that

"We are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

I believe that death does not end all; that I have always lived, shall always live, here or in some other world, whether in the heaven of the Christian, the Nirvana of the Buddhist, the spirit world of the Spiritualist, or the Devachan of the Theosophist. I believe that for every good thought I give out, or for every good act I do or good word I speak, I shall ultimately have an appropriate reward; that for every wrong I either blindly or designedly deal my neighbor, I shall suffer in kind; that everything I say or do affects every one else in the universe.

Utterly disclaiming and discarding all other creeds, I believe in a religion which teaches the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of the Universal God; which teaches that love can and does overcome all evil; which teaches that God's mercy is wider than the measures of men's minds; which teaches that we are our brother's keeper; which teaches us to pity the lame dog and pat the tired horse in the street; which teaches us to look with great leniency upon all sin which proceeds from human tenderness or natural passion; which teaches us to respect the aged; pity the wretched, comfort the afflicted, and solace the dying; which teaches us to throw the mantle of charity over the weakness of woman and the sin of man; which teaches that we owe a duty to every living thing. I believe in a religion that is as broad and deep as all the boundless realms of space; that is as old as the hoary mountain tops that pierce the Eternal sky; that is as true as the soul's knowledge of itself. Lastly I believe in a religion that gives to all the seekers after God, the truth as imperishably as it is engraved and written upon the impressionable tablets of the heart and soul and brain of man. Have You Hay-Fever or Asthma in Any Form?

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the Kola Compound before the season of attacks if practical to give it time to act upon the system. Its cures are really marvelous.

Miss A. E. Frye, Lakeman, Mo., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever after several years suffering, altho' physicians had said a cure was impossible. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, writes March 8th, that he used Himalya (the Kola Compound) on numbers of Hay-Fever cases with satisfactory results in every case. Hon. L. C. Clute, Greeley, Iowa, testifies that he was cured by it after eighteen years of suffering with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Physicians or change of climate did him no good. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the Importers, copies of which they will be glad to send you.

To prove beyond a doubt its wonderful curative power the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. Quarterly Circuit Meeting.

One of the most successful grove meetings ever held under the auspices of Spiritualism was held in Rockford, Ill., on June 24, 25 and 26, by the circuit of northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin.

This is the third meeting of the society, the first when the society was organized last winter in Rockford, the second held early in April, in Genoa, Ill. It was then decided to hold the next one as a grove meeting, and Harlem Park, Rockford, selected as the place. The Psychic Research Society of Rockford, one of the Auxiliaries of the circuit, and the Ladies' Aid took the matter in hand with the officers of the circuit and nothing that could be done to make the meeting one of the very best, was left undone.

Friday forenoon a light shower laid the dust and put the park in perfect order for the work. In the afternoon the first regular session was held, the forenoon meeting being a conference led by W. J. Erwood, and which called out the spirit of harmony and interest that characterized the entire meeting. The address of welcome was delivered by the Rev. Robert C. Bryant of the People's Church, and was in every sense a cordial welcome to the people, and truths contained in the philosophy of Spiritualism.

W. J. Erwood, president of the Wisconsin State Association, gave the address in the evening; he also spoke Saturday afternoon. Mr. Erwood is one of the workers that always pleases, and who holds a place in the hearts of the people. As he was obliged to return to LaCrosse for Sunday, that was his last address.

Dr. Warne, president of the Illinois State Association, was not able to be present, on account of the passing away of a near relative, and Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president, took his place. Mrs. Fixen spoke Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning. After listening to Mrs. Fixen one can readily understand why her name has reached even far-away Australia, and how the people of that land felt themselves honored by her presence. Long may she live to give out the sweet message of love and tenderness as she gave it in Harlem Park.

Moses Hull spoke Sunday afternoon, and the people listened as if carried away with his words. Truly he is the "Moses" of Spiritualism.

Mrs. Hull gave the evening address, and although the audience had been seated long before the meeting proper began, as a circle had been held in advance of the meeting, no one seemed to be willing to let go of the last word spoken.

Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley and Madam Brunswick were the test mediums or message bearers. Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom was expected, but owing to ill health she was obliged to cancel her appointment, much to the disappointment of her many friends in and around Rockford, where she is a general favorite.

Mrs. Cooley never did better in her life. She is always a lady on the rostrum as off of it. Her messages were clear, straight-forward, and beautifully delivered. She will remain another week in Rockford and hold meetings Thursday and Sunday. Madam Brunswick did good work; one evening she was too ill to be on the platform. She has many friends who feel she is one of the foremost workers in our ranks.

Sunday afternoon a few minutes were devoted to the Morris Pratt School, and it is safe to say a better understanding of the school was established than existed before, and that more interest will be taken in its welfare in the future.

The students of the M. P. I. were expected to furnish the music, but as all had left the school it remained for Mr. and Mrs. Hull to do that part. Mrs. Hull is at home with an organ, and with them to lead the congregational singing nothing could be better in such meetings. Mr. and Mrs. Hull sang several fine selections that were well appreciated.

The next quarterly meeting will be held in September and the place of meeting announced later. Two weeks will be given for invitations. Any local society or number of Spiritualists desiring the meeting should write the officers at once. Mr. Orrin Merritt, Genoa, president; L. W. Kendall, Beloit, Wis., vice-president; H. H. Howe, Rockford, Ill., secretary.

Harlem Park is an ideal place for a grove meeting and no doubt the managers of the circuit will decide to hold an annual meeting there. It is hoped so at least.

This circuit is the first to be established, and if others will follow we will soon get organized so that at least quarterly meetings can be held in every section of the country.

This meeting paid all expenses and left a neat sum in the treasury, it can be done by others. Spiritualists, let us be up and "To the work."

CLARA L. STEWART.

HUMANITY.

We ask the Lord for mercy, as we kneel
in fervent prayer;
And we raise our pleading glance to heaven, for the answer we read
there.
But for our lowly brethren, the cow, the calf, the sheep;
The mercy that we show to them, must make the angels weep.

My lady in her daintiness, her wool, her
gloves, her fur,
The slaughter of the innocents, what does it mean to her?
The frightened, hunted creature, the little suffering calf,
Touches no higher nature, than makes
my lady laugh.

Oh, woman, with your apathy! Oh man,
with blood-stained hands;
Who seek the highest grace from heaven yet deaf to its demands,
Who claim you're law-abiding, when you
quell all human strife;
Yet know those words, "Thou shalt not kill," means anything with life.

When shall the soul awaken to its higher, greater needs?
When shall it learn to look with love on everything that pleads?
Oh! ask no heaven-born nature to
hearken to your prayer,
While one weak and suffering creature
remains below your care.

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mary Taber: Q. Who originated the Ouija board? Why will it answer at one time and not at another?

A. The Ouija board was first advertised in England, but its inventor may not have been the advertiser. Its failure to respond at times is convincing proof that the board is moved by an independent force or intelligence. It shows that the mediumship of the person using it is variable and not continuous as it will become by use. The seances should be held at appointed times and with the same punctuality, whether there are manifestations or a failure.

B. R W.: Q. What of the "Silver Chain Developing Circle"?

A. In a little pamphlet sent out, it is said that this circle has for its objects "the elucidation and development of mediumship, the healing of the sick, and improvement of temporal conditions. It was organized by J. M. and M. T. Allen, in 1896, and has its headquarters in Springfield, Mo. Anyone of good moral character can become a member by sending in his or her application with $1 fee. The dues thereafter are one dollar a month. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are enthusiastic workers, and could a central organization like this be established with numerous affiliating branches, a great and beneficial influence would be exerted. Of course the movers in any task that takes their strength and time should be rewarded, and we only wish that such workers could be endowed that they might labor without price. While we have no inclination to criticise, we constantly feel should be held without price, and thus that mediumship and spiritual truth the greatest motive for deception and misstatement removed.

—— —— Shelton —: Q. Did the Jews, or do they now, believe in immortality of man?

A. Although the future life does not form a conspicuous part of Jewish literature, and seems not to have awakened speculation, yet it was believed and formed a tenet of the Jewish religion. The idea that the body would be resurrected and reoccupied by the spirit was of comparative recent origin.

The Book of Job is often referred to, as containing passages opposed to future existence, and from it is argued that the Jews did not believe in a future life. But it must be held in mind that this book, probably one of the oldest in the world, is not a Jewish production. It is a Persian folk-lore story, a thousand years older than the Jewish nation or tribes.

Inventor: Q. Why do we hear no more of the wonderful things promised of "liquefied air"? It was claimed by its inventor and by those selling stock in a company formed to manufacture it, that it would supersede all other motive agents.

A. There is no question about the power of liquefied air; the trouble comes in with its cost. It requires with the present methods, four or five times the power to liquefy air, that can be obtained from it. Until some way is devised to make it with the expenditure of little more power than can be obtained from it, its use in a large way is prohibited by its cost.

"Electric": Q. That there is immense power in a stroke of lightning is shown by the work it does. Would it be possible to receive it in a storage battery and thus utilize it?

A. A storage battery is charged by a long continuous current, and the high tension of a charge of lightning would not be available. When two cloud strata oppose each other, or a cloud stratum oppoes the earth's surface, they are negative and positive to each other and these states become stronger and stronger until the tension is so great that through some interposing object they rush together and this result is called a lightning stroke. The cloud layers may extend many square miles of surface, the energy of the stroke depends on the extent. If a storage battery could be placed in the path of a stroke, it would serve only as a conductor, perhaps receiving only a slight charge. Could a rod be extended upward to reach the cloud stratum, and thus slowly carry the charge to the earth, a battery in this circuit would receive and store it.

S. H. Mitchell: Q. How are the carcases of animals of tropical climates, frozen into the cliffs of Alaska, accounted for? Must we not suppose the poles of the earth changed, to bring the polar regions under the equator?

A. The hypothesis that the poles of the earth have changed their positions on the surface, thus bringing the torrid regions into the frigid zone, has been advocated and is ready at hand. It, however, does not require a very exhaustive knowledge of physics to demonstrate that axis of rotation of a spheroid revolving in space cannot be changed. The excess of matter at the equator caused by the centrifugal force, holds the planet in that plane of revolution, from which it can depart only within narrow limits. These limits are sufficient to materially affect the temperature, but not alone to the extent the facts require.

The bones of lions, tigers and other animals which can only live in warm climates, found in caves in Northern Europe, show that a tropical climate prevailed at a comparatively recent geological time. This climate extended over the wide plains of Russia, probably the remaining internal heat of the earth, and the oceanic currents which like the Gulf stream bears the warm waters to the north, were important agents. It must be remembered that the form of the land was not then as it is now. These marshy plains were intersected by great rivers flowing to the North into the Arctic Sea. They were covered with vast herds of mastodon, mammoth, rhinoceros, and other tropical animals. The rivers during floods, bore the carcasses of these animals to the north and deposited them in the silt. On the northern borders the mammoth had changed from the hairless form, and adapted itself to the climate by a thick growth of wool interspersed with long bristly hairs. These elephantine species had massive teeth and tusks, and the vast number which roamed over northern plains is indicated by the remains found in the now frozen clefts of the Arctic ocean. Those clefts were then mud deposits at the mouths of the rivers flowing from the south, bearing the carcasses of these animals, and embedding them therein. As the sea cuts into the cliffs, it exposes these remains, and large quantities of fossil ivory have been gathered that have been thus exposed.

Entire carcasses of the mastodon were at one time seen in the perpetually frozen cliffs. These had been carried down from the warmer south, into the frigid north and frozen in the mud before they decayed. The waves washed the soil away, and the summer sun thawed the surface and they fell to the boot of the bottom. The flesh was so well preserved that foxes and wolves devoured it. How long had these bodies been preserved? They must have lived before the ice age, or perhaps in its early centuries. The shortest time which has been assigned to the duration of that age is one million years, and since its passing 100,000 years. I estimate the latter period from the admited fact that near the close of the ice age the waters from melting glaciers began to flow down the St. Lawrence, instead of south to the Mississippi. They plunged directly into Lake Ontario. Since that time they have worn a channel to the site of the present Niagara Falls, or about 12 miles. The time necessary to do this has been calculated all the way from 75,000 to 200,000 years. Roughly stated as an average of estimates, I have placed it at 100,000 years.

"In the World Celestial," by Dr. T. A. Bland

Is a wonderful book, being the personal experiences of a man whose dead sweetheart, after appearing to him many times, etherealized, materialized and through trance mediums, has him put into a hypnotic trance by spirit scientists and held in that condition for ten days, which time he spends with her in the celestial spheres, and then returns to earth with perfect recollection of what he saw and heard in that realm of the so-called dead. He tells his wonderful story to his friend who gives it to the world in his best style. This friend is Dr. T. A. Bland, the well-known author, scientist and reformer.

This book has a brilliant introduction by that distinguished preacher, Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., president of the American Congress of Liberal Religions, who gives it the weight of his unqualified endorsement.

He says: "This beautiful book will give us courage to pass through the shadow of death to the sunlit clime of the world celestial."

Rev. M. J. Savage says: "It is intensely interesting, and gives a picture of the future life that one cannot help wishing may be true."

The Medical Gleaner says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms, and leaves a sweet taste in his consciousness."

Hon. C. A. Windle says: "It is inexpressibly delightful."

President Bowles, of the National Liberal League, says: "It is one of the choicest pieces of literature of this marvelous age of books."

Hon. James K. Jones, ex-United States Senator from Arkansas, writes that he enjoyed Dr. Bland's book, "In the World Celestial," greatly. "As a romance of two worlds it is charming," he says, "and its revelations of the spirit world are the most wonderful I have ever read. One naturally hopes that it is true and Dr. Bland's endorsement goes far with those that know him."

Everybody will be charmed with it, for it is not only a great spiritual book, but a most beautiful love romance of two worlds. It is printed in elegant style, bound in cloth and gold. Price, $1.

MY RELIGION.

The Experiences and Views of a Progressive Thinker.

My religious experiences and impressions, as nearly as I can recollect them, began at the tender age of ten years. A copy of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress had fallen into my hands and through reading it and attending a revival about the same time, I was soon in that happy frame of mind which the strictly orthodox call "under conviction of sin." At last I was prevailed upon to go to the altar and profess conversion. When I was taken into the church, I was asked a great many questions that I did not at the time understand, but I suppose I answered them all properly, no objection was made to my becoming a member of the Presbyterian church.

It must have been about this time that I began reading Dante's Inferno. I read on until I came to the place which recounted the inscriptions "All hope abandon, ye who enter here," and fearing to enter such a horrible place, I laid aside the book. But I could not lay aside my religion so easily. The sense of my short-comings, my failure to live up to my profession, my struggles with the many boyish temptations that beset me, all weighed heavily upon me. The fate of the backsliders in the Progress and of those who abandoned all hope in the terrible realms described by Dante, caused me many a troubled day and sleepless night. At last I went to my mother for relief. She assured me that I was probably probably as good as the most boys and that as far as religion was concerned, I was expected to do only the best I could and leave the rest with God. This was a great relief at the time, but I have always wished that I could banish from my mind and memory the recollection of those dark and gloomy youthful days.

As I grew older I began to study those around me, with the result that I noticed that very few persons lived up to the strict letter of their professions. I noticed that faithful Sunday-school scholars did not always tell the truth; that men who were very reverent in church, sometimes used very profane language outside of it; that very devout Christians did not always feed the tramps who called at their doors, although they contributed very liberally to foreign missions; that men who were too religious to keep their stores open on Sundays, sometimes forgot that 16 ounces make a pound; that a preacher occasionally eloped with his neighbor's wife. These transgressions of the moral and divine law, I could not reconcile with the injunction of scripture, "Keep ye my commandments," and the seeds of doubt and distrust found lodgment in my heart and brain.

I chanced to read Tom Paine's Age of Reason and my faith in God and the scriptures was completely shattered. I also read Ingersoll about this time and heard him deliver his famous lecture on "The Gods" at the Pike Opera House, Cincinnati. I never regretted hearing this great orator, but I have always felt a little unkindly toward the friend that introduced me to the pages of Tom Paine. I cannot advise any one to read "The Age of Reason," and can appreciate the advice of Franklin, himself a skeptic, who advised Paine to burn the manuscript before it was published. I suppose that this cycle of skepticism must come into every one's life, at least it did into mine. But I soon saw that I was making myself unpopular without knowing exactly why; until later in life when I asked a friend what he thought of Mr. "So and So," and he replied that he did not have any use for a man who did not believe in a God.

I then tried to get back into the old belief gradually. I investigated Universalism and Unitarianism and had there been a church of either denomination in the town where I lived, I would no doubt have united with it. Now after having run the gauntlet of nearly all the creeds and isms, I can say with Count Tolstoi, "In my search for the solution of the problems of life, I seem to have experienced the same feelings as a man lost in a wood. And in noticing the perfect resignation and patience with which the poor and humble went to their daily tasks without complaining, I began to understand that in the answers given by faith were to be found the deepest sources of wisdom, that I had no right to reject them and that they alone solved the real problems of life."

About ten years ago I began investigating Theosophy and soon became deeply interested in the wisdom religion as it is called. This faith has for its fundamental principles these three doctrines: First, the doctrine of reincarnation, which teaches that we live many lives here or in other worlds; that the soul will always live, has always lived; that it gathers experiences in its many lives that are of benefit to it in its next life. Second, the doctrine of Karma, which is the unerring law of cause and effect, which teaches that as we sow, so shall we reap; that every thought, word and act leaves its impression upon the plastic record of our lives; that every good act has its appropriate reward sometime; that for every wrong we do our neighbor either blindly or designedly, we must suffer in kind; that we cannot escape from ourselves or the consequences of our own acts; that we make our own heaven or our own hell; that we shall finally reach a state of heavenly perfection, and that right will ultimately prevail. Third, the doctrine of universal brotherhood, a doctrine which is as broad as the universe itself. After a careful study of these doctrine I am convinced that they are nearer the truth than those of any other religion. Especially to my mind, does the doctrine of Karma seem to solve the problems of accountability, of compensation for good and of punishment for evil in the most reasonable and rational manner. I have only recently began investigating Spiritualism and as yet can not say much for it or against it.

Religions are getting more liberal every day. Religious enthusiasm is on the wane; the old earnestness is fading out of book and creed; the fires of religious ardor kindled by the early fathers are dying out; the myths and miracles are fading from the skies; the hell of Dante, of Calvin and of Wesley has cooled perceptibly in the last few years. What a marvelous change has crept over the minds and souls of men. What a change from John Wesley, who taught that the soul in hell is like asbestos which burneth and is not consumed, to Count Tolstoi who teaches the non-resistance of evil and that evil will kill itself; what a change from John Calvin who taught that some men are everlastingly predestinated to damnation, to Walt Whitman, who says "I am deathless and though I live ten years or ten thousand, I know that I shall come into my own."

Man's physical being as well as his mentality is the result of universal law, environment and will. That is to say, man is what he is, because of heredity, prenatal conditions, astrological influences, blood, ancestry, etc., of influences by which he is surrounded, and of his own will. I believe that though man's destiny is written in the stars, every man is greater than his own horoscope and that he can to a certain extent, attain to heights that seem almost unattainable. The noblest, grandest thing in the world is the human will. Who can contemplate the will of a Napoleon who changed the face of Europe and of the world, or of a Lincoln who by a stroke of a pen struck the shackles off of four millions of human beings, without concluding that the human will is divine? When we thus recognize the sovereignty of the human will, in the many instances of its exercise for far-reaching good, we can not help but agree with Walt Whitman that "We are a part of God, that we have a God within us, that we are God." Truly we are as divine as the hand that made us.

My religious convictions are partly, therefore, the result of heredity, partly of environment, partly of my own intelligence and will. Through heredity I shall never get away from the idea of a personal God, or Supreme Being. Environment has taught me the idea of compensation or Karma. My own will gives me the inspiration to ignore all man-made creeds but my own, to try to fulfill what I believe to be my destiny, to live out my life here, to do the very best I can, living, loving, learning, striving to help myself in helping others.

I do not believe in a religion which teaches that damnation is almost certain and salvation almost impossible; which teaches that any one sect or denomination is the chosen people of God; which does not protest against the killing of animals or the butchery of men; which does not raise its voice against the horrors of war; which carves the ruling nations of the world from the savage tribes that roam through God's own forest wilds, with the red sword of war and the flaming torch of fire; I can not believe in a God who delights to torture the bodies and torment the souls of the beings that he has himself created. I can not believe in a religion which limits to one short life of three score years and ten, the only opportunity in which to overcome the natural tendency to evil. I can not believe in a religion which teaches that this life, where the very struggle for existence makes brutes of men, is the only chance in which to win from all-pervading nature the right to try again for that for which we strove in vain.

We can not make religion although we can all make creeds. And I consider that I have as good a right to make a creed as had John Calvin, John Wesley, Joseph Smith or the Nicene fathers.

My creed is short. I believe that a Supreme Force, a Supreme Intelligence, a Supreme Being or a Supreme Entity, call it what you will, governs the universe; that

"We are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

I believe that death does not end all; that I have always lived, shall always live, here or in some other world, whether in the heaven of the Christian, the Nirvana of the Buddhist, the spirit world of the Spiritualist, or the Devachan of the Theosophist. I believe that for every good thought I give out, or for every good act I do or good word I speak, I shall ultimately have an appropriate reward; that for every wrong I either blindly or designedly deal my neighbor, I shall suffer in kind; that everything I say or do affects every one else in the universe.

Utterly disclaiming and discarding all other creeds, I believe in a religion which teaches the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of the Universal God; which teaches that love can and does overcome all evil; which teaches that God's mercy is wider than the measures of men's minds; which teaches that we are our brother's keeper; which teaches us to pity the lame dog and pat the tired horse in the street; which teaches us to look with great leniency upon all sin which proceeds from human tenderness or natural passion; which teaches us to respect the aged; pity the wretched; comfort the afflicted, and solace the dying; which teaches us to throw the mantle of charity over the weakness of woman and the sin of man; which teaches that we owe a duty to every living thing. I believe in a religion that is as broad and deep as all the boundless realms of space; that is as old as the hoary mountain tops that pierce the Eternal sky; that is as true as the soul's knowledge of itself. Lastly I believe in a religion that gives to all the seekers after God, the truth as imperishably as it is engraved and written upon the impressionable tablets of the heart and soul and brain of man. Have You Hay-Fever or Asthma in Any Form?

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the Kola Compound before the season of attacks if practical to give it time to act upon the system. Its cures are really marvelous.

Miss A. E. Frye, Lakeman, Mo., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever after several years suffering, altho' physicians had said a cure was impossible. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, writes March 8th, that he used Himalya (the Kola Compound) on numbers of Hay-Fever cases with satisfactory results in every case. Hon. L. C. Clute, Greeley, Iowa, testifies that he was cured by it after eighteen years of suffering with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Physicians or change of climate did him no good. Hundreds of similar letters have been received by the Importers, copies of which they will be glad to send you.

To prove beyond a doubt its wonderful curative power the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Quarterly Circuit Meeting.

One of the most successful grove meetings ever held under the auspices of Spiritualism was held in Rockford, Ill., on June 24, 25 and 26, by the circuit of northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin.

This is the third meeting of the society, the first when the society was organized last winter in Rockford, the second held early in April, in Genoa, Ill. It was then decided to hold the next one as a grove meeting, and Harlem Park, Rockford, selected as the place. The Psychic Research Society of Rockford, one of the Auxiliaries of the circuit, and the Ladies' Aid took the matter in hand with the officers of the circuit and nothing that could be done to make the meeting one of the very best, was left undone.

Friday forenoon a light shower laid the dust and put the park in perfect order for the work. In the afternoon the first regular session was held, the forenoon meeting being a conference led by W. J. Erwood, and which called out the spirit of harmony and interest that characterized the entire meeting. The address of welcome was delivered by the Rev. Robert C. Bryant of the People's Church, and was in every sense a cordial welcome to the people, and truths contained in the philosophy of Spiritualism.

W. J. Erwood, president of the Wisconsin State Association, gave the address in the evening; he also spoke Saturday afternoon. Mr. Erwood is one of the workers that always pleases, and who holds a place in the hearts of the people. As he was obliged to return to LaCrosse for Sunday, that was his last address.

Dr. Warne, president of the Illinois State Association, was not able to be present, on account of the passing away of a near relative, and Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president, took his place. Mrs. Fixen spoke Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning. After listening to Mrs. Fixen one can readily understand why her name has reached even far-away Australia, and how the people of that land felt themselves honored by her presence. Long may she live to give out the sweet message of love and tenderness as she gave it in Harlem Park.

Moses Hull spoke Sunday afternoon, and the people listened as if carried away with his words. Truly he is the "Moses" of Spiritualism.

Mrs. Hull gave the evening address, and although the audience had been seated long before the meeting proper began, as a circle had been held in advance of the meeting, no one seemed to be willing to let go of the last word spoken.

Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley and Madam Brunswick were the test mediums or message bearers. Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom was expected, but owing to ill health she was obliged to cancel her appointment, much to the disappointment of her many friends in and around Rockford, where she is a general favorite.

Mrs. Cooley never did better in her life. She is always a lady on the rostrum as off of it. Her messages were clear, straight-forward, and beautifully delivered. She will remain another week in Rockford and hold meetings Thursday and Sunday. Madam Brunswick did good work; one evening she was too ill to be on the platform. She has many friends who feel she is one of the foremost workers in our ranks.

Sunday afternoon a few minutes were devoted to the Morris Pratt School, and it is safe to say a better understanding of the school was established than existed before, and that more interest will be taken in its welfare in the future.

The students of the M. P. I. were expected to furnish the music, but as all had left the school it remained for Mr. and Mrs. Hull to do that part. Mrs. Hull is at home with an organ, and with them to lead the congregational singing nothing could be better in such meetings. Mr. and Mrs. Hull sang several fine selections that were well appreciated.

The next quarterly meeting will be held in September and the place of meeting announced later. Two weeks will be given for invitations. Any local society or number of Spiritualists desiring the meeting should write the officers at once. Mr. Orrin Merritt, Genoa, president; L. W. Kendall, Beloit, Wis., vice-president; H. H. Howe, Rockford, Ill., secretary.

Harlem Park is an ideal place for a grove meeting and no doubt the managers of the circuit will decide to hold an annual meeting there. It is hoped so at least.

This circuit is the first to be established, and if others will follow we will soon get organized so that at least quarterly meetings can be held in every section of the country.

This meeting paid all expenses and left a neat sum in the treasury, it can be done by others. Spiritualists, let us be up and "To the work."

CLARA L. STEWART.

HUMANITY.

We ask the Lord for mercy, as we kneel
in fervent prayer;
And we raise our pleading glance to heaven, for the answer we read
there.
But for our lowly brethren, the cow, the
calf, the sheep;
The mercy that we show to them, must make the angels weep.

My lady in her daintiness, her wool, her
gloves, her fur,
The slaughter of the innocents, what does it mean to her?
The frightened, hunted creature, the little suffering calf,
Touches no higher nature, than makes
my lady laugh.

Oh, woman, with your apathy! Oh man,
with blood-stained hands;
Who seek the highest grace from heaven yet deaf to its demands,
Who claim you're law-abiding, when you
quell all human strife;
Yet know those words, "Thou shalt not kill," means anything with life.

When shall the soul awaken to its higher, greater needs?
When shall it learn to look with love on everything that pleads?
Oh! ask no heaven-born nature to
hearken to your prayer,
While one weak and suffering creature
remains below your care.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

What Is Truth?

Henry Morrison Tefft of Norwich, Ct., Illustrates How Exceedingly Difficult It Is to Arrive at the Exact Truth.

Pilate asked this question nineteen hundred years ago and it has never been answered—it never can be answered. When that problem is fully solved, mankind will have nothing more to do. The greatest intellects the ages have produced have tried to solve the mystery of sin; how it came to exist, how it could be controlled, subjugated and subdued; but the enigma remains unsolved.

We cannot conceive of a world without sin, without misery. What would become of the philanthropist, the moralist, the missionary and the preacher, with their occupations all gone?

The harder the problem the more interest the question assumes.

What is truth and what is fiction? What is real and what is unreal?

That which is truth to one man is error, superstition and fable to another. "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." The flight of birds has dictated the foundation of cities, changed the course of mariners, and directed the path of future events to untold numbers of believing spirits.

It is difficult to draw the line between religion and superstition, between reason and instinct, between chance and calculation, and foresight. We see in man both the human and the divine, both the material and the spiritual, but where is the dividing line? There are occasions in nature and in life, when it is hard to determine what is natural and what is abnormal, what is good and what is evil. Is it the same power and energy that builds up, sustains and gives form to matter, as the one that disintegrates, tears down, and scatters the same? Is not matter simply spirit taking on form?

Is not the mind real substance?

Everywhere we see thoughts converted into form, shape and symbols. As yet there is no known limit to the possibilities of the mind; its boundary of thought, investigation and knowledge has not been located. Every day opens up new vistas stretching farther and farther into the mysteries of nature, and showing us more and more that the capabilities of the mind are beyond calculation, and that its resources have not yet been sounded, and the springs that feed it are exhaustless.

No man ever reaches the limit of his expectations. However old a person may be, he is always making calculation to live longer; however unfortunate his circumstances are he expects in time, to be better off. Knowledge does not bring happiness. Wealth brings luxury not peace. The law of compensation, running through all the affairs of the world, is wider and more general than we can comprehend or appreciate. DEBT AND CREDIT IN NATURE AND LIFE ARE ACCURATE AND BALANCE EACH OTHER.

The universe is run on a large scale. Some things mature in minutes, some in days and some in years. There are questions, and policies, and principles that work themselves out in a short space of time, while others have to be viewed over centuries in order to take in their full import and meaning. Usages and customs become laws, dreams in time settle down into realities, visions crystallize into facts; aspirations and hopes finally are crowned with fruition; prophecy, after long years, is written history, and fable, superstition and legend, are woven into creeds, dogmas and religions. Nothing remains stationary except the points of the compass. Seas dry up, mountains are leveled down, governments, institutions and opinions are constantly undergoing change. What is deemed right and proper at one age, or in one country, is considered entirely wrong and improper in another age, or in another country. Governments, rules, customs and laws, that meet the demands of a barbarous or a semi-barbarous community, become inadequate and inoperative for a cultivated and civilized people. The world is growing smaller and man larger every day.

Space is annihilated.

Messages of life and death, success and failure, victory and defeat encircle the earth in an instant of time. Time is obliterated. Great transactions are crowded into moments; years are reduced to months; months to days and days to minutes. One man now commands business and interests that formerly required a hundred; one man now owns and controls values that should be divided among a thousand. The country to-day is in the hands of organized wealth. The corporations and capitalists can bring about a revolution or stop one; they can bring on a war or stop one.

Everything is owned, cornered and controlled except air and sunlight.

The water falling from the cloud is gathered up in reservoirs, stored and sold, and if it were possible meters would be attached to the sun and a tax put upon daylight in order to satisfy the greed of corporations and the insatiable appetite of trusts. God never made the world for private ownership. The earth, the air, the water, is the honest heritage of every individual soul. Every time the owners of the productions of the country raise the price of any of the necessaries of life, it means hunger to some, crime, jails and prisons to others. People will not consent to starve as long as they can steal. In reality there is as much private ownership of men in this world, as there is in the ownership of the productive power of the earth.

The purchasable vote of the country is constantly growing larger.

It is truly pitiful to see the withered existences coming up to the polls, year after year, voting, either through bribery or coercion, for men and measures without any regard to choice, principle or conscience. In order to hold office one has got to be bound, gagged, tied hand and foot. A politician has no more liberty of action than a southern negro had in the days of slavery. He is simply a tool, an automaton worked and operated by the boss above him, to whom he owes his political existence. A measure comes up in congress or in the legislature—a party caucus is held and the decision of that caucus binds men to vote for or against the measure, regardless of whether it meets the approval of their judgment or their conscience. Such proceeding may build up and strengthen a party but it will not build up and strengthen a government. Imagine for a moment men like Charles Sumner, Abraham Lincoln, William Lloyd Garrison, Horace Greeley, Wendell Phillips and a host of others we might mention, allowing any body of men to bind their convictions so as to prevent them from acting as justice and right dictated.

A genius can be neither a partisan or a menial.

A man's opinion loses all its interest the moment we see it is given from a personal or party view. There are principles at work in every government stronger than political parties, stronger than bayonets or armies. Punishment does not prevent or lessen crime to the extent that many believe.

If a tree is unhealthy at the root it cannot be improved by working at the top.

Too much medicine kills the patient.

The more superlatives you use, the weaker your speech becomes. The more law the less government. It is only a slave that can be driven, only the blind that can be led. Everything great and noble in life has to be worked out individually. You cannot teach patriotism; you cannot teach oratory; you cannot make a freeman out of a man who by inheritance and environment was born to be a slave. Nature is the fountain head of all knowledge. There is nothing in nature, art or life, but shows better by contrast.

Even goodness becomes insipid unless mixed with a tint of weakness, foible or sin.

Who can say in the deepest realm of God's thought that the vilest man, the meanest insect, and the most savage brute has not a place, a purpose, and a beneficent use?

How can we otherwise determine that law reigns? that order prevails in the universe?

Mo man, animal or insect, is its own creator. It is forced into this world and forced out, and follows its natural bias, propensity and instinct.

No man, animal or insect, is its own creator. It is question affirmed but what has its negative side.

True knowledge, like precious ore lies deeply imbedded and can only be found by the most laborious labor. The value of the gem is in exact proportion to the cost of obtaining it.

"Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth,
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walk of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

"Great truths are greatly won; not found by chance,
Nor wafted on the breath of summer dream;
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard-buffeting with adverse wind and stream."

Norwich, Ct. HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM.

To the Editor:—The lyceum department of the work of organized Spiritualism was, as you no doubt know, culminated one and one-half years ago, in the Progressive Lyceum, as a lesson sheet, for the various lyceum workers. During all of this time it has been the intention of the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work, appointed by the N. S. A., to gain the co-operation and support of the various lyceums and lyceum workers; to this end we desire the names and addresses of all the lyceum officers and wish that they would write giving a brief statement of the condition of their work, if this missive comes to their observation.

Mrs. Hull, Mr. Kates and various other writers who have heretofore furnished lesson matter for the various lesson sheets, are earnestly solicited to join with Alonzo Danforth of Boston, Mass., and Mrs. E. K. Eager, of New London, Conn., to furnish us suitable matter for the Progressive Lyceum which is constantly growing in favor with the lyceums, which some twenty-five in number support.

It is our intention to make the Progressive Lyceum of indispensable interest to lyceum workers. It is truly necessary for us to concentrate upon certain lines of work; this will in no way modify the freedom of thought or expression. How beneficial to the establishment of organized effort it would be to have every lyceum in the United States and Canada exchanging thoughts on the same topic, on the same day; this would establish a great wave of psychic thought which most certainly would be conducive to vast good.

We endeavor to make each month a special one in some respect; for June we had a special issue of the lesson sheet for the Band of Mercy movement; July two issues were devoted to a consideration of the Anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, and August is for Sunflower Day, a special issue with responses, recitations, lesson matter and songs will be issued. This day was instituted last year; hope that lyceums and societies will join with us and observe the first Sunday in August as Sunflower Day. The following acrostic was used by the little folks last year, and as doubtless it reached but a limited number, we furnish it here.

While several of the lyceums have closed for the summer, the lesson sheet appears regularly each week and we trust through its efforts we will gather together the many lyceum forces and workers, thus establishing the all-important work of juvenile education, the foundation of which was laid by the great seer, Andrew Jackson Davis. Trusting that this letter will come to many as a personal and cordial greeting, and that you will grant us your co-operation and support,

I am always,
JOHN W. RING,
National Supt. Lyceum Work.
Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

The Sunflower.

Serene the somber Sunflower stands,
With stalk of sturdy mien;
So tall and stately, it commands
Due note wherever seen.

Upon this stalk, great outstretched leaves
Of living green abound;
So formed and hung that each relieves
Some awkwardness else found.

Nymph-like on top of this green throne
The yellow flower has place;
With majesty that's all her own,
She sits in regal grace.

Fidelity from her we learn,
Her bright and smiling face
All day unto the sun will turn,
To keep with him apace.

Look up and smile, the light is bright,
If we in Truth but seek;
With patient love, pray, trust the Right,
And walk in spirit meek.

O'er every life will Autumn come,
For full fruitions glean,
As when the childhood span is run,
Then comes the grown up scene.

With ample load of goodly deeds,
We wait time's tones unheard;
So gives the Sunflower many seeds,
To plant, or feed the birds.

Engraved forever may there rest
In each and every thought—
"All, all is Good, each thing is best,
By change our lives are wrought.

Right rules, light guides, though leaves may fall,
The flowers decay and fade;
Law to Perfection moves through all—
From atoms worlds are made.

Surely then, you and I will do
The very best we can
To cheer and bless, our whole life through,
Each passing fellow-man.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. Spirits Visit a Home to Cure One Who Is Obsessed.

No. 758 of The Progressive Thinker contained an article signed "A Devoted Spiritualist," telling how his wife had been cured of obsession by Mrs. May Price, 61 D street N. E., Washington, D. C., and that now she was to all appearances, in her normal condition.

I have a brother who for years has been considered insane, and who has been a number of yars in an insane asylum. Some time ago I made up my mind that it was a case of obsession, as his memory was clear and perfect. He has not forgoten anything concerning himself that has ever happened in the past, and remembers everything that takes place now; so I took him into my home in the hope of finding some one who could remove the evil influence. This letter of a Devoted Spiritualist came like an answer to my prayer, and I decided to appeal to Mrs. Price for aid. I wrote to her on the last day of May or first of June, and on the evening of the 3rd of June, just after retiring I saw several Indian spirits come into my bed room; one looked like Blackhawk, and I was about to greet him, but before I could do so he said, "No, May Price." Then they went into the next room where my brother sleeps. I saw them go to his bed and look at him; then I saw the spirit of a young girl at the head of my brother's bed. The Indians took hold of her. She struggled; they threw her prostrate, and all disappeared. For the first time since being with me, my brother slept well all night, and he has rested well every night since.

On Monday morning June 6, I received an answer to my letter, from Mrs. Price, dated June 3. In the letter she said she believed she could help my brother and would give him treatment. She also spoke of my being mediumistic and advised me to develop my gifts. I had not mentioned it to her that I was clairvoyant, and had other phases of mediumship, as I do not consider myself fully developed.

I can see improvement in my brother's condition in other ways besides his sleeping well at night, and thought it would be well to write to you, telling you about this case, as it may induce others who have friends or relations afflicted the same way to try and get relief for them.

I feel certain that Mrs. Price will cure my brother and will let you know if she does, as I am sure you take an interest in all such cases.

You are doing a good work, and I hope you will be spared many years to carry it on. I, too, am a

HAY FEVER SEASON COMING!

CATARRH ALWAYS WITH US.

I DON'T WANT YOUR MONEY UNLESS LIQUID SPRAY WILL BENEFIT YOU.

WHY SUFFER WHEN LIQUID SPRAY WILL CURE YOU?

Don't take medicine in the stomach to kill germs of catarrh in the head.

LIQUID SPRAY quickly relieves and cures CATARRH, COLDS, PAINS and ROARING in the HEAD, SORE THROAT, HEADACHE PARTIAL DEAFNESS, HAY FEVER, ASTHMA and all diseases of the air cells yield immediately.

LIQUID SPRAY opens the air cells, makes breathing easy, heals the sore places, and penetrates the obscure air cells which medicine taken into the stomach cannot reach.

Our Atomizer spreads the LIQUID SPRAY upon the Mucous Membrane where it is absorbed. While this process is going on, it becomes very volatile and natural breathing carries the excess medication to all the air cells of the head, throat and lungs, destroying the germs of disease. It is more than one hundred per cent better than any Inhaler ever made.

Any child can use it. It is the most effective treatment ever offered, and to prove it, we will mail it on trial FREE.

OUR SPECIAL OFFER:

I will mail any reader of The Progressive Thinker, my Liquid Spray treatment on FIVE DAYS' trial FREE. If it gives satisfaction send me $2.00, (two-fifths regular price to introduce it), if not, return it at the expired time, which will cost you only 12 cents postage and you will not owe me a penny. If you want the best treatment for the above diseases at my special offer, this is your only chance. ORDER TO-DAY. Address,

E. J. WORST,

15 ELMORE BLOCK, ASHLAND, OHIO.

This announcement is made expressly for the readers of The Progressive Thinker and their friends, and we shall hope to hear from many of you Spiritualists. We will try to treat you so our acquaintance will be a mutual benefit.

We can furnish thousands of testimonials like those we offer, but they will not cure you. You must try the treatment yourself to get a benefit.

TESTIMONIALS:

Prof. E. S. Nason of Germantown, Phila., writes: I have received and tested the Inhaler. I am happy to say, the longer I use it the more I esteem and consider it the most effectual treatment I have ever used for catarrh and lung affections. It has relieved a constant cough I have had for eight years.

J. E. Edwards of Water Valley, Ky., writes: More than a year ago I bought one dozen Inhalers of you. I take pleasure in say to you that in every case where I sold the Inhalers, they have done great service to the afflicted, so I will order more.

Mr. H. V. Hawkins of Algona, Iowa, writes: I have been using your Catarrh Inhaler which I consider a little wonder. I have had catarrh for seven years and have taken so many remedies that I had become discouraged. I am almost deaf, but your inhaler is restoring my hearing and stopping the discharges. I would not take $25 for the Inhaler.

Mr. F. I. Ward of Bristol, Vt., writes: I have given your Catarrh Inhaler a pretty thorough trial, and am satisfied that it is all you claim it to be. It has helped my catarrh and also my deafness. I can hear my watch tick in my pocket now, and before I could not. I broke up a severe cold with it.

Mr. J. Johnson of Seattle, Wash., writes: I have received your Inhaler and am much pleased with it. It is worth ten times more than it cost me.

Henry Harter of Huntington, Ind., writes: I received your Inhaler and find it all right. I have used it one day and a half. I can now hear a clock tick six feet away; before using your Inhaler I had to hold it up to my ear to tell whether it was going. I want the agency for this county.

Wm. H. Coalwell of Toledo, Ohio, writes: After one week's trial of your Catarrh Inhaler, no money could buy it if I could not get another.

Mr. W. F. Menther of Flemingsville, Iowa, writes: We are using your Catarrh Inhaler, and find it above its recommendations.

I. W. Parks of Fair Haven, Va., writes: I received the Inhaler and broke up a cold in two days. It is worth three times what you ask for it.

Henry M. Tower of Spencer, Mass., writes: I regard your Inhaler the best, if not the very best I have used for many years. After some forty years of experience with asthma, I think I have found an absolute specific in your remedy.

Rev. C. H. Hodges of Coalport, Pa., writes: I have received your Catarrh Inhaler, and find it an excellent thing for catarrh and nervous headache, and can cheerfully recommend it. It is, in fact, the best Inhaler I ever saw.

Rev. Albert Egli of Elgin, Ill., writes: I will let you know that after using the Inhaler one week I got my hearing back again, for which I feel very thankful.

Mrs. Cornelia Belder of Jackson, Tex., writes: Your Inhaler has come to hand and my daughter is using it for deafness. When she began using it she could not hear the clock tick unless she was quite near it. Now she can hear it tick fifteen feet away. I enclose you a dollar for the Inhaler.

Mr. Wm. Chapple of Vendalis, Mich., writes: I enclose $2 for the Medicator. Sickness prevented me from sending it at the end of three days' trial. The Inhaler is doing so much good, and I would not take $20 for it if I could not get another.

"I have had chronic catarrh for twenty years," says Mr. H. Fulmer of Menger, Colo., "and bronchial trouble for at least twenty-five years, and after a month's use of the Inhaler my catarrh is virtually gone. Before using the Inhaler I had discharges from my nostrils every morning, sometimes as large as my little finger. My throat is much improved and I think by perseverance that the Inhaler will effect a cure."

H. Summers of Aguilar, Col., writes: I have been using your Inhaler for about one month. I have had catarrh and throat trouble for about eight years and spitting of the blood in the mornings, which has entirely ceased, and I cannot praise it too highly.

Robert Jaap of Aguilar, Colo., writes: I have been using your inhaler for about three months for bronchial asthma and have derived more benefit from its use than all other preparations combined that I have ever used, and their name is legion. I consider your Inhaler worth many times its weight in gold.

Minnie Collins of Haynes, Ala., writes: Enclosed find price of the Inhaler. I have been using it for three weeks, and would not take $1,000 for it if I could not get another. I can sing again, something I have not been able to do for two years. I always had to stop singing to clear my throat. My husband is surprised at my improvement.

W. H. Baker of Richland, Kans., writes: I received your Inhaler Feb. 1, and I am more than pleased with it. It has done me more good in three days' time than any other remedy I have ever used. I would not sell it at any other price if I could not get another one. I enclose you the price for two more treatments.

J. D. S. Atkins of Durham, N. C., writes: I enclose $2 for the Medicator. It is the best thing for Catarrh I ever saw. I have used many other remedies, but your Medicator is worth more in three days than others in three months.

AUSTRALIAN LIFE TABLETS.

We are now sending with each Corona a package of this great Kidney and Rheumatic remedy, free when requested. Don't fail to mention it when you write. It is the remedy that Mr. Taber speaks of in his letter.

AGENTS WANTED.

Extract From A. L. Taber's Letter:

Ashland, Oregon, May 23, 1904.
Mr. E. J. Worst, Ashland, Ohio:

Dear Mr. Worst:—I enclose express order for another lot of Medicators and Tabloids. I am selling more of your goods now than ever before. The Tabloids are selling much better than formerly. I have made $76.30 in the last four days, retailing to individual customers. I can make $20 more Friday and Saturday.

(Signed) A. L. TABER.

P. S.—Mr. Taber has been selling our Medicators and Tabloids for four years in California and Oregon. He has sold in this time many thousand dollars worth. He has frequently written me that he seldom makes less than $12 a day. I mention this in addition to an extract from his letter on even date above to show what an agent can do when he gives all his time to the sale of our goods. E. J. WORST.

SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar, HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

A Valuable Work.

Concentration, Meditation and Inspiration. How to develop these desirable gifts according to the most approved methods of ancient and modern teachers, together with a set of six symbols comprising six months' study. By Laura G. Fixen.

A course of practical experimental lessons, of especial value and assistance to those who desire to be benefited by the development of powers of concentration of thought, clear meditation and superior inspiration.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M. D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

A Great Scientist.

GENERATES ANIMAL LIFE.

As set forth in the Daily Chicago American, the development of the highest forms of animal life only awaits the control of certain vibrations of cosmic luminiferous ether, and that correct compounding of chemicals will arrest and control these vibrations, is asserted by Dr. Charles W. Littlefield, a local scientist of Anderson, Ind.

And for proof of his idea Dr. Littlefield claims the discovery and generation of animal life in the form of winged insects from chemical solutions. He is giving daily demonstrations of his experiments.

From a viscid, transparent substance for one part, and a clear chemical compound for another, by union of the two compounds Scientist Littlefield declares and presents a demonstration tending to convince even the skeptical that he has created something extraordinary from his solutions.

Dr. Littlefield promises that he will make public his compound in due time. He is constrained to not explain the composition at this time, he states, because it might interfere with further success in his own invention.

During the last three years Dr. Littlefield attracted attention by his claim to generation of life from crystals of salt, which were subjected to a simple compound, the principal parts of which were aqua ammonia, alcohol and distilled water. Having explained that in detail, Dr. Littlefield believed the formula was appropriated by scientists of Berlin, Paris and Rome, who have since heralded a discovery that Dr. Littlefield thinks is none other than his own formula. So, for that reason, he said, he desires to protect his method of producing animal life from chemicals. Placing a few drops of his new solutions on a glass under a microscope, and incasing it on four sides and leaving the top exposed to the microscope, the eye will perceive through the powerful glass innumerable black objects rapidly developing in the drops of chemicals, and soon winged insects fill the case, flying swiftly about as if looking for an exit to freedom.

A period of about one hour is required for the development of the animal life from the fluid after it is placed on a clean plate of glass, incased and put under the microscope.

Dr. Littlefield declares that his insects are not the production of larvae, nor eggs of living creatures that might have come into contact with his chemicals or apparatus.

Dr. Littlefield has written the following explanation for the Chicago American:

By Dr. C. W. Littlefield.

I can produce millions of these insects from a few drops of inanimate matter. Each one has a distinct individuality, and is not in any way dependent on the others for its power of locomotion.

You can see them grow up seemingly from nothing and fly into the air, where they live from a minute to several hours. One colony that was created yesterday lived all night and was as lively as ever this morning.

They do not come from pre-existent forms of life or from eggs of any kind. They have no ancestors other than inorganic matter.

The compounds I have used are all inorganic except the alcohol, which is the only one that contains carbon. This could not contain the germ of life. One peculiar feature that I have noted in this experiment is the fact that these compounds are very liable to spontaneous combustion if the vibrations are below those necessary to produce life. From this stage they gradually cool off until a temperature corresponding to animal life is reached, when the living creatures begin to develop.

About two years ago I gave demonstrations of the resuscitation of animals that were put to death by drowning, by covering them over with a powder charged with magnetism. This same powder in solution is one of the compounds that enter into the production of these living objects. About a year ago I demonstrated that crystals of common salt would develop into living germs when subjected to the same influence for a period of ninety minutes. These facts led me to believe that I had discovered the life principle.

Now, by infusing this same principle into this drop of clear, transparent, waxy substance living forms in the shape of little gnats or winged insects spring from it as if by magic.

What they are I do not know, nor do I know into what they are likely to develop. I expect to make cultures of these to determine whether or not they will propagate. And I will also try to increase their size.

I have a theory in regard to their production. The theory upon which I have worked in all my experiments is this: Some form of motion, generally spoken of as vibrations, underlies every known form of energy. Life is a manifestation of energy. These vibrations manifest themselves to our physical senses. Light, heat, electricity and sound are all produced by vibrations. But we would never know them as such if we did not possess special organs built up in a manner suitable to recognize them. Life also results from the action of certain vibrations on definite compounds of matter.

Viewing life from this standpoint, it may be compared to a musical scale. After we strike the key of life in creation's harp, the higher the vibrations the higher the form of life. This I believe to be the cause of the various forms of life that exist on the earth.

When we have learned to control the vibratory movements at will we can produce any form of life we wish. These are deductions that can be legitimately drawn from success already achieved.

At this time I wish to say nothing more than that I am sure that I have produced living forms without the aid of antecedent life.

AXIOMS AND CONCLUSIONS

Resulting From the Processes of Inductive and Deductive Reasoning.

There is one entity which embraces in its part all that is.

In order to identify it, let us call it Matter

It is all that ever was, is, or ever shall be. It is without beginning, present, or ending.

Matter embraces both cause and effect. An effect is indisputable evidence of a cause. To assume anything independent of matter would be to assume something material, which assumption would identify that something as matter.

The attribute identifying matter in any form is continual change. Anything that changes is matter.

There is nothing conceivable that ceases to change. It is impossible to conceive of anything that does not change.

The hardest diamond never has, does not, and never shall exist, but is eternally changing.

The most attenuated gas is continually changing—even when apparently confined it is changing just the same.

Motion is universal. Rest for any particle of matter is an impossibility.

A body is said to be at rest when it is not apparently changing position in relation to us, or things about us.

Highly attenuated matter acting upon grosser forms of matter is incorrectly termed force.

To illustrate the various forms taken on by matter, let us take the state of matter called iron, put it in the presence of the vibration of matter called heat. This causes the iron to become liquid, gaseous, and then if unconfined, (excepting air and other invisibles) we may lose track of it, but, whether we see it or not, it passes from so-called gas into more rarefied conditions, continuing indefinitely, even though apparently retarded. Thus, it may assume forms no longer ordinarily recognized as matter, but permeating the grosser forms of itself, and acting upon these forms, is recognized under the misleading term of force.

I do not mean to intimate that this form of matter termed force is something separate or apart from other matter.

Infinite forms of matter permeate and mingle with infinite forms of matter. That which we recognize as visible matter, is that matter capable of affecting our sensations.

But shall we deny the existence of the attenuated gas ether, because we cannot sense it?

There are more attenuated states of matter than ether, and, as there is no beginning nor ending to the circumference of a circle, so there is no ultimate division of matter.

The most powerful telescope conceivable cannot reach the end of space, because there is no end. The fact that there is no beginning is positive evidence that there is no end.

The microscope with the greatest magnifying powers imaginable cannot reveal the ultimate division of matter, because there is no end to the possible divisions of any particle of matter.

Chemists speak of matter as being composed of something less than one hundred elements, because, by no means known to them can these apparently ultimate forms be resolved into any simpler forms.

There is but one element—namely,—Matter.

Various forms of this one element is all that is conceived of.

In one, Matter constitutes both soul and body of the universe.

It cannot be proven that any living individual exists.

A child yesterday, a man to-day, a shadow gone by, to-morrow.

A living or other being exists only in appearance.

I mean to say that there is in the material life of man a constant change of every part of his being. That at no period of his sojourn on this earth can it be said that any part of him ceases to change.

The fact that man is changing is conclusive evidence that he will continue to change.

The fact that he began to be a man is positive proof that he will cease to be a man.

Without any more evidence than is within the comprehension of any man it is self evident that the death of the body no more ends all than did the beginning.

The fact that a man can, and does at times in his life, see, hear and otherwise become impressed with ideas which are not due to any of his five senses, is indisputable evidence of an intelligence outside of the visible body.

For instance, in a dream, we see, hear, feel, taste, smell and move about in an intelligent manner. Yet the visible body is in a comatose state all the while.

To say the images of a dream are not real would be to deny any images at all.

To admit them as tangible is to know a life apart from this life of bodily restrictions.

Word Hearing.

Occult or Supernatural Communion.

The supernormal process known as automatic writing is but one among a series of kindred processes which have played an important part in the religious history of man. Word-hearing, word-seeing and word-uttering are closely allied to word-writing. The fact that communications are written without the conscious participation of the medium is not more wonderful than the fact that words are heard, seen and spoken by others without their conscious mental participation in the acts. If the written communications have a source outside the writer's mind, so may the other forms of verbalization.

If writing without the subject's volition and trance speaking are due, wholly or in part, to the agency of spirits out of the flesh, the same claim may be made for the other processes of automatic expression. An important difference, however, between automatic writing and speaking and word-hearing and word-seeing is this: That the former are active, while the latter are comparatively passive. But in each case the subject may exercise no volition and be conscious of no other participation in the process than serving as an instrument for the hearing, seeing, uttering or writing of words.

The "hearing of voices" is a phenomenon which has been noted in every age. Not infrequently the voices have been, in thought and moral tone, above the level of those who have heard them. Some have heard them from infancy all through their lives, and in adversity or danger more distinctly than at other times. The utterances have been words of warning, of monition, of instruction. The writer has known reliable persons who claimed to hear the voices at times and to have been warned of impending danger or wisely directed by them. One of these persons was the late Joel Tiffany, who wrote works on law which are still used as authorities by the legal profession, and who also had a wide reputation as an inventive genius. He not only wrote automatically whole volumes which were published, but heard voices, belief in the supra-mundane character and in the wisdom of which largely formed his convictions and determined his course of life.

For forty years this man of genius and upright life lived and acted in the fullest confidence that the voices came from intelligences wiser than himself, and at a ripe old age, in the full possession of his faculties unimpaired, he viewed death as a door through which he would pass and meet his friends and helpers face to face.

What is the explanation? It is easy in such cases to allege insanity, but what kind of insanity is that of which its only indication is that the person automatically, as it were, hears a voice which he comes to know by experience expresses larger knowledge and a higher wisdom than he is conscious of possessing?

By such a monitory voice was Socrates, the wisest man of the ancient world, guided in all the affairs of life. He was a man of robust constitution, of physical health, of moral balance. In discussing liberty of thought and speech in his work on "Liberty," John Stuart Mill says of Socrates:

"Born in an age and country abounding in individual greatness, this man has been handed down to us by those who best knew both him and the age, as the most virtuous man in it; while we know him as the head and prototype of all subsequent teachers of virtue, the source equally of the lofty inspiration of Plato and the judicious utilitarianism of Aristotle * * * the two headsprings of ethical as of all other philosophy. The acknowledged master of all eminent thinkers who have since lived—whose fame, still growing after more than 2,000 years, all but outweighs the whole remainder of the names which make his native city illustrious—was put to death by his countrymen, after a judicial conviction, for impiety and immortality. Impiety in denying the gods of the state; indeed his accuser asserted (see "Apologia") that he believed in no gods at all. Immortality in being, by his doctrines and instructions, a "corruptor of youth." Of these charges the tribunal, there is every ground for believing, honestly found guilty and condemned the man who, probably of all then born, had deserved best of mankind, to be put to death as a criminal."

Such is the character of the man who was guided by a voice which he believed was "a divine sign, a prophetic or supernatural voice." Both Xenophon and Plato, who were intimate friends of Socrates, vouch for what he said in regard to his daemon, whose voice was always one of warning and restraint, whose silence meant approval of the philosopher's course. The voice gave proof of sagacity which Socrates always recognized as wise and good, and evincing knowledge not dependent upon his observation and experience, greater than he possessed.

During the series of events that resulted in the philosopher's death the monition was one of silence, except once when it interposed to check his design to prepare a speech in his defense. By sustaining silence the daemon approved those courageous acts and words, since admired and praised by millions, which brought upon him the extreme penalty inflicted by the Dikastery—a penalty which, with but little temporizing, he could easily have escaped.

In his last speech Socrates said: "There has happened to me, O my judges, a wonderful thing. For that accustomed divine intimation in time past came to me very many times, and met me on slight ocasion, if I am about to act in some way not aright, but now this fate which ye behold has come upon me, this which a man might deem and which is considered the very worst of ills. Yet neither when I left my home this morning was I checked by that accustomed sign; nor when I came up hither to the judgment hall; nor at any point in my speech as I spoke. And yet in other speeches of mine the sign has often stopped me in the midst. But now it has not hindered me in any deed or word of mine connected with this present business. What then do I suppose to be the reason thereof? I will tell you. I think it is that what has happened to me has been a good thing; and we must have been mistaken when we supposed that death was an evil. Herein is a strong proof to me of this, for that accustomed sign would assuredly have checked me had I been about to do aught that was evil."

Shall it be said of Socrates, the greatest combination of intellect and virtue of the ancient world, whose profound wisdom during his life and whose philosophical fortitude and serenity under the sentence, and in the hour of death, have commanded the admiration and praise of countless millions, who, since he passed into the unseen realm, have heard the story of his life and death, shall it be said, that he was a victim of hallucination? Were his words and acts that have been thus eulogized, those of a man insane? Is it not more reasonable to believe that his "daemon" represented a higher plane than that of the conscious life which was guided and directed by the mysterious voice which he obeyed, even in the face of physical death? Acquaintance with the character and career of the great thinker and moralist presses upon us the conviction that the monitory voice and the monitory silence came from a supernormal source. If from his own subconscious or subliminal nature what an unexplored and unknown domain of being in man, is implied!

Does the subliminal consciousness acquire knowledge by supernormal means, without using the sensory channels, and at times communicate this knowledge to the ordinary consciousness? Has man a deeper self from which the products of unconscious thought come into the conscious life? Is the unconscious life that converts food into blood and bone and tissue, and skillfully builds up the system and sustains it by wonderful physiological processes, also the source of the most determining mental and moral influences of our lives?

What shall be said of the voices of Jeanne D'Arc, which have attracted attention anew of late years and have been the subject of articles in leading English periodicals? The most careful historical research and the most critical examination of evidence fail to shake the testimony as to the sanity or sincerity of the Maid or the wonderful wisdom, far beyond her years or capacity, of the instructions under which she acted. As a writer in the Quarterly Review says:

"There is not a trace of bodily disease or hysteria in the Maid, unless we call her premonitions a sign of disease. As to the sanity of these 'monitions' they were no less than the expression of military and political genius. They revived and re-united France. Again they were not the manifestations of the Maid's own conscious desires and ideas; for, for four or five years, she resisted the voices, deeming their counsel impracticable, and herself an impossible instrument of so high a destiny. 'I am a girl,' she said, 'and have no skill to ride and fight. Rather would I have been torn to pieces by wild horses than to have gone into France, but for the voices. * * *For to fight is not mon etat, but to sit and spin beside my poor mother.'"

Even to the last, according to the priest who confessed her and stood by her on the pyre. "She averred the divine origin of her voices and denied that they had deceived her."

Was Jeanne D'Arc in her remarkable career guided by voices from some unknown depths of her own being, or did invisible intelligences that belong to another order of existence, direct her life and manifest those powers of sagacity and genius which were so far above the normal capacities of the peasant girl whose highest ambition was to sit and spin at home?

Whatever theory be adopted, here is a class of facts under the name of word hearing, which our physiologies and psychologies do not explain, and which belongs to a field of study that neither extreme skepticism—on the one hand nor unreasoning credulity on the other—should prevent our exploring a field which promises rich results in contributions to knowledge of the human mind.

REFLECTED.

The sun, low sinking in the west,
His eye fell on a golden crest,
Or what to him seemed golden hue,
With intermingled rays of blue,
And fairest glints of dainty green,
Yellow and opals in between;
And the sun said soft, as he passed by,
"Yon hill is bathed in beauty's dye;"
And he never knew, as on he passed,
That 'twas only a hill with crisp brown grass
That the light he cast on the earth below
Had bathed the hill in beauty's glow.

Anon, a cloud all leaden gray,
Sailed slowly by the self-same way,
And glancing downward as she passed,
Espied the hill with the crisp brown grass,
The crest looked black in the shadow she threw
So, seemed but a hill of somber hue,
And she thought, what a dreary, dismal place,
Without tinge of color or beauty, to grace.

DARNEL MEDIUMSHIP.

Jesus' Parable and Its Application to Fake Mediumship.

To the Editor:—I notice an article in your paper, No. 761, from the pen of Daniel Rood, also Jas. C. Underhill, in reference to wheat and tares, and knowing from study that there was a lack of knowledge concerning the Master's parable in reference to the difference between the tares of Palestine and this country, I thought a few words on the subject might not come amiss.

The zizania of the parable (Matt. xiii:25) denotes the weed called darnel (Lolium Temulentum). The darnel before it comes into ear is very similar in appearance to wheat, hence the command that the zizania should be left to the harvest, as there was danger while rooting up the zizania the wheat would be torn up and destroyed also.

Dr. Stanley, however, speaks of women and children picking up from the wheat in the fields of Samaria the tall green stalks (still called by the Arabs, zuwan). These stalks, he claims, if sown designedly throughout the fields, would be inseparable from the wheat, which even while growing is hardly distinguishable at first sight, therefore the grain is just in the proper stage to call forth Jesus' parable, for in those parts where the grain has headed out, the tares have done the same and cannot be mistaken for wheat or barley. But where both are less developed, the closest scrutiny will often fail to detect them—even the farmers of this country would not attempt to separate them. The grain growers of Palestine believe that the Zuwan is merely a degenerate wheat,—that in wet seasons the wheat turns to tares. Dr. Thompson asserts that this is their fixed opinion.

It is curious to observe the retention of the fallacy through the many ages. Wheat and zunin, quoting from the Talmud, are not seeds of different kinds. The Romans seemed to have entertained the same opinion with regards to some of the cereals.

Pliny quoting from Theophrastus claims that barley will degenerate into the oat. The notion that the zizania of the parable are merely diseased or degenerate wheat has been defended by P. Bredorod and strangely adopted by French who regards the distinction of these two plants to be a falsely assumed fact. If the zizania of the parable denote the Lolium Temulentum and there cannot be any reasonable doubt about it, the plants are certainly distinct. It is claimed by the natives of Palestine that the grains of the temulentum if eaten produce convulsions and even death. But be that as it may, the point to be reached is this, that during the early development of the different grains of the eastern countries it is so hard to distinguish between the wheat and tares that they have to allow them to reach their full growth before separation takes place, hence Jesus' parable.

MRS. LOTTIE COLLEEN.

Jacksonville, Fla.

Mrs. Colleen is quite correct in her exposition of the subject, as every well-informed Bible student will acknowledge. Having read the Bible through by course some fourteen times, together with learned commentaries thereon, I think I can say I am not entirely ignorant concerning wheat and darnel, etc. Our sister's really learned and scholarly article helps to brighten up the lore of the subject, and I thank her for it.

The parable is all right, rightly understood and applied. The trouble is in the misapplication.

For instance in the wheat field of spiritual mediumship there has been sown (by the Devil), or has sprung up indigenously, if you will, the darnel of fakism. This darnel has developed until it has literally gone to seed, and should be eradicated—that is, when it becomes plainly apparent that a so-called medium has ripened or developed in the use of stock tests, fraud materializations, etc., it is time to separate such mediums from the genuine mediums and burn them up, root and branch, metaphorically speaking. The time to eradicate them is the time when it becomes positively known that they are frauds, or darnel mediums.

The let-them-alone process never eradicates them—even after they are known to be fully developed and ripened darnel, the cry is: Let them alone.

Is this the true spirit and application of Jesus' parable? Thus understood and applied by this let-alone policy—Jesus never could have uttered the parable, or if he did, he was in error.

But such is the practical interpretation of the parable, given by those who ever stand ready to shield the frauds, by bringing them under the protection of the reputed parable of Jesus—their cry is, ever, Let them alone—Let them alone. No matter how palpable and evident their trickery, deception and fraudulent methods and practices—"Let them alone! Let them alone!"

Darnel, zizania, Canada thistles, chess, cockle, etc., etc., anything that pretends to mediumship, "Let them alone! Let them alone!"

Why not, in consistency, carry the same principle of action into all the affairs of society, and let the thieves, counterfeiters, burglars, alone?

I feel and write earnestly in this matter. Genuine mediumship demands this protection. Fake mediumship serves to cast the dark shadow of doubt and suspicion on all mediums. The true, genuine, honest medium is made to suffer for the sins of the dishonest. The worst enemies of genuine mediums are the clan of fakes who palm off tricks and frauds under the guise of mediumship. Their work inevitably serves to bring mediumship and Spiritualism into disrepute.

Spiritualists owe it to themselves, to the cause, and especially to their true mediums, to get rid of the whole accursed outfit of darnel mediums, so far as may be possible.

Protect the genuine—let no darnel escape.

A QUIET FOURTH OF JULY (1904).

I'll sing on this Fourth of July,
Away from explosions and noise,
On the old farm at home, 'neath the sky's azure dome,
In the heart of the purest of joys.

My band is the wind in the trees,
And the birds which frequent their cool shade;
So I dare sing my song, in a voice brave and strong,
For there's nothing to make me afraid.

I'll twine on the frame of my lyre,
The tenderest flowers in my heart,
Never caring a groat for the cannon's black throat,
Nor man's fire-works of consummate art.

I read of the horrors of war
I hate them, and wish men were wise;
That the tyrants were good, and the right understood,
And grim Greed not a giant in size.

Could I set the pace to advance
I should first move the heads of mankind;
With Love's music sweet I would "lay up the feet
Of the army," to march up Mount Kind.

The great game of murder, named War,
Is hell,—but a pastime for kings;
If her dead could awake, what a host they would make,
To relate diabolical things!

There were millions on millions of horse;
There were billions on trillions of men,
Whom mothers have loved, and their nations approved,
Whose tortures no mortal could pen.

Back! I tire of o'erlooking the world!
Let my thought narrow down to my home,
Where the dead yesterdays, in the jolliest ways
March in, to a tiny toy drum!

The drummer is my little lad;—
And the fire-crackers snapple about;
My two girls join the fun, papa loads up the gun;
Oh, the noise! what a furious rout!

The dog barks, the cat climbs a tree,
The crackers keep snapping around,
The hens think it strange, and keep out of gun-range,
Too nervous to fancy the sound.

That Fourth was some years back, you know—
And where are the children to-day?
Off keeping the Fourth, in the south, and the north,
But loving the old home alway!

THE MYSTERY OF GOOD AND EVIL.

By the Editor of The New York Sun.

This is a bitter and a sacrilegious letter, brought out by the frightful catastrophe of Wednesday; but we are not surprised at receiving it. Many expressions of a like character came to us at the time of the awful destruction of life by the volcanic eruption in Martinique:

"Editor Sun—Sir—: We read to-day of the fate of the school children out for a day of happiness. Is this then an instance of the goodness and loving kindness of God—the most cruel and malignant idol that was ever and is now worshiped? Hundreds of children out for an innocent holiday, and he of whom we are told that he so loved the beings that he had created that he gave up to death his only son for their salvation, permits a thousand of them to die awful deaths for believing in him.

"When will this terrible fraud end, and men be honest for the sake of being honest?

"WILLIAM C. LANDGDON.

"Brooklyn, June 15."

The mystery of human existence, Mr. Langdon, is insolvable by man. Whence comes evil and why did it come under the government of the universe by a personal God described to us in reputed revelation as merciful and of exhaustless loving kindness? These are questions which have never been answered and they never will be answered, for they are unanswerable by man.

Calamities which have befallen men and communities have often been attributed to their wickedness and their unbelief. The death of Tom Paine used to be described by religious writers as peculiarly horrible because of his infidelity. If the calamity of Wednesday had happened to a crowd of excursionists of evil character and evil lives the comment of the religious on it might have, and in many instances it would have, been that it was a judgment of God on people so flagrant in their sinfulness. But here was a party made up of men, women and children of a Sunday-school, brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, profound in their religious belief and assiduous in their religious practice, disciples of a a church peculiarly strong in its adherence to the strict religious faith of the past. Was this a judgment of God?

The ways of God are past finding out, we are told by St. Paul. They are inscrutable. But the ways of nature are discoverable, determinable, foreseeable and preventable. If a child ventures in front of a locomotive it is crushed. If people live on the sides of a volcano they are liable to perish in its eruption, whether believers or unelievers, signally righteous or flagrantly wicked. But here man and man's prudence and science can step in, ward off and prevent the catastrophe. In our public schools crowded with chil... has been perfected a system of fire drill by which the children, from the littlest to the largest, are enabled to escape unharmed, in a few moments, from a fire in the building. If there was no such possible human precaution great numbers of them would always be liable to destruction.

That is all we know, but we know that thoroughly. We know that we must look out for ourselves, that every precaution suggested by science and by experience must be used to prevent panic and save life in a crowd. We know that all possible measures of safety should be provided and taken on a steamboat loaded with passengers—discipline, constant watchfulness and proper construction—and we know that they can be made successful in their employment, except in those rare instances where the cause of disaster seems as unpreventable as it is undiscoverable.

Mr. Langdon puts on God the responsibility for the General Slocum disaster, but actually the responsibility was altogether human. Is not God responsible for the laches of his creatures, and how can mercy and loving kindness in him be reconciled with their suffering and death if they violate nature's laws?

That is a mystery, Mr. Langdon, and the world of civilization is no nearer to its solution to-day than was the first savage in the form of man.

THE OCCULT WORLD.

Do the Dead Revisit Us?—A Discussion and Experiences Tending to Show That They Do Sometimes.

"I have had only one experience in telepathy," said the man, "but that was a strong one. I ran away from home when a boy of nine. My father was cruel to me, but I loved my mother dearly. I got on a ship at the Brooklyn docks, bound for I didn't know where. Eventually, after much roaming, I landed at Bombay, where I became a printer's devil on a small paper.

"I was taken ill there of fever, so ill that I thought I was at the point of death. That night it was very hot, but somehow I got out of bed and stood at the lattice of the open window.

"That was some seven years after I had run away from home, but I had never once forgotten my mother. She was my idol. I prayed to her. In my troubles I talked aloud to her, and she must have heard me; for though all the rest had long before given me up for dead, she would never believe it.

"Well, as I stood there I said to her that I was sorry I had left her and caused her so much unhappiness. That now that I was about to die, I wanted her to understand that. I wanted her to know, too, that I had always loved her.

"Just then it became a little light in the east and there began to be a breeze, cooling the intensity of the heat. I heard her voice at the same time saying as plainly as I am talking to you now:

"'You will not die.'

"Then it was as if she kissed me as I stood there.

"I got well and went home to her. She told me the day and the hour that I stood at the lattice in India talking to her and her answer to me."

"I believe in such things," said the Psychic Woman, "and also in the nearness of the soul or spirit to earth and loved ones immediately after death, particularly in the case of those who die suddenly. Not long ago a friend, a young man, came to see me. He was the wreck of himself. His eyes were hollow, his face haggard.

"'What in the world has changed you so?' I asked him.

"'This,' he answered. 'My best friend died suddenly and he has been haunting me. I see him near me always, and I wish he would rest in his grave and quit haunting me.'

"I know all about that. I knew a man of such splendid physique that you would have thought, to look at him, that he would live forever. He was taken with appendicitis and died in three days.

"He had beautiful auburn hair—a splendid mass of it, as thick as could be. He used to sit, when living, in a certain chair when he called on me, and the sunshine coming in at the window made a soft flame of his hair. I used to go to the head of the stairs and watch him come up, his fine hair gleaming in the dusk of the stairway.

"For weeks after he died, whenever I entered the room I could see him in that chair with the sunlight on his hair. Whenever I went out and looked down the stairway, I could see the shine of his beautiful hair as he came up. You may call it nervousness or the effect of my constant thought of him, but as for me, I believe the spirit of him was there.

"One proof, to my mind, is this story of an old manor house that belonged to an army officer who had rented it and gone to India. The house was in the suburbs of London. The officer had lost an arm.

"A girl whose father had rented the manor house was stricken with the kodak fever. She took pictures of the house, one room after another, until she had taken them all. Then she took the films to a London photographer to be developed and printed. After a week or so she called for them.

"'They are very good,' said the photographer, 'with the exception of one that is a little dim—the one of the one-armed man who is sitting in the library by the table.'

"'What one-armed man?' she asked in amazement. 'There wasn't a single soul in any room when I took the pictures. Not a soul.'

"'There was a man in the library,' reiterated the photographer, 'for here is the picture of him.'

He brought out the picture of the library, and there was the one-armed man sitting sadly there by the table. Upon investigation it was found that the owner of the house, the one-armed army officer, had died suddenly in India on the day on which she had photographed his home.

"Was there anything more natural than that his soul should come back on a visit to his old home the moment it was freed from his body? Or that my friend's soul should come back and visit me?"—New York Sun.

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

Mrs. Catharine McFarlin Gives Her Views.

Mrs. McFarlin is prominent as a lecturer and a medium in the West, and is highly respected for her many sterling qualities. She was present when Mrs. Griffen, the materializing medium, was exposed in Milwaukee, Wis. She (Mrs. Griffen) was found with a complete outfit of artificial toggery that she used to deceive the public. The exposure was complete, and the circle was so indignant that they raised the "cry of fraud!" Can the National Spiritualists Association, aided by all the state associations, prevent the "cry of fraud" under such most lamentable circumstances; or can they in any case suppress the "cry of fraud," where fraud really exists? To suppress the "cry of fraud" where fraud really exists, would be like suppressing crime without arresting the criminal. Mrs. McFarlin gives an account of some wonderful spirit manifestations. The truth in all cases will prove triumphant.

Since there has been such an array of able argument, both pro et con, of late upon the question of fraud and the Blue Book and materialization, I feel it my duty to add my mite as a testimonial to the cause we so dearly love, and are striving to defend, and weed out, which some are so fearful that we will kill on account of this cleansing process.

The way we make our gardens grow and develop their profits, is by tearing out the weeds, and I say, let us not be afraid, but go on with the cleansing; for, as to there being fraud in the name of Spiritualism, it is too glaring a fact to be denied. I have not only discovered it in materialization, but in many of the so-called test seances.

For instance, when I attended the expose of Mr. Griffen and his wife and saw the array of cheesecloth and turkey feathers, it was enough to convince me of the fraudulent work of these people, yet, sad to say, I believe they are mediums; and can at times give genuine manifestations—and that the pity of it! Heavenly gifts are so often possessed by persons without any moral conscience.

It has also been, either my good or ill fortune, to once upon a time lecture upon the platform with a test medium following me with his messages, or tests as they were called, of whom I was certain he mixed fraudulent work in with his genuine, for where there was a large crowd of strangers he would give the same old tests over and over again to the same persons, and they were Spiritualists (or so-called) who would say, "Good, good; that's fine," etc., instead of taking him to one side and telling him, "Now here, that won't do. People have heard these same things too many times here." Of course, the strangers in the audience would say, "Isn't that wonderful for him to call names in that way!" And I would sit and think, "Old chestnuts!"

I have never seen a bound volume called the "Blue Book," but I have seen and had offered me what was akin to it, and that was whole lists of leaflets with names to use for test-giving following my lectures. Perhaps I should not give this thing away, but I AM SO DISGUSTED WITH THIS DAMNABLE WORK.

I was told by a medium who can make hundreds of dollars to my one cent, and many people know he mixes his work, yet they chase after him as though he were a god. Good Spiritualists, too, they are, and he drinks and is uncouth in many other ways.

I was told if I did not accept the list of names to create a sensation the first evening I couldn't get an audience and I would never "get rich." Well, I had a respectable audience, but to be sure not as large as he can draw; but I am one who prefers quality to quantity anyway. To be sure I am not rich, and have no gems to flash before the eyes of my audience, as many are attracted more by what they see than hear.

BUT I HOPE I HAVE STRUNG A FEW PEARLS ON THE GOLDEN THREAD OF TRUTH, AND AS I PASS ALONG THE PATHWAY TO ETERNITY I MAY GATHER SOME GEMS THAT MOTH AND RUST CAN NOT CORRUPT, NOR THIEVES BREAK IN AND STEAL.

And now as to materialization. I know it is a fact, else I don't know anything, and the senses I have always relied upon since my consciousness took place are not to be depended upon in any matter of observation.

About twelve years ago I was then a resident of Winona, Minn., and at that time there was a little lady by the name of Sieverson, who lived, or rather, boarded in Madison, Wis., who unexpectedly blossomed out into the most wonderful versatile phenomenal medium I have ever seen. It was like this: She and her husband were boarding with a lady who was a strong Spiritualist, and had a niece who was a rapping medium. The niece visited her aunt while they were there and they held seances, and were informed that Mrs. Sieverson was the most wonderful instrument they had ever found, and wanted her to sit with this lady. She did so, and they soon found she was possessed of the gift of rapping much stronger than the niece, and had also the gifts of independent slate and letter writing, independent voices, the moving of furniture and physical objects without the touch of hands, and playing upon musical instruments the same; and last, but not least materialization, and the little lady was so ignorant of Spiritualism that she did not even know the definition of the word, nor the word mediumship.

A gentleman friend of ours living in Winona, who was superintendent of the frieght department of the L. & W. R. R., learned of her through her husband and other railroad men, as her husband was a railroad agent in Madison, and he attended a session and was so carried away he induced her to come to Winona, which she did, accompanied by her husband, coming in on Saturday evening, expecting to return Monday morning. So she brought with her only a small hand-bag containing her night apparel. I speak of this in detail so the reader may know she could not have had much of any paraphernalia with her.

On Sunday morning Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Miller, and my husband and myself formed around the dining-room table for a slate writing seance with her, she using a slate the children had brought from school. Laying on it a pencil about three inches long, she then pressed the slate lying on the palm of her right hand up against the under side of the bed of the table with her left hand always upon the top of the table in full view of the sitters; no cloth upon the table, the window curtains raised very high and allowing different ones of the sitters to put their hand right over her hand that held the slates. We were all, I believe, moved to tears when we heard the loud rappings as though made with a sledge, indicating to remove the slates. She did so, and there were these words, in a large legible hand: "Good morning, friends; we come to greet you," and this message was followed by a list of names covering the whole slate, names of friends we had nearly forgotten, and none of us were asked to write a name of any friends at the beginning of the sitting. In the afternoon there were twenty-two sitters present. The large oak dining-room table was used, stretched out to full length, and loud rappings came on one end of the table and a regular telegraph ticking came at the other end. Two telegraph operators being present then, they took down the messages. Then we all moved away from the table and it rolled back and forth from one side of the room to the other as though it had been a toy.

We next held materializing seances. The first evening the skeptics present were not wholly satisfied, as during the seance a hand and arm came out from the curtain with a plain gold ring on the third finger, and it was seen that the medium wore a plain gold ring on her third finger. Mrs. Sieverson insisted that they all come the next evening and place her under the strictest test conditions, which they did; these were suggested by herself. She took off her gold ring, one of the sitters wearing it. She then drew on a pair of black gloves, insisting the skeptics sew them firmly, overcasting them to the bottom of the sleeves, with double white thread; then she would have her hands tied behind her, her body tied to the chair, her ankles tied together and the end of the rope held outside by one of the skeptics, coins placed upon the toes of her shoes. The skeptics searched the parlor that was used as her cabinet, and sealed the doors and windows.

The circle of about twelve was formed about the archway that led into the parlor close up to aperture which was round at the top, the curtains running straight across, that left a place for a good deal of light to shine over the curtains into the parlor. Remember she had no lantern-shaded light to be raised or lowered, but there was a four-gas-burner chandelier in the sitting room right where the circle was formed, and they were all lighted and not even lowered.

Mr. Foster began playing softly upon his guitar, and a sound come from the parlor of a heavy pair of clogs, dancing, keeping time with the music, and the skeptical gentleman who held the rope was heard to say, "My God, this rope doesn't even quiver." Then the next thing a pair of large white hands with black coat sleeves and white cuffs surrounding the wrist, picked up the curtain, lifting it away up over the medium so we could all see her, and remained long enough for us all to see well, and then dematerialized, and the curtain dropped. Then eight hands came out at different places around the curtain at once; one hand as though it belonged to a giant; another tiny hand as of a baby, and all sizes between, some white, delicate, dimpled hands; some coarse, red, large-boned and knotty hands. Next, to our surprise, came out the hand and bare arm to the shoulder of the night before, with the plain gold ring on the third finger, and as though to condemn us for doubting, protruded that finger away out from the hand and wiggled it.

Then came out a lady's hand and wrist, and a gentleman in the circle cried out his departed wife's name, for there was her hand, with two little jeweled rings upon her finger, a fac-simile of the rings she was buried in.

Who shall say that the ring-makers who have gone to the world beyond shall not be making rings and ornaments there to adorn the lovers of ornaments. I hope so, as I am not rich and can't yet afford much more than brass jewels, and I may sometime flash diamonds and pearls over there; but I must proceed.

The next on the scene was the etherealization of the busts of persons, the head, arms and all being well formed, but the bust resting upon a misty cloud; the first was the form of a beautiful blonde woman, her eyes were very blue and gleamed with light; she smiled at us, her hair was loose and fluffy. The next was that of a clear-type brunette; her hair done up at the back with a Grecian coil. She was clothed in a fleecy garment of almost pearl color. The next was the bust of a man, very black hair, mustache and goatee. He was clothed in black coat, vest cut low, and immaculate shirt front, with black neck-tie. I mention this matter of their clothing, for it is such a comfort to know that we can have real clothes to wear in the spirit world, and won't be obliged to go about with just one white fleecy robe on forever and ever.

Think of the monotony of it! No new dress to hope for; nothing to long for to give one even a change of countenance; nothing to develop the artistic genius burning in the soul for expression. Such an idea is simply preposterous and absurd. No, indeed, they do have an opportunity to work out the desires of the soul in many ways, and I feel absolutely certain of it. I have been in the spirit spheres beyond too many times to be deceived; had too many experiences as lessons given, of viewing scenes in the spirit life, to be mistaken, for I have had repeated soul flights of which I may write sometime in the future.

But I am running rampant. What became of this little medium? She stayed all the next week at our importuning, and gave us other startling phenomena.

One evening we sat around the table the spirit requesting us, through the slates, to let them carry something under the table. This we did and placed one hand on the table, the other in our laps, the gas turned on full blaze. Mr. F. took his watch and it was carried from one end of that long table to the other. Fearing they might drop it he took a little silver stamp case and no one got it, yet it left his hand. We thought they dropped it, and got down under the table to find it, but to no avail. Mrs. S. then held the slate to know where it was. They said, "we have hid it in the parlor," which was the second room from us and we began the search and found it tucked in a ribbon loop of a tidy on an upholstered chair.

She next laid the pencil on the slate, asking them for another message before closing. Soon she opened the slates, the pencil was gone, so the children found another piece of pencil. She tried it again, and begged them to tell us what they had done with it, and they said, "You will find it over to Mrs. Miller's, upstairs in the dresser under a cushion." Mrs. M. lived in the next block, and on investigation we found it there.

Mr. Sieverson's folks went to Minneapolis or some other place after that. I have forgotten at just what place this happened now. But the spirits wrote upon the slates the number of a house and name of a street Mr. S. was not familiar with; that he should go there and ask the gentleman living there to dig down about 18 inches, so many inches on some side of a rose bush. I forget the direction also. He hated to, but being determined to prove the truth to his own satisfaction did so, asking how much the man would charge him. The gentleman became interested in so strange a procedure and said, "Nothing, if you will take up the sod and replace it." He did so, and found buried jewels belonging to persons who lived there long before, who were then in spirit life.

Mr. S. once found a valuable set finger ring. They wrote upon the slates the name of the owner, giving street and number; he went to investigate and found, sure enough, the ring from which the set was lost. I could fill a small volume of these remarkable phenomena, but must cease as I fear this letter will be too long.

But I must not close without telling what became of Mrs. S. Soon after we had those delightful seances, she was called upon by nature to perform the divine and exalted mission of motherhood, and as I learned about a year ago was living in some place in Ohio, with her husband and little family of children, and her mediumship seemed to have left her, or it might only be suspended by the spirit world for a time until she had fulfilled her other duty. So to all who are skeptical about materealization I will say: I have no doubt of that any more than of my own existence since that time.

CATHARINE M. FARLIN.

Prominent Lecturer Speaks Highly of Mr. Hale

A PROMINENT SPEAKER GIVES HIS VIEWS.

D. W. Hull steps to the front and gives our readers something about mediumship and that $1,000 offer of Mr. Hale, of Los Angeles, Cal. Speaking of those who are infesting our ranks and presenting bogus materializations, he says: "It was a very sad experience, and the person who will play spirit and try to pass him or herself off as a dear loved relative is entirely devoid of conscience. The man or woman who will take one's money without giving a just equivalent IS A THIEF; but the man or woman who will take one's money, under the pretense of parading their loved before them IS A GHOUL, and has no right to live in a civilized country. And this is just what has been done time and again here in Los Angeles; but it will not occur again until after Bro. Hale dies, or leaves the city."

We have had considerable discussion pro et con concerning Brother Hale's offer of $1,000 for a genuine materialization. It is an all-sided question, but if I was a materializing medium and acquainted with Bro. Hale, I should accept it; but if I did not know him, very likely I should turn it down, as mediums seem to be doing. But I should not turn it down on any such excuses as are being put up.

We are unctiously told with an apparent tremor of voice, and tear-dimmed eyes, that the cause is too sacred to be trifled with in any such manner; that materializing mediums never should make merchandise of their gifts, etc. We all know that such excuses are mere apologies. Materializing mediums are not usually so indifferent to the accumulation of a little lucre. There may be, and no doubt there are, some who refuse to receive compensation for their contributions toward the evidences of a continued life after so called death, but the majority of them run the business for "what there is in it," and that they have little other interest in the cause than what they can get out of it, is manifest by the little interest they take in the work of our camp-meetings where they are always in attendance, their absence from all the lectures, the conference meetings, and their apparent contempt of all but their own seances. They seldom give any evidence of being actuated by any but selfish interests. I say this with pain. Their lugubrious affectation of conscientiousness on a matter of receiving money for their business sounds strange in the face of the fact that were Spiritualism not their stock in trade, no one could ever find out that they were Spiritualists.

But as I said, if I did not know Bro. Hale and know him to be a fair-minded, sincere person, I should turn down his offer, too, and those versed in psychic science know why, though they may not be able to make it plain to people who live in the material altogether. This offer, though NOT SO INTENDED, seems a harpoon, or at least a prize. To beat in any game or to win any prize requires the putting forth of some energy, and we all know that cannot be done in mediumship without destroying its object. Many of our fakes have considerable mediumship, but at times for some reason the manifestations do not seem as good as they should be, and then they bring their efforts to the rescue. Sometimes I hear a medium describing a spirit giving so much that it is easily recognized, when the query comes, just to see what the medium can do, "Can the spirit give his name?" The great unattached simpletons ought to know that such a request would call forth an effort from the medium which would break the spirit away, so that it would be difficult to get as good results as if the mediums were left to themselves. There is no occasion for asking for a name at any time as the name will be given if possible.

In accepting a challenge, one finds it difficult to assume a negative condition or render himself passive, and as we suppose the other party to be positive and against us, we take the opposite extreme and render ourselves as positive the other way.

Indeed, one of the objections to mediumship in the work entitled "The Great Psychological Crime," of which so much has been said in The Progressive Thinker, is that the mediums must subordinate themselves to whatever influence may be introduced from the spirit world, and thus the individuality would be lost. The medium would find it a very difficult task to remain passive while in a contest, or meeting what appears to be a challenge. It would be difficult for one to go to sleep under such circumstances, unless one was so exhausted he could not remain awake.

But let me assure my psychic readers that this offer is made in NO DEFIANT OR BRAGGADOCIO SPIRIT. It is true that Mr. Hale, once a firm adherent to the materializing phase of psychic manifestations, now has no faith in it whatever. But this disbelief does not prevent fairness and candor on his part. The offer is made in good faith, and he would be pleased to see some one become entitled to the one thousand dollars. If the offer is not accepted it leaves every materializing medium under suspicion; for ordinary people will not stop to think of the embarrassments mentioned above. But the moment a medium appears to accept the offer, even though he fail to obtain the money, he removes that suspicion. He gives us reason to believe that he thinks he occasionally has such manifestations, and he will be credited with honesty, though he may be mistaken about his gifts. Bro Hale is not prejudiced; he will deal fairly with any one who comes to try for the $1,000, and he will give him a reasonable number of seances, treat him as a gentleman, or her as a lady, impose no obnoxious conditions on him, nor humiliate him in any way. All he will require is that he shall eliminate the possibility of fraud. This may be done by putting the medium in a wire cage, or simply tacking mosquito netting over him, or some other manner, and if even a babe is materialized he will be satisfied. I will guarantee that any materializing medium will find Brother Hale reasonable and even pliable. I realize that mediums think Brother Hale is only one man, and that it would be folly to go a long way to satisfy him, and I also realize that it would not shut the mouth of cavilers if Brother Hale should be convinced and that prejudiced men who do not want to believe would continue to carp. But we should remember that unless the offer is accepted, all the materializing mediums of the country will lie under suspicion, and that to save their reputations some one should throw himself into the breach, and that honest men will accept the test as a finality. As to dishonest men, Spiritualism has no use for them.

Bro. Hale has reason for his unbelief. He has been so unfortunate as to have been a firm, credulous believer in all manifestations of that kind. What purported to be his friends, he learned in time was the medium. His apples of Sodom, beautiful to the eye, turned to ashes on his lips. It was a very sad experience, and the person who will play spirit and try to pass him or herself off as a dear loved relative is entirely devoid of such a thing as conscience. The man or woman who will take one's money without giving a just equivalent IS A THIEF; but the man or woman who will take one's money, under the pretense of parading their loved before them IS A GHOUL, and has no right to live in a civilized country. And this is just what has been done time and again here in Los Angeles; but it will not occur again until after Bro. Hale dies, or leaves the city.

Hoping that this presentation of the subject may induce some honest medium to accept Bro. Hale's offer, I close.

DANIEL W. HULL.

ANOTHER CHALLENGE.

In Which Money Plays an Important Part.

To the Editor:—I am a subscriber and reader of your paper, and as such I have been noticing the many articles therein the last few weeks from various persons, asking why some medium does not take up the $1,000 offer by Mr. Hale and his associates of Los Angeles for the materialization of one spirit form.

For the benefit of these various persons who have been urging some medium to take up his offer I would state that as yet I have failed to see any article wherein Mr. Hale or his associates makes any stipulated proposition. It is customary as a rule where a person offers $1,000 for a certain thing for them to set forth all of the conditions and requirements, and to place their $1,000 in escro in some bank for a given period of 30 or 60 days, as the case may be, for some medium to reply to. As the matter has ameared so far in The Progressive Thinker, it has been nothing but a wind proposition.

I have known of a great many making like propositions, but when it came to putting up the money they always had it so fortified with such absurd conditions that no medium would pay any attention to it.

The writer is acquainted with a medium of this city for whom he will make the following proposition, which, it seems to me, ought to satisfy any fair-minded person. The medium and myself, with his wife, will meet Mr. Hale and his associates at such a time as may be mutually agreed upon in Denver, Colo., and upon meeting there both parties are to select a room or rooms which may be mutually agreed upon by both parties for the holding of the seances, which are to be three in number on different evenings of a stated week, as may be agree upon, and the circle is to consist of ten or twelve selected and agreed upon by both parties, and all must sit in the circle and comply with the rules observed by the medium in holding the seances, which rules will be no more than to require all in the circle to remain quiet and to create no disturbance nor be under the influence of any intoxicating liquor or narcotics during the time the medium is in trance.

Under the above conditions and others which are to follow in this article we will meet Mr. Hale and his associates and agree to produce not only one form, but from three to twenty forms under the following conditions: The entire number of people who are to sit in the circle of such a committee as they may appoint, are to lock and bar all windows and doors of the room or rooms in which the seance is held to their entire satisfaction, so that they can feel assured beyond a doubt and be able to make oath that no person or persons could gain access to the room or rooms without their knowledge. Second, they can disrobe the medium so far as his street clothes are concerned and request him to attire himself in another suit or robe which may be furnished. Third, if they so wish they can cover the medium and the chair in which he sits with mosquito-bar, nailing the same to the floor, so that they may know that it is impossible for him to leave the chair in which he is sitting, or if they wish to forego this last precaution, then in that case we will agree that the medium will be brought by one of the spirit forms out into the circle room, so that both the medium and the spirit form will be in plain view of all in the circle room and the medium at least recognized by every one.

We will further agree that should we fail to produce spirit forms as stated herein under these conditions, then in that case we will pay the expenses of Mr. Hale and his associates from Los Angeles to Denver and return, and all hotel bills while there, and upon an article of agreement being signed by both parties we will place in some bank here in escro which may be agreed upon the money to defray these expenses and to be turned over to Mr. Hale, in case we do not fulfill our part of the agreement, and on the other hand we request and demand of Mr. Hale to place $1,000 in good and lawful money in some bank in escro with an agreement which both parties are to sign and said bank is to hold said $1,000, and upon our fulfilling our part of the contract and the bank having been so notified by at least three parties under oath who occupied seats in the circle, then they are to turn the $1,000 over to us.

If Mr. Hale will not accept of the above proposition, and is so confident of his opinion being correct, that spirit forms do not return and can not be produced, then I will make him the following proposition, which must be accepted within 20 days after the publication of this notice: I will bet him $2,000 cash that we will produce from 3 to 20 forms at a circle under the conditions named above; or if he prefers it, we will have the medium sitting in the circle room in plain sight of every one in the circle, instead of having him sit in the cabinet, and that we will have spirit forms dematerialize in the circle room right before his own eyes, if he so desires; but this circle is to be held in Toledo, Ohio. I will agree in writing that if I win the money (which I surely will) I will donate $1,500 of it toward a building fund for a home or place of meeting for Spiritualists.

Now if Mr. Hale really means business I should like to see the color of his money.

Thanking you in advance for the courtesy of publishing this in your next issue, I remain Yours truly,

W. F. SHAW.

TO WOMEN WHO DREAD MOTHERHOOD

Information How They May Give Birth to Happy, Healthy Children Absolutely Without Pain—Sent Free.

No woman need any longer dread the pains of child-birth, or remain childless. Dr. J. H. Dye has devoted his life to relieving the sorrows of women. He has proved that all pain at childbirth may be entirely banished, and he will gladly tell you how. You do not obligate yourself in any way, nor do you incur any expense to Dr. J. H. Dye, 154 Lee's Block, Buffalo, N. Y., and he will send you, prepaid, his valuable book which tells how to give birth to happy, healthy children, absolutely without pain; also, how to cure rupture. Do not delay, but write to-day.

Turn On the Searchlight.

Turn on the searchlight until that which has so long been concealed in mediumship shall be revealed to light.

As a reader of The Progressive Thinker, being one of its earliest subscribers, I wish to join with its many readers who, like myself, sent out a feeling of thankfulness towards its editor who dares open up his columns for the hearing of all sides of a question, thus giving to his hearers food for thought, which is the true propelling power that leads to investigation.

No subject ought to be of greater import to Spiritualists, and none ought to be more openly discussed than mediumship. Those just coming into the line of investigation are kept in ignorance as to its laws, etc., and are prone to accept all that any individual cares to thrust upon them, as coming from soul excarnate.

Demand proof as to the identity of the spirit manifesting. If there can be no living proof established, at least do the departed spirit justice by showing to the world they have not deteriorated in their intellectual development.

Mrs. Laura M. Hyland of Sawtelle, has stirred up a hornet's nest through her giving away the secret of how to materialize "genuine material spooks," such as Elsie Reynolds and many more produce at so much per head.

Yet the result of her deception has been the means of ridding Los Angeles at least of most of its fakes. Los Angeles' field is no worse nor better as to its mediums, false and true. Mrs. Hyland makes a great sweeping statement by taking in the whole as being unable to prove their claims. While it is an easy matter to cry fraud, my theory has ever been, prove the claim; if true, proclaim in defence of the medium; if false, likewise speak of it, so that others may be guided aright. I never recommend nor endorse any medium whom I know to have once deceived.

I will conclude with a few eye-openers to those who have not as yet been initiated. Let us all speak of what we know though the heavens fall.

Weigh all that purports to be from the spirit world.

Don't think spirit all-wise.

Do all your own business or financial engineering. If you don't you may get advice satisfactory from spirits a few times and finally be trapped.

Never think any spirit is going to put you on to where to locate a gold mine, or find an oil well, through any medium. If this could be done the medium, rest assured, wouldn't be long in locating it for his or her own personal gain, for they are human.

Never believe that any medium can develop you; the gift is not bought. If the gift is in you, sit at home. Their purses will develop while yours will diminish; yet, if you need to have the experience, try it.

Beware of the person who would have all join hands, especially in a dark circle. It invariably results in the medium loosing one hand and substituting that of the person sitting next, using the hand for your spiritual demonstration. This is also done many times where three sit before the cabinet with curtain stretched across, exposing their heads.

Flowers and a dove materialized after the medium had been examined by a committee of ladies before entering the cabinet and the medium wearing the petticoat of one of the committee, while she, the lady, remains in hiding—depend on it the dove and flowers have been in the lady's skirt, she who was one of the committee; 'tis she who is capable of throwing the rest completely off the track. Old stale flowers, and the same dove were produced nightly for a week in this city last winter. I presume these parties are touring all the states as they are recommended by many spiritualists as being perfectly wonderful; they also gave materialization that was so material it remained in their trunks after they left them in my home city, Evansville, Ind., for a board bill some years ago.

Make your own spirit pictures by taking any ordinary picture in newspaper or almanac. Frank Donovan used both. Outline these carefully with an indelible pencil; then wet handkerchief of muslin; put on solid surface; turn your picture face downward and press with the hand, then raise gently, when lo! you have a picture of your spirit father or mother, etc. It was my lot to be thus deceived as I kept under cover the picture of what I felt was the picture of a deceased nephew. I, however, found its counterpart later in one of Jayne's almanacs, which, of course, broke the charm.

Thus we see, friends, how necessary it is that we keep our eyes open in our investigations for truth. When we cease seeking the marvelous, these marvel-or wonder-workers will cease.

One of these once said to me, when confronted by the writer for knowingly practicing deception: "They want it. I have to live. If I don't give it to them, they will go elsewhere. I can't stand the wear and tear of honest mediumship, so I give them deception, and they go home happy, not knowing they were deceived."

This person is endorsed by the very best of Spiritualists, and has been in the field many years.

Spiritualism will never have the footing or recognition with the world it deserves until we think for ourselves, and not what some mediums or spirit may dictate. Churches must have their bishops, the Catholics their pope and many Spiritualists, either their "guide" or that of some medium, thus ceasing to think or act, becoming the slave of another, which is contrary to the very teachings of true Spiritualism.

Yes, there has been a little blue book distributed in our ranks. An agent for the same once called at my home in Evansville, Ind. He made his business known by asking me if I did not desire to improve my mediumship; then began telling about the book of tests, as also having all paraphernalia for physical manifestations. I opened the door, and ordered him to leave, as I had no time for such individuals. He went, saying, "Well, you are one out of 500 to refuse this offer."

He called again next day. I simply shut the door in his face. Some months later, I found him in Nashville, Tenn., at the same business.

These are all facts, as all honest workers and Spiritualists know. We are constantly told, "Don't speak of it." As for myself, I mean to speak of what I know of fraud in our ranks, if it turns my best friend into an enemy.

I pray for further enlightenment where I am yet in darkness as to mediumship. Let this be the incentive of every earnest soul, that in seeking for light, we close not our eyes and sit with folded hands in any seance-room, making of ourselves a dead easy mark for any fake, who may have, like the spider, enticed us into his or her parlors.

We have sufficient proof to establish the claims of Spiritualism, without trying to find them in side shows. Let us hold up the dignity of our calling, and this Boat of Truth which has been so well equipped by our spirit friends, will sail out from under these lines of ignorance, and show to the world the beauty and grandeur of truth that all are seeking, "proof of man's existence after death.

One Thousand Dollars for One Spirit Materialization.

To the Editor:—A very generous offer indeed. Many writers for your wide-awake Progressive Thinker wonder why some one of the many mediums for the phase of materialization do not hop, skip and jump to get such easy money. However, this proposal is foreign to the charges made by gentlemen Hale and Cherry, Los Angeles, Cal., of fraudulent practices indulged in by Mrs. Elsie Reynolds.

The above question has two sides, as well as their tempting offer.

Some writers wonder why Mrs. Reynolds does not write in self-defense; possibly she is waiting until the various guns have been fired at the target.

The modus-operandi resorted to by the medium does not show an excess of cunning on her part, in the estimation of the thousands who have heretofore sat in her seances, these indorsements however do not insure her integrity at this time. We believe all who know her are competent to form their own opinions.

Probably enough has been said pro and con on this subject, therefore to settle the controversy and test the purpose and sincerity of the one thousand dollar offer, we suggest the deposit be made in bank, sworn to by the cashier, to be held subject to the order of a committee of avowed Spiritualists selected by both parties, for a period of three months, the location of seances to be decided by committee, all other attendants than the committee to be approved by the medium, then let there be from three to six seances, then to have harmony and confidence assured every one in attendance must be subject to the same tests that are applied to the medium.

Arrangements being made on the basis of the above suggestions, would it not be the proper move for those gentlemen to acquaint Mrs. Reynolds of this proposal; then, if she declines to arrange with them, let the offer be open to all.

Let the decision of the committee be published in The Progressive Thinker and thus leave valuable future space to other uses.

Let the Good Work Go On.

To the Editor:—Language is inadequate to express my thanks to you for the dear Progressive Thinker. I enjoy its columns so much. I read and reread it, and analyze the sentiments of the various minds which differ according to experience. It gives food for thought. Let the good work go on. I have long realized that a sifting time must come. It is in order. We ought to accept it cheerfully, and rejoice with those who have strength of character to expose "fraud," yet in a way it has an influence to cause people to investigate. Perhaps good may come out of evil, so-called.

The Great Question.

What Shall We Do to Be Saved?

Answered by W. H. Hutchinson, of Alzada, Montana.

What would we think of a person who depended upon a life preserver of cork to aid him in escaping from a burning house? Or the man who would rush for a fire extinguisher when his home was threatened with a flood. If we wished to take an extra charitable view of their action we would at least say they but poorly understood the danger which threatened them, would we not? Before we can intelligently cope with danger we should know something of the form that danger has assumed or is assuming, its source, and the direction from which it approaches. Otherwise one is as apt to run into it as away from it; to magnify and intensify it as to escape from it. Is not this true?

Think of the countless millions of human beings who at some period of their earth experience have earnestly or fearingly approached the question which we have selected for a topic, "What shall I do to be saved?" Individuals among them may have treated the subject jestingly or with indifference in the early part of their career, but the time would come when earth seemed about to fade from beneath them, and from out the dark and fearsome unknown came the answering echo of this momentous question as it fell from their trembling lips. Rightly or wrongly, generation after generation have had it pressed upon their notice and urged for their consideration. Its dank, foul shadow has hung like a pall over every human joy, and as a dense cloud between man and his rightful happiness. In its gloomy shade the miasma of superstition finds a congenial breeding ground, and the beautiful flower of hope withers and dies.

The word "saved" necessarily implies some thing to be saved from. Thus comes naturally the inquiry: What is the danger which threatens us? If it is one that threatens the race, you and I are as surely and as deeply interested as are or have been the rest of the world. And, really, if it is half as serious as we are told, it is indeed a grave danger that confronts us. For centuries pulpits have whispered it, pleaded it, thundered it. Preacher, priest, exhorter and evangelist have voiced it in tender entreaty, or bellowed it with all the force and confidence of God's own chosen vicegerents. Over the fears engendered by it men have climbed to the shoulders of their fellows and ridden in sleek, rosy, fat-bellied security of power. Out of it have risen cathedral, mosque, temple, tower, spire, dome and minaret, crystallized composites of human toil, tears and treasure. Because of it were builded dungeon, scaffold, torture chamber and stake, where every stone gave back echo to a human agony, and from whence the fumes of burning human flesh arose as a sweet incense to the nostrils of a demon whom men worshiped as God, and before whose angry fiat they groveled in the very dust.

Dreadful, horrible!—but, no, we have no adjectives sufficiently strong to fitly characterize such a danger as this must be. And what is it? We laugh at the child who fears to pass through a dark hallway or to be put to bed in a room without a light. What parent does not remember times when a sudden scream rang out through the house with a force that shattered the stillness of the night into fragments, as well as starting father and mother on a run toward the centre of disturbance. How the little one fairly leaped into your extended arms and shuddering, sobbing, crying, clung to you in agony of terror. To its untrained mind how real seemed the danger from which it has just escaped. Yet you smiled the while you soothed and comforted and gently led it back to the door of slumberland. We make merry over the descendant of Ham and his mysterious, malignant "Hoodoo." Let us not forget that its perils, present or impending, seem to him as real as any that ever threatened us, nor that his bodily suffering when under its "spell is as real as any we ever endured.

Yet it amuses us.

We tease unmercifully our neighbor who dares to flint at having seen or encountered anything in the nature of a "ghost" or "spirit." But ere we assume these airs of superiority, how would it do to cultivate a closer acquaintance with our own particular bogy-man and determine for ourselves whether he is as monstrously monstrous as nas been represented; or whether our fears are not to the full as silly as those which have afforded us so much amusement?

Let us see! The story with which our ecclesiastical wet nurses regaled our infant ears ran something like this. Some five or six thousand years ago a majestic being called God, or the Creator, grown tired of being a king without a kingdom, a ruler with no one to rule, made unto himself a world. Out of darkness and nothing He created the land and the waters. The land He made to grow and nurture tree and plant and vine and flower, with all sorts of living creatures to feed upon them, while the waters were filled with fishes great and small. Over all He hung the sun to give light by day, and the moon and stars to give light by night.

Last of all He made a man and named him Adam. But, strange to say, a mistake had been made in the plan, and at this point became painfully apparent. (It seems incredible that an omniscient deity should thus err, but so the story runs). Adam waxed lonesome, and Eve appeared as an afterthought, an amendment to the scheme. These two were placed in charge of the whole affair and given dominion over every living and growing thing therein and thereon—except one. Alas, another flaw! Made to reflect His own image and likeness, which was Perfection, they proved so far imperfect that in the case of this one tree and its fruit they were deemed unworthy the freedom thereof. Instead, a stern injunction was laid upon them to let it severely alone, with the treat that they should die the very day they violated said command.

Now comes the serpent, said to be (in the story) the most cunning of all creatures below man. And cunning he must have been, for he at once detected another weakness in the "perfect work of the Creator," viz., the man and woman were so constituted that the mere forbiddance of a thing inspired a keen desire for that which was forbidden. Acting upon this knowledge, and playing upon this weakness, he easily induced them to disobey the command and eat of the forbidden fruit.

When the story reached this stage we, in our childish innocence, expected to be told how they died that very day, as had been threatened. But no, that would not have been so very dreadful of itself. All that would have been necessary for those who came later would have been to avoid the transgression and thus escape the punishment. Too simple entirely. The death penalty was deemed insufficient. In its stead a new law was enacted, and under it sentence was pronounced, not merely upon the criminals, but upon every innocent unborn being. It would seem as though rank injustice had here reached its ultimate, that a depth of vindictiveness had been sounded sufficient to satisfy even the most demoniac resentment. But not yet.

Now the story carries us back to a period prior to the creation of the world. In a far off region called heaven God dwelt, surrounded by angels, beings still higher, finer, more perfect than man. Sad to say, even these superpect creatures were a disappointment to him, and his authority was disputed. A rebellion broke out. It failed to succeed. Its defeated leader, one Lucifer, was seized and banished to another country called Hell, together with the most turbulent of his followers. His name was taken from him and he was thenceforward known as Satan, Beelzebub, Devil, etc. His new realm was one of fire and sulphurous, choking gases, with gloom, misery, torture and despair everywhere. Over its entrance were the words in living flame, "Who enters here leaves hope behind." The very latest editions of the story leave out the fire and sulphur, but insist on the misery. What is the gain? So long as one is in misery and without hope, how could matters be worse?

So, to make His revenge upon Adam and Eve more complete God divides His kingdom and voluntarily turns over to the Devil a part of His dominion over the hearts of men. He deliberately sends them into the world without consulting them, inwardly predisposed to serve and follow the Devil above all else. If they do it, aye, if they fail to do the exact contrary in every particular, if they omit to smother every impulse they are born with, the Devil forecloses his mortgage and they are his for eternity. True, there was just one small loophole left for escape. If an individual here and there could by hook or crook perform all the well-nigh impossible tasks set before him or her, violate every tendency of his own nature, cringe and cower and fawn and beg, do good because of promised reward, avoid evil merely to escape punishment, neglect and fail to make the most of the life he had and spend its precious hours in preparing for one he had merely heard about—if he could and would do all this he could go direct from here to heaven and be happy there forever. Even the sight of the misery endured by his mother, wife, or child in hell below would only intensify his happiness, for would it not be an added proof of God's great mercy to him?

Nineteen hundred years or so ago the law was once more amended. The God of this story seems to have been a truly whimsical creature. His anger has had a chance to cool somewhat and He seeks an opportunity to modify the decree without sacrificing his dignity. His favorite son is sent here to suffer and die for the whole race. This done, all that remains for each of us is to believe that this did happen, and that nothing else on our part is called for but to believe and be sorry, and presto, all our sins, whether of omission, commission, or inheritance, are miraculously washed away. Thus runs the story. Thus is set forth the danger which threatens us. Thus is outlined our only means of warding it off.

Why do we smile at the fears entertained by the child, by the believer in "hoodoo," or by him who thinks he has seen a ghost? Is it not because we know those fears to be groundless? The impossibility of the existence of such dangers renders ridiculous all attempts to escape or be saved from them. Before we do anymore running ourselves would it not be wise in us to examine more closely the dark shadow from which we are fleeing? How true is the story as told to us. Is it consistent with what we already know of God? Is it consistent with itself?

Right here it may not be out of place to have a word with the good brother or sister who may be this moment grieving over what seems to them great irreverence on my part, a trifling with sacred things, a disposition to dispute the truths of Holy Writ. Dear friends, whoever you are, I beg of you to suspend judgment until you have heard me through. I have no affiliation whatever with the theophobiac. I mean the man who angrily resents every mention of God and the Bible; the man who thinks that in order to be consistent with his newly acquired freedom of thought he must bitterly attack that of everyone else. He deceives himself. He is not yet free. He is not yet rid of his old fear. If he were, those words would fail to excite him. In the victim of delirium tremens, the knowledge that those writhing forms before him are not real only adds to the terror he feels at sight of them. So with this man. Reason tells him that the fear is groundless, yet in his heart the belief in hell and the devil still lingers, and when he hears afresh the words that remind him of a future state, the erstwhile smothered terror breaks out anew, and in his anger at his own weakness he becomes vindictive. Because the gold brick he bought turns out to be brass, he vows there is no gold. Because the God he used to worship proved a man-made idol, he pronounces God an impossibility. In reality, much of the difference between us all is due to the various constructions we place upon words. He is passing through the reactionary phase of indiscriminate denial, that is all. He does not realize it, but in denying God he simply denies his own life, his own consciousness. The inexorable law of evolution and progress will bring him out of the woods sooner or later. All roads lead to God and happiness in the end. The one he is traveling takes him through the dark forest of doubt and uncertainty, where many a misstep and stumble await him, where many a fall and grievous bruise are inevitable, yet rest assured he is there because it is best for him in his present phase of development. But because I fail to walk exactly in your path do not, I beg of you, jump to the conclusion that I am following his.

To me the words God, Christ, and the Bible have a meaning deeper, higher, holier, sweeter than ever before. I yield to no man in my reverence for the truths contained in that book of books. But I do protest with all the energy of my nature against the interpretation which has been placed upon its language; against the base caricature of Deity which men have set up and bid me fall down and worship lest I perish; against the insult to my intelligence, and the foul, blasphemous lie involved in this story. Told otherwise than in the name of religion, given out under any less authority than that of the church, it would not even evoke serious comment. Mild derision and quick oblivion would be its fate. Its utter lack of consistency would render it valueless even as a piece of fiction. It would be a child of tender years indeed who would not detect its manifest absurdity.

Take even the God of whom our orthodox brethren tell us. Let us suppose him endowed with all the high qualities ascribed to him. Is it not a fact that the brighter these qualities stand out the more impossible becomes the story told of Him and His works, "God is Love" is one statement. On the heels of it comes the assertion that He can hate, can be made angry and revengeful, aye, with a bitterness of revenge hard to conceive. Can love do aught contrary to love? Can love be angry? If this were possible it would no longer be love, it would be anger.

Thus we find it impossible that God, who is love, could be angry. By the same token we know that love, and God who is love, cannot possibly hate or be revengeful.

"God is omnipresent, everywhere," is also stated. Then if there is a hell anywhere it must be in Him, in love, for He is love. If hell is in love it cannot be such a frightful sort of a place, after all. There is no other place for it, for He, who is love, is everywhere.

They tell us He is omnipotent, possessing all power. This being so, the only power the devil could wield would be a part of God's power, the power of Love. And if the devil ruled over the hearts of men with the power of love there would be little to fear from him either. Good! Really, our hair begins to lie down smoother. And another of His attributes is said to be wisdom, infinite wisdom, all wisdom, all knowledge. Then all of His actions must be wise actions. Yet the story tells how He made blunder after blunder, turned out one faulty piece of work after another, until finally He grew so out of patience with His highest earthly creation, man, that He condemned him to everlasting torture unless he, the man, would confess himself a miserable botch, and seek a cowardly shelter behind someone else willing to suffer for him.

A truly wonderful story this. One well worthy of the terror which fathered it, the ignorance that mothered it, and the lust of power that has reared and kept it alive. Poor old ghost. It has been useful in its day. Nothing ever has occurred, nothing ever can or will occur, in vain.

But the race has outgrown its mental childhood and asks for something more and better than an idle nursery tale as a guide for life and conduct. Since "Love is the fulfillment of the law," man asks that it be made the law in his case. And, to do him justice, wherever we see him governed by the law of Love we find him responsive to it. He surely has earned the right to a further trial.

JESUS' TEACHINGS.

The Underlying Truth of the Bible.

There has been much writing and talking among Spiritualists generally on the merits and demerits of the Bible story of Christ, and much valuable time spent in trying to prove that such a character as Jesus Christ never existed—that the story of his life and teachings is all a myth. While I do not doubt but all persons so engaged are perfectly sincere in their convictions, yet I believe the time could be used to better advantage in our ranks.

As has been said by Swami Vivekananda, "All the different teachers of divine thought that the world has ever known, while possibly expressing themselves in different ways, have been trying to teach the same grand principle—the divinity in man." They have been telling us of God—the spirit "in whom we live and move and have our being." This same grand principle applies today as much as it ever did in the days of Christ, Buddha and all the other ancient teachers who gave living demonstrations of that same spirit power.

The various records of the life of Christ may not be identical with each other, and even conflict on a few points, yet they all agree in the general life history—on the exemplification of the grand old principle of being.

I cannot understand why these public workers of to-day should be so radical in their denunciation of these records. They are the most positive proof the world has that this same life principle is a living principle now and has been ever since the origin of man. Why deny the existence of the teacher just because the several biographers in making up their stories after the passing of the events do not record them exactly alike? They all saw with different eyes. I would ask any fairminded person, how much different would it be to-day? Just for an example we may take the life work of Dr. Dowie or Dr. Hanish, each teaching his own interpretation of this grand principle—each, I believe, having seen and heard a part of the whole truth and have taken that part, without further investigation, and is teaching it as the whole. Let the followers of these teachers attempt to write a history of their word and words after they have passed to the life beyond, with nothing but their memory to rely on, could you expect those records to coincide in anything but the one general principle taught? I fear there would be greater conflictions than found in that ancient record, the Bible.

The old, old story of the blind men going to see the elephant is a good illustration of why there are so many "cults" and "isms" to-day. The investigators instead of pushing on to feel the whole "elephant" before they stop, describe and teach the whole from their first touch, and they have all approached it from different sides.

Now again, my brothers, how can you expect an enlightened people to believe or accept your present teaching if you are continually crying "fraud" at this ancient record of the same life philosophy you are trying to impress them with now? It does not savor of consistency.

Oh, ye agnostic Spiritualists, what do you profit by your denunciation of this record of the identical principle—that joy of world to-day the same as it was 2,000 years ago—the principle, a knowledge of which removes the sting of death and makes life one round of pleasure and worth the living—the principle that proves to us the immortality of man and our oneness with God. Yea, it is the only philosophy that can lift the soul out of darkness into eternal light. Even if you cannot accept the Bible in detail, you cannot deny the underlying truth of the whole, for if you do you destroy the whole foundation of your own beautiful philosophy. This philosophy may be new to you, but it is old to the world—it has always lived; it can never die, for it is truth and is eternal.

SHE SAW MURDER WHILE IN TRANCE.

Medium Pictured Tragedy—Saw Sophie Kloeckler Choked to Death by a Man.

"Great God, but it's all so plain! He is choking her! Now he hurls her from him! Backward she falls into the lake! How horrible it all is!"

After discussing the tragic death of Sophie Kloeckler at Lakewood, near Atlanta, for two hours with a representative of the Morning News, and talking of things Spiritualistic, Mrs. R. P. Ward, an Augusta spirit medium with something of a national reputation, who is visiting in Savannah, went into a trance yesterday, and said she saw Miss Kloeckler murdered on the bank of the lake at Atlanta's suburb.

No claim is made by Mrs. Ward that she talked with the spirit of the dead girl. Indeed she says she did nothing of the sort. It was the medium's own "guiding spirit" that unfolded the vision she so plainly saw when she went into her trance. Miss Kloeckler's spirit was never in evidence, but Mrs. Ward is as certain that what she saw really happened as she is that the slayer of the Atlanta girl will be finally brought to justice.

"He will be arrested and he will be punished for his foul crime," she said dramatically after she had recovered from the trance.

Medium Well Known Here.

Mrs. Ward secured considerable notoriety by predicting the assassination of President McKinley. When two Atlanta mediums came forward with stories of the death of Miss Kloeckler a representative of the Morning News called on Mrs. Ward at her boarding house. When shown the "revelations" from the Atlanta spirit mediums, bearing upon the Kloeckler case, Mrs. Ward said she had intended writing one of the Atlanta papers that she had received a communication from her "guiding spirit," showing that the girl had been murdured, but that she had neglected to do so. Since, however, the matter had brought to her attention, she would willingly discuss it. She said she had no mercenary motive in talking about the case, as she was not acting as a public medium in Savannah, the license required by the city being prohibitory.

Other Spirits at Work.

"Mr. Ledford, who is quoted as having received a communication from the shade of Miss Kloeckler, is a medium in sweet accord with the spirit world," said Mrs. Ward. "I know him, and know that his revelations have often been unquestionable. I do not think, however, that he could have received this communication from the spirit of the murdered girl. She would not have said that she committed suicide.

"I think that the spirits of some of the friends of the murderer must have spoken to Mr. Ledford, pretending to be the shade of the girl. In that case they could have made him believe that the girl's spirit was speaking. Their object would have been to induce the officers of the law to abandon their quest and thus gain immunity for their friend, the murderer. The friends of the murderer in the spirit world may have been stronger than the dead girl, and she may have been prevented from holding communication with Mr. Ledford.

Medium Becomes "Logical."

"The statement of Mr. Morrow, the other Spiritualist, is manifestly incorrect. If, as he states, the girl had been killed by the man she loved, and she desired to shield that man, she would not have communicated with Mr. Morrow at all.

"She would not have come forward to say that she had been murdered, when she knew that the theory was that she had committed suicide. She would have known that such an admission would serve only to put the officers more keenly upon the track of her lover.

"If she was murdered, she would not hesitate to state that such was the case, provided she did not wish to shield the murderer. Wishing to shield him, however, she would say nothing. Therefore, I say that the statement of Mr. Morrow is untenable.

"Truth Is My Ideal."

"I am very sorry that two Spiritualists should take these divergent views of the case.

"Yes, I know that my communication is also at variance with theirs, but, then truth is my ideal, and in its interest I am compelled to tell what I know of the case.

'I am certain that the girl was murdered, and I am equally as certain that her murderer will be apprehended and brought to justice. This is as sure to happen as that the sun will rise to-morrow, as sure as there is a God in heaven.

"The girl was murdered," declared Mrs. Ward. "There is no doubt in my mind about that. The shade of the girl did not tell me; I have had no communication with her. I was told by my guiding spirit, which sees things, past, present and future. Yes, she was murdered, and a man did the dark deed, a man who is now missing from Atlanta. He is one of those who have disappeared since the discovery of the crime that came to light when the lake gave up its dead.

Pictures the Tragedy.

"This man was the lover of the girl, He had wronged her. She met him at Lakewood by appointment, and it was to plead with him to right the wrong that he had done her that she met him. He, however, would not do the girl justice and make the reparation he should.

"She pleaded with him; he was obdurate. Her tears and entreaties did not move him. He glanced furtively about. There was none in sight to see the evil deed he was meditating. He saw his victim before him, helpless, and he saw the lake, whose waters might, he thought, forever hide the poor victim of his love. Then swiftly he acted, and the act was done."

Medium in a Trance.

Mrs. Ward had been discussing the Kloeckler case and Spiritualism for two hours before her head fell back, her body twitched, her hands sought her face and she squirmed and twisted in her chair. For perhaps two minutes her eyelids fluttered and her teeth remained clinched.

With a start she sat upright, rubbed her brow and apologized for what had happened. "It came upon me without warning," she explained, "and it was all so true. It was just as I had pictured it a hundred times since the tragedy. It was just the whispers of my guiding spirit told me. There can be no mistake now. That poor girl was murdered, but the man who killed her will suffer the penalty of his act.—Savannah (Ga.) Morning News.

ONE OR TWO THINGS.

No Pope Can Honor a True Woman.

Following the desperate determination of Roman Catholic clergy to break down America's admirable free school system, we have the startling statement of similar impending intent to go back, to the "dark ages," copied from the London (Eng.) Christian World:

"A real monastery—in connection with the 'Protestant Episcopal Church of America'—has been added to the list of notable mansions that line the banks of the Hudson. Some eighty miles up the river from New York such an edifice, erected at an expense of $50,000 for the Order of the Holy Cross, was recently dedicated, Bishop Whitehead, of Pittsburg, officiating at the request of Dr. Potter, the diocesan bishop. Closely connected with the Order is the Society of Oblates of Mount Calvary, composed of fifteen priests pledged to celibacy, and doing parish work in various places. Thus every feature of the Mother Church is gradually imitated by the daughter, whose growth and free development in a country of naturally alien spirit is an object lesson to those Anglicans who would, if they could, shake off the trammels of the Establishment."

What is this for the unmistakable purpose of priestcraft to push progress back to the black pages of untrammelled bigotry, when mockery joined "hand and glove" with kingly despotism to hold the great mass of the people to the servile role of mere hewers of wood and drawers of water, for the enrichment of church and aristocratic idlers, rolling in luxury and honor at the expense of the half-famished toilers who earned every atom of the world's living for all, while barely supported on the scraps despotism and priestcraft permitted to fall from the rich man's table?

What an object lesson for this era of advanced Christian civilization, in a nation of the highest grade educated intelligence!

In face of the awful disclosures of monkish debauchery of young girls entrusted to their care to be educated, as revealed in trials of several scoundrels of the monasteries in the chief cities of France, with condemnation to years of penal servitude, do we want that sort of dark age mockery, rife all over Roman Catholic Europe eight hundred years ago? When the great body of the people were purposely kept in stolid ignorance—tortured, robbed and burned alive if they dared to so much as express a doubt of the sacred edicts of the church!

God help the world if it should come to that accursed incubus of priestly intolerance, as it is to-day in priest-ridden Spain, where 58 per cent of the people are unable to read, and, as authoritatively stated, there is a non-producing monk to every family.

Keep this monster octopus, no matter under what high-sounding name it seeks its undermining purpose, out of the public schools, and out of the state. Scotch the slimy serpent at every stealthy advance, under the iron-shod heel of public repression. Let us have no dark age monkery obtaining sway in our beloved America.

In large type it is announced in the public press: "Pope Pius Honors a Woman." A mistake. Pope Pius can't honor a woman. In her simple womanhood, as maiden, wife and mother, she towers vastly beyond his power to confer honor on her.

Even in his own manhood he has deliberately fallen greatly behind his right to place himself on the same plane with womankind.

It is set down in the sacred word on whose authority the church of which he poses as the head is builded, that when the great Jehovah created the vast universe, with all the wonders it contains, and crowned by man as a living soul, He said: "It is not good for man to be alone; I will make him an helpmeet for him."

This from the divine authority under which Pope Pius assumes to rule as supreme head of the church.

Then by what right has he set himself up to ignore the helpmeet God especially created for his earthly companionship?

In this has he not thrown it in the teeth of his Creator, that it is good for a pope man to be alone? That he, and his swelling church compeers, have discovered that they are wiser than Jehovah in this crucial matter; that, in effect, when Jehovah said, it was "not good for the man to be alone," He did not know what He was talking about!

If Pope Pius had completed the purposed usefulness of his manhood, by joining himself to a good woman, whose delicacy of sentiment and superior refinement would have softened his own harder nature, he would have set an example of such wife and motherhood respecting, and home creating beauty, as would have been a priceless boon of example in right living beyond all the cross-decorating he can bestow on any woman, no matter how lavish may have been her money gifts to the church.

There is nothing half so sacred in any church, with no matter how many cross decorations and costly stained glass windows to adorn it, as the humblest home of wife and husband, where two loving hearts dwell together in harmony, each for the other and both in unison for all that is sweet and good.

"Pope Pius honors a woman."

Let us see farther. Following the awful steamboat disaster off New York, scenes of such heroism in woman was seen as history has no parallel to offer for man. I cite one out of a dozen or more heart-rending incidents as set down by a newspaper correspondent:

"A mother clung to a burning post of the flame-swept ship, her legs in the water, and her three little children safe from the fire clinging to her skirts. She held on with desperation while the flames licked her face and charred her hands. When a small boat came alongside and picked up the babies, the woman was found to have been burned to death, her hand blistered fast to the post!"

What cross decoration, or any the highest possible church mark of commendation, could have honored this grand soul in her simple motherhood! She towers as high above all the tinselled pomp and triple-crowned grandeur of Popedom as the farthest star twinkles its far-off rays above the earth!

HUMAN THOUGHT.

Variations Are Necessary for Progress.

The old aphorism that "variety is the spice of life" is a self-evident truth to anyone who studies the needs of human life. To assert that among all of the members of a church or club there is no two that have the same mental development would not seem beyond the bounds of the impossible, but when we come to deal with over fifteen hundred million of human beings inhabiting this planet and assert that among that immense number there are no two of like development, such a statement would seem absurd, and such a condition impossible. But those who have had the most extensive dealing with their fellow-beings make that assertion, and we do not question the truth of the statement, but believe that such a condition is among the possibilities.

When there is such an immense variety of phases of development, it is foolishness in the extreme to try to mold all of those various types according to one standard. In the school, for instance, there are certain general lines that all of the scholars must follow to be successful, but nevertheless each can only view the subject to a certain extent from the plane of their own mental development; they certainly cannot take their observations from any other. So in the larger school of life individuality cannot be entirely overshadowed by the collective thought of the nation or race, but both can move along the lines of progressive development together.

To each individual soul the great infinite must appear different, because each individual is standing at a different angle of sight, and no other one can occupy exactly the same position. Even in our physical world taken as a whole there is no such thing as a dead level, even the water must be disturbed or stagnation will follow. There are certain general principles that human life regardless of nation or race must recognize and obey if advancement is made. Obedience to the truth, love of virtue, purity of character, kindness and human sympathy, these are not minor details but are necessities of the universal race.

This belief in the variations of human thought is so well recognized that all constitutional governments could not exist under any other conditions, they are important phases in the program. We are not among the number who see nothing but confusion in the multiplication of religious sects and political parties. There are conditions that sometimes exist that the more of them the better. The tendency to fossilization becomes so strong at times that a force is needed which can disintegrate, break up the old lines on which life had been moulded, and compel it to form new ones. There need be no fear that the truth will suffer; such political and religious upheavals when they come are the threshing and winnowing that is needed to separate the tares from the wheat, the false views of life from the true.

Agitation is a needed factor in the work of human progress. We have not yet arrived to that plane where it can be dispensed with, and do not think we ever will. Individuals and nations will in time attain to that state of spiritual culture where they can debate their differences with a desire to arrive to a greater knowledge of the truth, recognizing the fact that whether on questions of politics or religion no one party or sect has a monopoly of all the truth. It is only error that fears the light. The foundation upon which is built the structure of true civilization cannot suffer from an inspection and criticism of its condition but that criticism should be for the sole object of improvement, a strengthening of the foundation upon which rests the normal structure of human society.

Change is not always progress; we see that well illustrated in the conflicts in the political arena—the outs wish to get in, and those who have the innings are determined if possible to remain regardless of the methods that are used to accomplish that purpose.

The most advanced nations of the world, those who give the greatest amount of normal liberty of thought and action, they are yet only, comparatively speaking, in the kindergarten phase of their unfoldment, but what advancement they have made has come through the assertion of the right of criticism, and only despotisms have denied that right, and the changes that they have made have come not by the normal process of growth but by revolutions that smashed the old systems and advanced them a step or two upward.

The rise of mankind to the present plane of religious, civil and political liberty has come through terrible conflicts with the powers of darkness which once dominated to that extent that liberty of thought and action and right of the individual to develop on the lines best adapted to their special phase of mentality was suppressed with a strong hand; and at present a remnant of that malignant spirit still exists and at times tries to manifest itself, but it is weakened that it is not an object to be feared, and will eventually be outgrown and the higher thought of the world will take its place.

The right of petition that the people of the advanced constitutional governments have won is one of the most important steps in the evolution of nations from the barbaric system to that which recognizes the fact that the thoughts of the nation cannot all be cast in one mold, that the variations which exist in regard to the problems of life are legitimate and must be recognized. When we view the pathway over which human life has traveled in attaining its present state, see the pit of savage darkness out of which it has so far climbed, we sometimes marvel at the fact that it has attained unto the position that it has.

Farther advancement will more perfectly prove that there can be unity in diversity, and while the present political and religious organizations of the world will undergo radical changes, there will always be different standards by which life is viewed but they will not be the means of discord among the different parties but recognized as a means of growth to higher development.

The effort that is being made by the different religious organizations to merge their differences and more perfectly unite under one standard is a legitimate movement. Many of the division lines which separated them are being recognized as useless, and obstructions in the way of growth; but while many of the barriers that separated nations, sects and parties are being removed greatly to their benefit, that unification does not imply that the right of each section and plane of human thought to work out its salvation on the line which it is called to develop shall be abridged. The old despotism sought to unify human thought and action by arbitrary means, the new and higher system of unification is voluntary; the variations of thought that are seen to be absolutely necessary to the individual or class are left free and unimpeded to work in their own time and way, while those who do not need that special form are free to develop on other lines.

As human life moves upward in the scale of being it is made more apparent that there can be "in essentials unity, in nonessentials liberty;" proving that in the school of life the same arbitrary program is not adaptable to all individualities. Those variations must be recognized as perfectly normal states of the different individual lives, and that they can only have growth along those lines. The vision that appears on the horizon of an awakening world, of the universal congress of nations, is a possibility which the present trend of the nations of the world will finally accomplish. The great conflict of the powers may yet have to come, to settle on the field of battle the question of the impotency of the brute forces in human society to adjust the differences that arise among the different races and peoples that inhabit this planet. "The mills of God grind slow," the forces that are working to bring about the unification of the human family on all the lines where unity is desirable cannot be hurried, it is a movement that demands careful consideration so that it will not have to be undone and the structure that is to be reared on those foundations will be a permanent one, though advancing to greater degrees of power and magnificence.

A PRACTICAL COURSE FOR Physicians and Students of Occultism.

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to Four-and-a-Half Thousand Years Ago.

What would this old world amount to were it not for its fossils and ruins? The former carry back the records of Time unnumbered millions of years; and they have never been tampered with by forgers. Even priests could only meet their tell-tale facts by saying:

"God created those fossils when he made the world to confuse the wise, and belittle science."

These priests were more content to make the mighty Ruler of the universe a deceiver, than to disparage their silly story that all was spoke into being less than 6,000 years ago.

Akin to fossils are ancient ruins, the products of human genius, whose relics are still preserved in favorable locations, and carry us back to ages long anterior to a written language, and tell us of things that were—

"Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them."

It is from these ruins the early history of humanity must be gleaned. Whatever discoveries are made linking us to primeval times possess a charm all their own. Here the thinker revels in imagination, peoples those remains of antiquity with rude man, only a little remove from Nature, and gazes on the work of his hands as stepping-stones to the development of modern art.

Such were our reflections as we read the following late telegram from Egypt, which we copy:

Cairo, Egypt.—Discovery, through the excavations on behalf of the Egypt Exploration Fund of the most ancient shrine yet uncovered near Thebes, is announced in a dispatch from that place. The new find is the mortuary chapel of King Mentuhotep Nebkherura of the eleventh dynasty, B. C. 2,500. It is in an unexpectedly good state of preservation. Much will be learned from it of the history and art of the eleventh dynasty.

Thebes is 300 miles south of Cairo, on the east bank of the Nile. The valley of the tombs of the kings is across the river in the cliffs between the Nile and the Sahara desert. The Egyptians lived, as a rule, on the east bank of the Nile, the sunrise side, and buried their dead on the west bank, the sunset side. Sunrise meant life in the religion of the Pharaohs and sunset meant death.

A mortuary chapel—a place to which the dead were taken to receive burial rites, near four and a half thousand years ago! The ritual used on such occasions are found wrapped around the mouldering dead, and when the inscriptions are deciphered, they fall little short in interest of those read from Christian pulpits to-day. They tell of their murdered and dismembered Osiris, their savior; of his resurrection, and his ministering in the unseen world in behalf of mortality just as does our Savior in these later times. And Isis with her child in her arms, is pictured there, telling of maternal love, and filial affection the same as now. Verily, aside from names, we have the dominant religion of the present revealed on the pictured rocks along the valley of the Nile. Who is there that takes no interest in these revelations? Who partakes of the fallen fruit from the tree and does not stop to consider from whence it came?

Don't Do It.

We are constantly told of the perfection of Bible teaching, and the clergy claim, though falsely, that modern laws are built on precepts drawn from their sacred book. Those entertaining such opinion will open the New Testament to I. Cor., 7:36, and read. (We shall not quote, as we have no inclination to violate the postal laws.) The revised translation adds the word "daughter," in each place in this and the following verse after virgin, which rendering is necessary to make clear the Greek text.

Whoever is vile enough to carry out the idea there advanced in practice, under the Illinois laws, will subject himself, very justly, to a penalty of ten years imprisonment at hard labor for incest. And if "they marry," as Paul says "let them," the offending parties may be additionally guilty of bigamy. Don't do it, for it would be a shame, which modern civilization will not brook, and it should not.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.

An Important Historical Inquiry.

It is well known to scholars that the generally accepted chronology, which fixes the dates of all events since creation, down to the year 1660, came from the hands of the Irish prelate, Archbishop James Usher. Usher was born in Dublin, January 4, 1580, was graduated at Dublin College, and was ordained a priest in 1601. To near that date the Christian era, as now established, had not been adopted in general practice by christendom. Though Usher was the author of numerous ecclesiastical publications, collected and published in sixteen volumes, in 1841, yet Chamber's renders him the doubtful compliment of saying: "It cannot be shown that posterity is very deeply indebted to him for more than the example of a virtuous and studious life." His Chronological Sacra has confused, rather than made more clear, scriptural dates, and the same is true of more modern dates.

Without regard to who Josephus was, whether he wrote near the close of the first century of our era, or the beginning of the 15th century as many able writers maintain, he asserted an unquestionable truth when he asserted in Sec. 16, Book II of his Reply to Apion, that:

"Those who have been admirers of good order * * * have endeavored to have everything they ordained believed to be very ancient, that they might not be thought to imitate others, but might appear to have delivered a regular way of living to others after them."

With this idea before us, the inquiry arises: When was the Council of Nicaea holden? The alleged date was A. D. 325; but, really, if there was such an assemblage of bishops, otherwise "overseers of temples," as the term primitively signified, was it not holden some three centuries later? Church historians say the Council was convened by the emperor Constantine, in his capacity of Pontifex Maximus, to put down the heresy of Arius, who taught:

"The Son of God has not always existed; that there was a time when he was not; that he was a creature of God; that he could have sinned, had he desired; that God is but one, and there can be no other."

This position was controverted, and three hundred bishops declared that "Arius first sowed this heresy among the people; that he was overcome by diabolical art and influence." Arius was anathematized, and Constantine is said to have issued an edict condemning him and his writings, and that "Any book written by Arius shall be committed to the flames; and whoever shall be convicted of having concealed any book written by Arius shall suffer death."

All students of history have learned that Mahomet taught exactly what is ascribed to Arius; that "God is God, and there is no God but God." The hegira, or flight of Mahomet from Mecca to Medina, occurred in the year 622.

Hon. Alexander Del Mar, the learned Christian scholar, in his great work, "The Worship of Augustus Caesar," as shown by quotations in these editorial columns of April 16, established beyond the possibility of equivocation, that:

"Augustus Caesar, by act of the Roman senate, was recognized as the long predicted and expected Messiah, a fact that Augustus mentions in his will, which is carved on the temple of Ancyra [a locality some 70 miles southwest of Nicaea] still standing with the inscription upon it. The year of his Apotheosis was B. C. 15, when a tax was laid upon the Roman world. The name of one of the months, Sextilis, was changed to Augustus, an honor accorded only to gods. At first Augustus only claimed to be the Son of God; afterwards he accepted the title and prayers due to the Creator, and, as such, was addressed in the temples which were dedicated to his worship. He erected near the Tarpeian Rock in Rome, a temple which was inscribed: 'To Augustus, the First Born of God.'" See Worship of Augustus Caesar, p. 171, with much other important matter, which lack of space compels us to omit.

On page 23 of the work cited:

"Evidences that the Augustan chronology was corrupted appear in every direction. The works of the earliest Roman historians have all disappeared. [the names of many of them are mentioned]. Not a vestige remains, beyond the brief reference to these authors which appear in the works of the Augustan writers. Under the pretense of piety Augustus ordered the collection and destruction of numerous ancient and contemporary works. Of these, two thousand perished in a single auto da fe. Of the few spared, all have been mutilated. Quintus Ennius is known to us by little more than his name. Polybius is hacked to pieces. The historical works of Cicero have all perished. Cornelius Nepos is in fragments without dates. Of 142 books in Livy's History of Rome but 45 remain, and many of these are mutilated or corrupted. Of Ovid's Fasti, out of 12 books but six remain. Manlius has been largely tampered with. Many others have been divested of dates. Varro, the most voluminous of the Augustan writers, is known to us only by two detached and imperfect pieces. In all these works the chronology, when any chronology appears, is suspicious and bears the look of having been altered. Names, generations and dates fail to agree. The lives of men are thrown into one age, while their works furnish evidence they lived in another; and the archeological remains bear similar testimony."

Now observe: This worship of Augustus, enforced by regal authority, continued without abatement for more than 600 years, until a conflict arose between his worshipers and the Moslems. The latter were warring against idolatry, and soon became a giant power. Nearly or all the general councils prior to that of Trent, from 1545 to 1563, are probably frauds. But if one was held in the early centuries, before any general system of chronology was established, and as false names were frequently substituted by interested parties, may not that pretended assemblage at Nicaea, in Bithynia, have been antedated, with the names of even all the actors substituted by others, to accomplish a purpose as regards later ages? The frauds of history are of such momentous magnitude we are prepared to believe anything but the records of Catholicism, or those coming through their hands. If human life was not sacred to them; if ten millions of human beings were sacrificed by inquisitorial tortures, and incident thereto, what infamy were they not guilty of to establish their faith?

If Hon. Del Mar's critical eye shall fall on this, possibly he will aid us in illuminating the subject. If he shall do so he has our thanks in advance, as that of all our many thousands of patrons.

Dr. H. V. Sweringen Nominated for Senator.

Dr. Sweringen, one of the ablest men in the ranks of Spiritualism, has been nominated for State Senator at Fort Wayne, Ind. The following editorial from the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette of July 13, a Democratic paper, and of course, in opposition to the Republican ticket on which Dr. Sweringen was nominated, is a labored effort to cast reflections upon his Spiritualism:

"Dr. Hiram Von Sweringen for joint senator from Allen and Adams counties! After trying for a month to work their political 'gold brick' off on some one the Republican convention placed it in the hands of Doctor Sweringen yesterday. Doctor, we never thought you were so easy. We have stood with you in your hallucinations and seen things with you, but it isn't necessary to get under a cloud to show you that this is the most spiritless ghost walk we have ever taken, the airiest nothing we have espoused. And you are not altogether to blame, because we know you believe all men are honest, like yourself. But the Republicans caught you by correspondence and won you by the absent treatment. Even they did not have the nerve to look you in the face and tell you what they put into a typewritten note. We say these things because we like you. We have stood for you in everything—things we couldn't see, but now we approach the parting of the ways. It makes us sad to say so, but there comes a time in every one's life when it is necessary to tell the truth to good friends, and for the time, perhaps, lose their liking. But, Doctor, when the votes are counted you'll remember and forgive us, and if it isn't asking too much, send us a message from the happy land of the hasbeens after the Democratic threshing this fall. Just a word of confession, so that we will know whether or not we are to be on speaking terms when we get into space with you. Good bye."

In striking contrast with the Journal-Gazette editorial is the following from the oldest Democratic paper in Northern Indiana, the Fort Wayne Daily Sentinel:

"The Republicans of Allen and Adams counties have made Dr. H. V. Sweringen, of this city, their nominee for joint senator. While the nomination is almost beyond question an empty honor, the party has done itself vast credit by nominating a man of such unqualified excellence both as gentleman and citizen. It is to be regretted his party has not a more substantial honor to bestow upon Dr. Sweringen. In ability and worth he may well claim much higher distinction than has already come to him from his party. For many years Dr. Sweringen has been an eminent practitioner in Fort Wayne of the medical profession. His friends are legion and he is esteemed not less for his goodness of heart than for his lofty attainments in his calling. Dr. Sweringen's candidacy is an honor to the party which nominated him."

Fiction Versus Fact.

The threats of the faithful to enter the Roman Catholic fold, if the "higher criticism" prevails, is decidedly amusing. Scholars reared in the church and educated for the ministry, their bread and butter contingent on those who give them employment; their every interest, social, religious and financial binding them to that church; yet their scholarly researches have convinced them that the books compiled into a volume, and known as the Bible, full of contradictions and impossibilities, first found in the hands of those they were wont to charge as "the mother of harlots," the mark of whose vile hands is everywhere visible; and yet there are other persons who prefer to re-embrace that church, covered all over with blood, rather than know the truth. The poet was right: "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

There are ways to stay this tide of the higher criticism. 1st, Cease to educate the clergy. Give the pulpit into charge of the inspired Jaspers, and let them blow forth, damning to the fabled hell all who do not adopt their ignorant imaginings.

2d, Employ men to fill these pulpits whose chief ambition is to receive their salary, and, like the shyster lawyer, cares nothing for the justice of his cause, but whose eye is ever open to a generous fee, and will defend the vilest wretch who lives if the compensation is sufficiently generous.

Such persons are not competent to detect the frauds and impostures of designing sectaries, but, like the good Topsy, they will not only swallow the apple story, but the tree as well.

Chaplains Before Christians.

Objections are made in many quarters against the employment of chaplains for our legislative bodies, for congress, and the army and navy. It is urged that a secular government, in all countries where church and state are independent of each other, has no right to impose any feature of a hierarchy on the people and, in fact, if the principles enunciated by the fathers of the Republic were observed, no one would attempt such a wrong on constituted rights.

In reading Hon. Del Mar's "Ancient Britain," p. 97, the other day, we learned for the first time, that chaplains are not a Christian novelty, but, like almost or quite everything else in its system, it is an inheritance from our pagan ancestors. Del Mar wrote as a Christian; he does not conceal or garble facts in the interest of his church, and for that we approbate him. He was tracing the origin of British institutions, showing many of them came from Rome when it dominated the civilized world; and he was telling of the Centuriati, a limited assembly, with an aristocratic tendency, representing property, when he says:

"The sessions of the Centuriati were opened with prayers and sacred rites." He quotes as authority for his statement, Livy, 14:22. "The name of Livy," says Lemprier," is rendered immortal by his history of the Roman empire." He lived, wrote, and died before the Christian era. This is proof positive that the custom prevailed long anterior to Christian churches. It was at a time, too, when Julius Caesar was worshiped as God, before Augustus Caesar was enthroned by the Roman senate as the Son of God; and before Jes Chrishna's worship had become general throughout the Roman empire. Of this in the future.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

The most peculiar literature of our time is the so-called "New Thought" literature, and it is exceedingly abundant. Of late it has received an impetus from Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who has contributed to the Hearst newspapers on this subject. It is claimed by the cult that she has "annihilated" the sophistry of objectors, and demonstrated the principles of the philosophy. Well, if she has, then there are no grounds for objection, and the question being demonstrated, is removed from discussion. Her advice to "clear your mind of every gloomy, selfish, angry, or revengeful thought, allow no resentment or grudge toward man or fate to stay in your heart over night," is excellent. That would make a man very near angelic. There is, however, nothing new about it. It is what the systems of religion have taught since historic time. But there is a difference and a great difference in the methods to be employed for the attainment of this desirable spiritual state. It has been taught that constant effort in right doing and right thinking, continued with undeviating aim toward righeousness, were essential. Now whatever influence this may have, Mrs. Wilcox quotes the great apostle Brown, as laying down the law as the most "excellent rules for assertions," and orders saying over and over daily:

"I am fearless. I dare do anything I desire. I am life. I cannot know sickness. I choose my life. I make it—all goodness, usefulness, success. I am peace, joy, prosperity, happiness."

To the great majority of people, to assert this "over and over," would be utterly false. There are things in the world any one but a fool should have fear of. If a man should see the swirling clouds of a tornado coming and remained facing it, shouting, "I am fearless," if he remained on earth after the passing of the whirlwind he would be set down as a fool or a lunatic. If he could speak, instead of crying grandiosely, "I am life!" he would say meekly, "I am dead as a herring."

If a man could, would it be right for him to do "anything" he might "desire"? Fortunately his capabilities are limited, and his "desire" is hedged around on every side.

For a man prostrated with fever, or in the last stages of consumption to say "over and over," "I cannot know sickness," would be to reiterate what he knows to be false.

As for choosing one's life, where is the person in all the world who thus chooses or has chosen? We are all thrust into, through and out of this life, and the choice is conspicuous by its absence.

Such a belief is an inflatus to vanity, and a deluding will-o'-the-wisp.

The penniless pauper, might sit down "composedly," and "say over and over," "I am wealthy. I own all things. I am prosperity," and when night came gladly take his bowl of soup at the hands of charity.

The question may be correctly stated: How long would a donkey have to reiterate "over and over," "I have a fine voice! I am a prima donna!" before his bray would become sweet as the song of a bird?

"Oh!" it is said, "such criticism comes of misunderstanding." Such is a literal application of the "excellent rules." They admit no other meaning, as they stand. The apostles of a new movement should make their position so plain that they cannot be misunderstood.

I have read all the principal works on the "new thought," and I fail to find one thought that is new. There are old thoughts—very old thoughts, clothed in such fantastic verbiage, they are scarcely recognizable, and labeled by new names. There are outre and stunning assertions, against which reason at once rebels, which when attacked, the advocates explain in a terminology leaving one in doubt as to the real meaning, or smooth over until there is no meaning at all.

These sententious assertions which come out of the clouds of "the new thought" like gleaming rockets, leave the formless fog-bank the more uncertain and obscure. A "new thought," captured on this coast-line, would be a priceless curiosity.

The Washington Times gives an account of a "strenuous" family. The parents removed to Washington to give their children the advantages of the schools, two years ago. The eight older children have not missed a day at school during the past year, nor been tardy any morning or at recess. There are three more too young for attendance. Eleven in all, the shadow of the white house adding to the prolificacy. The President ought to have stood godfather to the last addition. When such families become "typical American," what a nation this will be!

At Shreveport, La., they have a negro evangelist who is now enjoying more notoriety than any other colored person in the state. He is represented as a mulatto, who was "just an ordinary colored pusson," until he traveled to Chicago, where he engaged in the ungodly game of whist with some friends. They talked religion while they played and Renfro—that is his name—said, "If God would demonstrate himself to me in some way, as to strike me deaf and dumb, or blind, I would believe in him."

Presto! No sooner had he spoken than he fell to the floor. When brought to, he was deaf as a post and less able to speak than Balaam's ass. That was May 31, and now having returned to Shrevesport, having spent the time in reading the Bible, and regaining his lost hearing and speech, he says, "I hope to go forth as did Paul, preaching the word of God; for God promised he would be with me." Some ungodly doctors, South, say he is "self-hypnotized," and the whites, that he is a fraud. The negroes have faith in him and he is destined to awaken unheard of enthusiasm among his own people.

Later reports by way of embellishment have it that Renfro had been reading Ingersoll's writings, and had become muddled in his views, hitherto strictly Methodistic.

Theology is the last subject one would suppose a set of whist players would bring up. It is a game proverbial for its silence and unsociability, but the four negroes tackled its knottiest side, and Renfro challenged the Almighty!

His three friends had been arguing with him hotly—it is to be inferred the cards had been put away—when as a last refuge he made an appeal to God's interference. He had been hypnotized and was a good subject, and it is in charity to be inferred that the positive attitude of his companions hypnotized him. A fine advertising trick by which the sharp newspapers have all been taken in, and a cunning negro made notorious.

A clever trick to gain notoriety, and an object lesson showing how religious leaders are made. That he will "stir up" the emotional colored people, there is no doubt, but questionable the good that will come of any stirring up an ignorant negro can do from anything he may gain by simply reading the Bible. But if one takes the Bible as standard authority, the less he knows about anything else the better.

What of the intelligence of an age, when leading writers seriously discuss the probability of the God of the universe, standing around a whist party, to strike one of them dumb as proof of his existence!

For more than twenty-five years W. H. Terry has published The Harbinger of Light, in Melbourne, Australia. Its title is well earned, for a more luminous journal would be difficult to find. He is a psychic of rare powers, gentle, unostentatious, and has devoted all these years for unselfish love of the cause. In a recent editorial he says:

"It only requires the cultivation of that interior vision to enable a large percentage of humanity to see whilst yet in the mortal body the beauties of that higher world, which they are destined to inhabit when they shuffle off this mortal coil. But all are not sufficiently sensitive, and but few who are so, are favorably positioned to apply themselves to the cultivation of their interior powers. Harmonious surroundings and the absence of business worries are essential to the individual cultivation of clear vision. The development of clairvoyance and lucidity, however, may be accelerated by mesmerism, but this should not be attempted empirically, it is too serious a matter; both operator and subject should thoroughly understand what they are entering upon and have perfect confidence in each other, the magnetizer should have singleness of purpose and a high object in view, if selfishness intrudes little good will result. As in all scientific experiments and discoveries the majority of people have to accept (and do accept) the evidence of experts; so in psychic science must the majority, who are unable to give the time and conditions for personal experiment, be content to take the evidence of those more favored, who, either in themselves possess the power, or have the control of instruments whose vision extends beyond the normal range. Few of those who have not paid serious attention to the subject are aware of the immense amount of evidence that has been accumulated during the past half century, ample to convince any unbiased mind.

Spiritualism is making its influence felt in Geneva, Switzerland, the birthplace of Calvinism. The "Tribune," the most influential paper with a daily circulation of 35,000, which has been bitterly hostile has recently changed front and as the following editorial shows, is favorably inclined:

"In the course of the month of March will be celebrated the anniversary of the establishment of the Alliance Spirite, founded in 1903, by M. Albin Valabregue, for the purpose of making known Spiritualism, not such as it is in porters' lodges and in the seance rooms of fraudulent mediums, but in the labors of savants: some of whom, like the Crookeses, the Hodgsons, the Hyslops, the Wallaces and the Lodges, have been experimentalizing with it for dozens of years.

"The phenomena of telepathy and subconsciousness, which are to-day being demonstrated, so far from being ing prejudicial to Spiritualism, serve to explain the stupidities, the errors, and the falsehoods for which thousands of spiritual communications have been justly reproached. Science separates the wheat from the tares, to the great joy of serious Spiritualists.

"In the bygone year, Spiritualism has made a conquest pregnant with promises and with consequences. It is that of the N-rays.

"Now, since a chemical plate permits us to see the fluid which escapes from our bodies, the Spiritualist has a right to think that he may, by an analogous process, arrive at beholding the spirits, and of at length achieving with certainty and at a defined moment, those experiments which the repudiators of Spiritualism are waiting for before rallying to its side.

"To conclude, it would be puerile to deny that recent scientific discoveries are in the direction of what Spiritualists affirm. They do not yet amount to that proof which would satisfy skeptics of the school of M. Flournoy, but it is an approach towards that proof, and really it is no longer ridiculous on the part of Spiritualists to hope for it."

The editor's allusion to "fluids which escape from our bodies, refer to the experiments of M. d'Arsonval, who reported to the Academy of Science at Paris that he had discovered by means of radium light rays emanating from the human body. These Charpentier and Blondoit called N-rays. They found these rays given off most distinctly from the nerves. Beyond these rays were others indeterminable by any means at their command. These spirit forces bring the observer to the very portals of spirit being. One step more and spirit existence will be demonstrated by science, by purely scientific methods. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mortal Fear and Agony.

When Jesus was stretched on the cross, as told by Matthew 27:46, suffering as we may suppose the agonies of death, he cried with a loud voice, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Does not this fact of itself controvert the claim of the ecclesiastics, that Jesus was the very God, co-equal with the Father, and co-eternal with him, indeed, that Father himself? Throw all the eloquence and rhetoric of which genius is capable around the subject, and make claim for the godhead as strong as possible, and yet, when in extremis, sweating great drops of blood, as the statement says, with no motive to deceive, Jesus claims he was deserted by himself, if he and his father were one.

Really, does not the church draw the long bow when it sets up such an exaggerated claim?

"Came to give his life for the ransom of the world," the preachers tell us; but there are very few criminals—murderers—who approach the gallows and make such an exhibition of fear, as the sacred historian has described, which accompanied the crucifixion of Jesus. We hope there was a mistake in reciting the story; that the sacred historian, not a witness of the affair, was greatly misinformed; for we are loth to believe that even an innocent man, say nothing of a God, would make such an exhibition of mortal weakness as Matthew has related.

Dr. I. K. Funk.

Dr. Funk, who is investigating Spiritualism along scientific lines, was in the city a few days ago. He is a most estimable gentleman, is kindly sympathetic, is thoroughly well informed on occult subjects, and we have no doubt will reap a rich harvest in his investigation of Spiritualism. His book, "The Widow's Mite," will have a world-wide circulation.

AN OPEN COURT

See Page 2 of the Present Issue.

Resolved, That while we condemn fraud and dishonesty in mediumship, as well as in all other things, we believe that the continual "cry of fraud" from our platform and in our press is detrimental to the best interests of Spiritualism, in that while it does not prevent frauds who are posing as mediums from practicing such impositions, but it invites unprincipled persons to enter this field to the detriment of Spiritualism and our genuine mediums.

The above is an impresive resolution adopted by the New York State Association of Spiritualists, intimating that the "cry of fraud" in the press and on the rostrum is very injurious to Spiritualism, and that through "suggestion," others weak in moral strength would be apt to increase the ranks of fakes. The resolution condemns fraud, thus actually "crying fraud" from the rostrum, and doing the very thing it condemns in others. It sends the resolution to various papers for publication, thus carrying out what it fully condemns the press for doing, and in both cases badly injuring Spiritualism, according to its own estimate, and by "suggestion" increasing the number of fakes, presenting an astonishingly curious medley that we will not make it our business to unravel, it is too tangled.

The Spiritualist press has never overburdened its readers with the "cry of fraud;" it has been the secular press that has done that. When Elsie Reynolds' style of "making dear spirits" out of herself dressed in artificial toggery, was exposed in Los Angeles, Cal., the same was read by at least 2,000,000. When the materializing methods of Houghton and wife in Philadelphia were published, at least 5,000,000 read the same, as the press dispatches flashed it all over the country. When May French and Neva Murivale Jenneau were arrested in Boston, (dressed in garbs saturated with phosphorus, etc., playing the "dear spirit" to gullible mortals) millions upon millions in various parts of the country read and commented on the same. We might enumerate many others who, when caught personating spirits, were dressed in filmsy draperies made especially for the occasion. According to the New York resolution we ought to have at least 500 fakes now in the course of preparation with bogus tests for the rostrum and cheese cloth and illuminated dresses for materialization, making arrangements for confederates and test conditions such as will easily deceive the gullibles—all caused by "suggestion," as intimated in the New York resolution. We thank the New York State Association of Spiritualists (composed of those who stand high in everything that pertains to true manhood or womanhood) for passing that resolution, for it gives us an opportunity to Open Court according to law and allow our readers in brief articles to talk about SUGGESTION; talk about the CRY OF FRAUD; talk about CHEESE CLOTH AND ILLUMINATED DRESSES found on the exposed mediums and their confederates; talk about the BLUE BOOK and fake tests; talk about materialized spirits that smell sometimes of whiskey and onions, and found to be the medium or confederates —all of course labeled "Pure Spiritualism."

We fully and most cordially endorse the above resolution by the New York State Association of Spiritualists, in the following language, and we wish our readers to study it most carefully: First.—THE CLAIM THAT THE ONE WHO CRIES "FRAUD" OR DECEPTION WHEN IT ACTUALLY EXISTS, IS INJURING SPIRITUALISM, IS ABSOLUTELY TRUE TO THE FULL MEASURE OF THE DECEPTION PRACTICED.

We also fully agree with the following, as clearly expressing the actual facts in the case. Read it, re-read it, and then reflect and ponder over both statements carefully:

Second.—WHEN THE DECEPTION, HOWEVER, IN SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA IS ALLOWED TO CONTINUE, WITHOUT MAKING IT PUBLIC, IT THEN TAKES FAR DEEPER, WIDER AND MORE INFLUENTIAL ROOTS, AND FINALLY TO A GREAT EXTENT STRANGLES THE TRUTH, AND WEAKENS GREATLY THE CAUSE IT REPRESENTS, AND IN THE END IS FAR MORE INJURIOUS THAN GIVING IT CONTINUAL PUBLICITY.

In this OPEN COURT (inaugurated by the wise denizens of spirit life, those who have made The Progressive Thinker the greatest financial success of any Spiritualist paper ever published), we wish to introduce Theodore J. Mayer, one of the noblest of men, a philanthropist in every fiber of his being, and who has done as much financially for Spiritualism as all other Spiritualists of our boasted 10,000,000 combined. His statement can be considered in the OPEN COURT. He says:

"I do not wish it to appear that I am excusing fraud, or condoning trickery, far be it from my desire. I KNOW THAT FRAUDS AND IMPOSTORS ARE IN OUR RANKS. * * * We HAVE TO DEPEND ON OURSELVES, AND AFTER HAVING BEEN TAKEN IN HALF A DOZEN TIMES WE HAVE OUR EYE-TEETH CUT, AND ARE ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF OURSELVES AGAINST EVERY FAKE AND FRAUD."

His position may be considered in the Open Court. The question naturally arises, What is the condition of a religion, a cult, a sect, or creed, in which, in order to arrive at the exact truth, you have got to run the gauntlet of fraud and deception at least six times, in order to get at the golden grains? Mr. Mayer's position should be considered carefully in the OPEN COURT.

Spiritualism in its purity is grand and beautiful; its true mediums are Angels of Light, bringing nothing but the truth to mortals seeking for the higher knowledge. Their homes are heaven itself; their presence is one continual blessing. They comfort the mourning; they dispel the darkness of error; they bring sunshine into the life of the sorrowing; they have words of cheer for those whose burdens of life are heavy. For them we have a reverential feeling; for them we have nothing but praise. In their behalf—to separate the wheat from the chaff—this OPEN COURT is inaugurated. None but rotten fakes will find fault with it.

Honor for Col. R. T. Van Horn—A New Public School Will Be Named After Him.

Col. R. T. Van Horn, a veteran Spiritualist, a profound thinker, a leading journalist for forty years, an officer in the Union army, four terms in Congress, with other honors too numerous to mention—this is what the Kansas City Journal says of him:

"The board of education last night unanimously voted to assist in the further perpetuation of Colonel R. T. Van Horn's name by naming after him one of the new schools to be erected in the South Troost avenue district.

"When Colonel Van Horn's name was mentioned last night it was a signal for each member of the board present to arise and pronounce a eulogy on this retired editor, publisher, statesman and good citizen, the general expression being that the board considered it a favor to be allowed to honor such a man who has done so much for the upbuilding of Kansas City, and who has lived to enjoy the fruits of his labor and to witness the enjoyment by others of the many advantages he has so materially assisted in giving them."

The Colonel will, as usual, visit Lily Dale camp this season. We congratulate the management in having such a distinguished visitor each year. He seems to carry good luck with him wherever he goes and any camp he visits will prosper.

THIS SHOULD GO IN NOW

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

I have received the book containing the life work of the inspiration of the author—The Arcana of Spiritualism, by Hudson Tuttle, and surely the secrets of Spiritualism, which are the secrets of Nature, are revealed in this great work. It seems that every point of interest to the student in psychic science has been covered by the author, and the book is a well-spring of information and a fountain of knowledge to the seeker after truth, as all of Mr. Tuttle's publications are. The prefacing of the work with the author's own psychic experience was a happy thought, and this part of the volume is of deep interest, as showing the great good and mighty work that may be accomplished through the co-operation of spirits and mortals. The Arcana of Spiritualism is a library in itself, dealing with those higher and deeper problems of life and of spiritual existence.

I wish also to speak of the two poetical publications of Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle—Asphodel Blooms, and From Soul to Soul. These two volumes now grace my library, and both are gems of value.

The contents of each breathe forth the pure emotions of the soul, and the aroma of the blossoms of thought woven into poetical expression refreshes the spirit and quickens the intellect.

Long may Hudson Tuttle and his good wife Emma tarry on earth to bless humanity, is the desire of a well-wisher.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25 postpaid.

Superstitions, Present and Past:

Why Their Influence on Us?

Lecture by Mrs. H. P. Russegue.

Sometimes it is well to consider upon what our superstitions are based, therefore I take for my subject this evening:

How are the superstitions of the present compared with those of the religions of the past, and why do they so influence our lives, that they become a part of our thought, a part of our experience, a part of our relationships one with another.

Religious men and women have always talked of the abandonment of superstition. They have always deplored that men should cherish with awe the varying superstitions incident to the growth of races, and one scarcely comprehends how great the power is that they hold over us. The superstitions of the Druids, the early religionists of Normandy and England, were that they could come nearer to the spirit of God, the higher they could climb to their altars of worship. Therefore they builded their altars high in the air, and built the Senate chambers down beneath the surface of the earth. Their temples were circular in form, their altars were round, their offerings were always placed upon them in that form which should constitute a circle. They watched the stars, believing that their action dominated their lives. In the springtime they taught their children that the great cloud in the north should be consulted, as to where it should point, to indicate what the coming seasons might be. The superstitions of the Pagans were alike directed to the planetary worlds. They saw a great power, a great might, a great influence for war, for success and prosperity, in Jupiter. He was the King of the heavens, he was the mighty Jove whose will dominated worlds, and won victories in warfare. They beheld the sun as the source of all heat, as the source of all light.

In ancient China, the worshipers have left the records of their beliefs upon the walls of China, and in the delicate instruments through which they observed the motion of the planets. We find that their thought was directed to heavenly bodies, to find there the forces that operated upon them, that guided them to victory, that preserved their life, that directed their efforts, that saved the country from inundations. All these things point to one condition of the human mind, and that is, the reaching out of our thought for something extraordinary, to which we may attach ourselves, and thus the mind aspires to that which it conceives superior in strength. The ancient tower of Hercules, which was looked upon as that great force in the church, by which the mariner might be directed to a safe harbor, was builded as high as they dared, and upon it a fire kindled, and a monk was appointed to keep that fire burning, that he who might wander upon the sea, and disturbed spirits that were out on the briny deep, would find a haven to which they might direct their course. This was the beginning of light-houses, this was the foundation upon which the necessities were able to appeal, that has resulted in the establishment of lights, to guide the mariners to havens of security.

Out of the religious superstition, out of the religious beliefs, out of the religious formulas, that embodied the superstitious awe, regarding the spirits of the air, the action of the heavenly bodies, the fear of man that he might incur the anger of the Gods, and that he might propitiate that anger, and reconcile the Gods to them, have resulted the great uses to-day of humanity. The cross, one of the religious altars upon which superstition has hung for centuries, is another emblem of the old beliefs, the old dogmas. It belonged to the Pagan world. Its origin was in the belief of the Pagans. They believed, and in ancient Chaldea you will find evidences, in the churches, and upon the altars, of their beliefs. The great offering that mathematics gives to you, as the communication of computing or multiplication, indicated to them the condition of the world, or a unit to constitute the whole universe. It was round and every form of belief that has ever pertained to the existence of a Deific law, has always been circular. Through every superstition, through every formulated faith, through every concise belief, there has been the circumference that was typified in the offering of the circle, in the great ring that has indicated unity. Thus they looked upon this symbol as an indication of their belief in the great whole of the universe. The ancient astrologers, astronomers, and philosophers, believed that the world was composed of four elements. These elements were so blended in the formation of the great whole, that it symbolized this sign. They drew a line perpendicular, and then drew a line horizontal across the other line for the whole, and this was the beginning of the belief in a cross. These elements were earth, and fire, and air, and water. These were the four great kingdoms of life. Heat was the force that germinated life.

In the water life seemed to spring into being; in the air it unfolded, and into the great force of the universe it expanded and developed, until the world was able to behold the germs out of which the products of ancient times came into form. Out of the earth, from the three great potencies surrounding and inhering it, these forces combined, formed the four great kingdoms of nature.

The Pagan worshipers also instituted in their temples these symbols of their belief, their altars, their pictures. Their symbols of religious vessels which symbolized their beliefs, were all marked with these signs, indicating their recognition of the Divine life, symbolized through this one figure. In the Persian faith grew the belief of the cross, the cross upon which persecution might be carried forward. It became the instrument of justice, it was the cross to which men were nailed, and this belief was carried down into Rome, and from them it became utilized by the Jews, Spain and Italy, and all Southern Europe accepted this symbol. It became the religious symbol of suffering. Look to-day, and see it is reverting to its original conditions, and why? Because to-day, it typifies the use to which it may be put, instead of the religious superstition that it was the cross upon which you were to believe, and to hang your faith, to attach yourself, and that you wer to persecute those who did not believe. Instead to-day it is one of the instruments that sustains the means of communication over the earth.

Ingersoll typified this, when he compared the cross of theology, to the cross of the telegraph pole. These are evidences of the old and the new. The superstitious fear which so long has hounded the human imagination, compelling man to suffer, suffer the pangs and agonies that his imagination could create, that he must prostrate himself before a picture of a cross, and there sign himself, either to the belief in that which his reason would not adopt, or to the torments of a hell, these alternatives were presented to him through his superstitions. It is well friends, that we stop to consider the spiritual significance of these things. There is a spiritual interpretation. We are given to the perversion of ideas, when we no longer study their actual uses. Men dogmatized symbols, their dogmatism formulated their theories and presented them to the world, and theology has labelled them "Thus saith the Lord," and man has bowed low to them, never questioning their uses, never realizing their appropriation to themselves, and what their application might imply. On the contrary, they have allowed the interpretation of a priesthood to dominate their beliefs, and in this domination, they have allied themselves to theories and dogmas; but reason, that bright and shining Godliness that illumines every human soul, if its forces are allowed to burn on the altars of intelligence, would drive out these old opinions, and establish the real interpretation by which we may gain some benefit to ourselves, and our lives. It is a fact that man is too ready to consign his beliefs to that which makes life easier for himself. If he can believe, because some one tells him that a thing is true, it is much easier than to think it out, to reason out from cause to effect, to study the law, to make himself acquainted with his own necessities, to appropriate truths to his own life, and make the best uses of them for his own advancement. Religion is the least progressive of any condition of human thought, it is the least progressive of any condition that applies to the intellect of man, and why? Simply because in religion a man allows another man to think for him. In politics, in agriculture, in commerce, in science, in philosophy, in everything else, he is entitled to the privilege of thinking for himself, thinking out upon the basis of reason, that is grounded in intelligence, the theories that are adapted to his own life, and to understand the causes which produced legitimate results; but, in religion, he has had no right to question, no right to sound the depths, no right to reason, and everywhere his reason has been throttled by superstitious awe. Thus, a great harm has been done the human race, and it is high time that we resign these dogmatic superstitions, and take upon ourselves the privilege to investigate every human law that pertains to the welfare of human society.

God may move in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform, He may plant his footsteps on the sea, and ride upon the storm, but even so, we may know that it is God's law. It is His law that is manifesting himself in the storm; His law that holds the mysteries within His grasp, only until we shall solve them, and make those mysteries our own. Science has thus far accomplished this result. Shall we stand with Buckley, and believe with him, that every man has a right to sift every truth to its foundation. Shall we stand with Spurgeon, and believe that there is no virtue in truth that we cannot understand. Shall we stand and speak with Channing, and confirm to the world, I want no religion that will not demonstrate its own virtues.

Shall we go with Pierpont, the veteran temperance worker, who dared to say to an unbelieving congregation, and was thrown out of his pulpit for his utterances, "I believe in temperance, and I believe in temperance in all things, because in temperance I find the highest type of religion." It is that which clears the reason, which unfolds the mind, and which enthrones the intellect," and for these assertions he was taken from his pulpit, and he became—what? Before the door opened, and he was ushered into the presence of the angels, he became an investigator and believer in Modern Spiritualism. It came to him as a bright illumination, and when his head was whitened by the frosts of more than four score years, he declared, all my life have I been climbing this spiritual stairway, and I have just found the open door, now I am ready to depart, call me when you will, I am ready;" and the call came when resting quietly in repose upon his pillow; the door opened, and his spirit fled from earth, trusting and knowing that the mansion of God was made ready for him. Thus Spiritualism, which to-day stands not for superstitions, but stands for investigation, the acquirement of knowledge, the proof of truth, the demonstration of theories, the solving of the problems of light, to-day stands before you for your acceptance. Spiritualism presents many mysteries, it is full of parables, but it is the parable that appeals to your understanding, that appeals to your reason, that invites your investigation, and solicits your principles.

Spiritualism is the key to the door of everlasting truth. It involves the world; it embraces humanity; it sheds its light over all races; it knows no north, no south, no east, no west; no white man, no black man, it is for all, for everyone. It is the emancipator from superstitious fear; it is robbing death of its terrors; it is the angel at the sepulcher of your own beliefs, pointing to a broader and brighter pathway, to a world of illuminating angels; it is a truth that brings to you not only the mysteries of life, but it opens the door that makes those mysteries plain. It teaches every man and every woman to think for him and herself; to reason for him and herself. Therefore it cannot become sectarian, it cannot be confined within a creed. No man can affirm I believe for another. No sect can declare a belief that any other people must accept. The door is open, you are invited to its banquet table, to partake of its viands. Take no superstitious symbols, read them for what they mean, and make their uses your own.

Thus religious symbols fade away into Divine realities, and spiritual life is the outgrowth of the forsaking of religious superstition. The Spiritualist may become superstitious, and very frequently we find him so, and why? Because he is looking for the phenomena supply. He rests simply on phenomena, without traversing the thoroughfares which lead to the exalted position of the higher life. Such Spiritualists need converting three times a day. They are men and women that are never satisfied with the truth when uttered, but require a "test," from daylight till evening. All the years of their life they are treading the same narrow path, simply believing that some spirit will come to them and tell them how to get rich, and how to do something they want to do. It does not mean anything to them, it does not mean immortal life, it does not mean eternal growth, eternal development, it only means something I want now and here. Make me strong, and I will believe; give me a test, and I will believe.

What will you believe? What will you believe? He or she who rests upon phenomena alone is no greater, no stronger, no clearer in his understanding, than he who stands beside the chemist, as he goes into his laboratory to make an analysis, and brings to you the result. You know not the component parts, you know not what the performance may have been, you know not what the relations are. You simply see the result, and you are settled in your opinion as to their merits. You know nothing of the causes; you know nothing of the reasons why; you have never investigated the principles involved in the formation of these elements, therefore you are not capable of understanding them. When you know how these things are composed; how to appropriate them to your every-day necessities; how to make the best and highest use of them, then you have entered into a higher understanding of their merits.

For instance, if man had been standing in the inventive world, where he has been standing in the religious world, you would light your houses with a tallow dip; you would ride your stage coach over the earth; you would warm yourselves with the old fireplace, you would prepare your food upon the cranes used in ancient days; you would cook everything with the old-time utensils; you would listen to the music produced on the corn fiddle; you would never know the great rhythm of the harmonies of nature, to which your souls have become attuned, and are uplifted to the appreciation of Divine highness; you would never know the uses of electricity and steam; you would never know the transit over the earth in palace cars, and the palaces upon the seas; you would never know of the wonderful advancement of science; you would look upon the earth as though it were flat and did not move, and you would look upon the stars as the streams of glory that were peering down upon your heads at night, rather than the motion of numberless worlds traveling athwart the skies, each one with its journey marked out, and it cannot vary from its course. Science has made these lessons plain, and no longer you look upon a comet with great awe, because it is the fore-runner of war. You do not look upon the signs that come into your homes as the monitions of death.

The Roman Catholic church, whose old-time superstitions were formulated in Ireland, has gone forth, and we note much of the superstition by which its followers have been held in bondage up to the present time, still abides with them. He who is desirous of a sign, sees a light advancing, and a man will behold it with great awe, he will tell you that the devil is after him, and some great disaster will befall him. Some shadow is seen, and he is sure some evil is shown to him. To-day, science tells us that an imagination creates images, that an imagination will picture signs, and we will trace them to their causes, and more frequently we will find their foundation in indigestion. Thus, in the mental indigestion of olden times do we find much of the superstition of long ago. They have befriended and shielded for the sake of terrorizing the believers.

Thus, let us hail with delight, with glad songs, the belief that has swelled like a great wave over the human race; that has asked for testimony; that has clamored for evidence; that has taught the world the reasons why of everything, and religion to-day has not become a symbol, but it has become a reality. It is not a superstition, but it is a living truth, that involves all life; that belongs not to a world that we cannot see, or hear, or feel, but it belongs to our world, our life, our earthly experiences and relations. It is something that we live, not what we believe alone, but what we know, and prove from day to day. Its symbols are holy deeds, pure living, sweet charity, and loving sympathy. Those are its symbols, those should be its illuminations, and those should be the radiant lights that are going out from soul to soul. Aye, let us look to heaven for light, and truth, and love, but let us find that heaven within. It is born of goodness, love, wisdom, and God, and is not allied to sin. Look on the higher, to find there the great truths that guide our lives, and we will stand upon the heights of time, upon the heights of truth, and love. The world will be richer, stronger, truer, nobler and holier for what we know, for what we live, and for how we love one another.

MUST THE WORLD ALL KNOW THE HEART?

Must the world all know the heart?
Is there no life from it apart?
Is it to bury pain, joy and care, deceit?
Must we unfold to all we meet,
The very essence of our lives,
Which cut the heart as two-edged knives?
Ah! then I'll bury in my breast
Deceit, and God that knoweth best,
Shall judge me of my wrong.
And if my voice shall tremble in some song,
Unbidden tears shall glisten bright,
What mortal eye, can read aright?
Who'll know what scenes this song recall;
Who'll know it's but a dream, of all
I've hoped for, longed to gain,
Yet woke to find it all in vain?
Who'll see the face so dear to me,
With eyes I felt my soul did see.
Who'll hear the voice with cadence sweet,
Whose gentle murmurings oft repeat?
Who'll feel the touch of a vanished hand,
Yet know somewhere, in some land.
Weaves in life's loom over and over again,
The broken threads must unite somewhere,
Either here or over there.
Who'll know if I do them unfold
Secrets of the heart, lips never told?
Who'll care for all I prize or hold—
Can they discern the dross from gold?
They'd sip the nectar passing sweet,
Then dash the cup beneath my feet,
E'en the dregs to the world they'd throw,
And I, famished and starved, alone must go.
Can they feed on the joys of my life?
Will they help me bear the pain and strife?
No! ah, no. Like a toy that is old,
They'd cast all aside, dross and pure gold,
And I—I must go on with my heavy load,
Climbing the hill—o'er life's lonely road.
And so to the world, I'll bury my joy, or pain,
I'll smile though I meet with loss, or gain;
To the hungry I'll give a morsel so sweet,
'Twill fill their measure, returning full mete;
To those who linger in memory, dear,
Choice garlands of thought I'll weave, never fear.
When life shall unfold, and memory clear,
In that beautiful land, I know they'll draw near.
Won't they linger awhile at the beautiful gate?
When they find I'm not there, and that I am late.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Things Spiritual In St. Louis.

Spiritual and Liberal Thought Outlook in St. Louis and at the Exposition.

LETTER NUMBER TWO.

That the Exposition is of "the earth earthy" no one can deny, and that such is the manifest purpose of all expositions one must admit. Commerce, civil and military prowess, these must be the most in evidence at such a time.

Still there is a luminous infinite background that tells of ideals of a better life and higher purpose for the human race.

The local Spiritualist societies are to continue their Sunday services and week-evening social gatherings during the entire summer and autumn (instead of having their usual mid-summer vacation). At the Spiritual Temple in Pine street, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond of Chicago (Church of the Soul), officiated the last two Sundays in June, being most cordially introduced by the pastor, Mr. T. Grimshaw, and by the congregation. Of course there were many visitors from many parts of the country who were glad to be present on those Sundays and at the Wednesday evening seance when Mrs. Richmond spoke briefly, and two excellent mediums (Mrs. Hary and Mrs. Shaw) gave messages or "tests." This little church is an ideal place for meetings, lyceums and social reunions.

During the exposition it is kept open every day, some of the ladies of the congregation being always in attendance to welcome strangers and give them papers and books to read, and such information as they may require about the best way to get to the exposition.

Last Sunday Harrison D. Barrett spoke for the Pine street church and Mrs. Richmond for Prof. Peck's society in the Odeon. Here she was also most cordially welcomed and she is to speak there again next Sunday, after which she goes to the eastern camps. Mr. Peck goes to Clinton, Iowa, to preside over the camp-meeting there (of which he is chairman). Dr. J. M. Peebles follows Mrs. Richmond at the Odeon.

Thus far local mediums have supplied the messages and phenomenal phases, but I understand others are expected later.

There are other meetings in the city. Prof. C. W. Stewart and Mrs. Josie K. Folsom are having large crowds in Howard Hall. Mr. Stewart is a brilliant speaker, and Mrs. Folsom has good mediumistic gifts. Mrs. Harey, Mrs. Price and others hold meetings in other parts of the city.

St. Louis, like all other places, has no one large and united society. It seems almost a pity that all the Spiritualists cannot unite in supporting the Temple. It is such a beautiful place and needs all the help financially it can get, for the building is only partly paid for.

Still I suppose no one speaker or class of speakers, no one one or half-dozen mediums can supply the varied and diversified needs of Spiritualists.

In October the N. S. A. is to hold its annual convention here, and many Spiritualists are waiting until that time.

Still there is a large sprinkling of them among the many who attend the exposition daily.

There has been no attempt to hold a camp-meeting or other large continuous meeting during the World's Fair. The N. S. A. thought it too expensive an undertaking, and as the exposition is not open on Sunday the bulk of the residents and visitors prefer the city meetings.

Dr. Green's Canvas Cottage City and Fraternal Auditorium, although deserving (from the Doctor's earnest work and efforts) of great success, seems a little out of the line of the great throngs who go to the fair on week-days and stay in the city Sundays. The Doctor is making a good start, however, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond having opened and dedicated his tent service last Sunday morning, to a select and appreciative audience. Later, Dr. Peebles and others have promised to speak. The sleeping tents of the Canvas Cottage City are comfortable and sufficiently spacious, and the whole "city" is but a few hundred yards from one of the entrances to the exposition.

Inside the grounds, of course, there is and will be no attempt at presenting Spiritualism, but the N. S. A. holds its convention in St. Louis in the large convention hall set apart by the authorities for all such purposes.

The Unity League (continuation of the World's Parliament of Religions) was assigned a place on the regular program within the exposition grounds.

In my next letter I will tell of its services, its aims and purposes. One really needs to be ubiquitous at such a time. While attending one very interesting meeting or something one is sure to miss half-a-dozen other things that one wishes to attend. Y. O. C.

LETTER NUMBER THREE.

The close of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's engagement for the present in this city was last Sunday evening. She spoke on two subjects, taken from the audience, "Does Justice precede love, or love precede justice in the true government?" and "The Future of Spiritualism." She had prevously answered several questions in a most concise and satisfactory manner. Mrs. Richmond has been received with the greatest appreciation and consideration in both societies where she has spoken while here. Your correspondent understands she is now to go East to fill engagements at the camps and summer meetings.

Mr. W. F. Peck startled his congregation at the close of Mrs. Richmond's address by a word of good-bye—not only for the summer, but possibly for an indefinite time. He has been six years forming and building up the Church of Spiritual Unity, but it seems the future movements both of church and pastor are somewhat uncertain. A perceptible sadness accompanied this announcement, and many thought the pastor would be summoned back to his flock in the autumn.

The little church in Pine street is as a body, breathing freer as the installment due on the church debt has been paid, and both Mr. Grimshaw and the trustees of the church are for the present relieved of the impending burden. A "building of their own" is a good thing to have, but a mortgage and overhanging debt and interest are sometimes difficult. However, the bridge is crossed for this time.

Harrison D. Barrett spoke to appreciative audiences in Pine street, while Mrs. Richmond was discoursing to equally interested people in the Odeon.

The exposition is bringing many speakers and mediums to St. Louis, and it is a wise move to keep all the meetings open, although for three or four days including Sunday the weather was such as to drive all the people to the suburbs and beer gardens. So "moral" is the government of the United States that the needed loan would not be granted unless the exposition were closed on Sundays. This leaves the thousands of visitors no other places to go than to church or the beer gardens where vaudeville and other shows more objectionable than anything on "The Pike" are at full swing. But why not close "The Pike" and leave the vast educational exposition open? Echo answers, "Why?"

"The Unity League," of which I promised to write in this letter, held its meetings according to the enclosed program. In its inception it was purely spiritual, being the outgrowth of the great Parliament of Religions held in Chicago at the time of the Columbian exposition.

Charles C. Bonney, the noble promoter of those wonderful parliaments, and Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert of Evanston, Ill., were, at the conclusion of the Parliament of Religions, made a committee to carry forward the work. Mr. Bonney had been aided in all his arduous duties by counsel and advice from the invisible hosts, who Rev. Dr. Barrows said, were hovering over the nation and city, aiding in that great international exposition. Mrs. Harbert has been a student of Spiritualism for years, and her own impressions and those of her friends have helped her to carry forward the work since the passing on of Mr. Bonney to the higher life about a year ago.

The exposition authorities accorded the Unity League a place of meeting and a place on the official program; further than this concerning said place—Convention Hall, deponent saith not, except that had it been in Kamschatka or the Fiji Islands, it would have been just as accessible and just as easy to find. But the writer, no doubt aided by unseen powers, succeeded in clambering up hills, over rough and muddy walks (which do abound in the outermost districts of the exposition grounds and at last found this assemblage of choice souls grouped together as might have been the "wise men of the East" when they were following the guiding star of the New Truth.

Nothing could be more interesting than what was said in those meetings—nothing could be farther from the crowd, and nothing could better represent the relative "fewness" of those who follow after Truth, and the relative hugeness of the crowd that follows the show. The leaven that leavens the whole lump was there. Each note struck was true to the world's coming ideal, and a dominant spiritual note was always upon the lips of the chairman (Mrs. Harbert) who introduced Mrs. Richmond as "one whom Chicago and the nation were proud to honor for her great spiritual work." One of the secretaries of the Unity League said Mrs. Richmond's address was "a grand symphony."

Then there was Mr. Hickman, the Chautauqua organizer; Prof. Chainey, who was "spirited" out of materialism into Spiritualism, then into Theosophy, then into Occultism and a mild Theocracy of his own creation. At Williams' Bay, Wis., he has founded his earthly Paradise, and certainly time has beautified Prof. Chainey, or his ideal life which he thinks he has found; clad all in white, his snowy hair and beard gave him the appearance of the true prophet. Then there was Elbert Hubbard, speaking for the Roycrofters—the apostle of the Usefully Beautiful—of Labor made ideal. His words were simple, direct and charming.

The Unity League will be heard from more and more—since it is not only for a religious unity but for all useful and progressive things that make for peace and enlightenment. The Orient meets the Occident to-day and comes with a better interpretation (sometimes) of the "Prince of Peace" than that offered by so-called "Christian" nations.

The reception at the Inside Inn by the League was numerously attended, nearly all the speakers being present, and many friends and strangers hastened to do them homage. Mrs. Richmond was made much of by both the members of the League and their guests and in all cases the spiritual impact and pervading presence was never lost sight of. Mr. C. C. Bonney as a spirit is as much (and more) in evidence with Mrs. Harbert and her friends as when he was here in bodily form.

One could not help wishing that such a meeting could have been held in one of the accessible down-town halls or churches, where many hundreds—not sight-seers but thinkers—could have been present without the fatigue and expense of going to the exposition grounds.

But the seed having been sown, it will be wafted by breath of wind or beak of bird to such hearts and minds as are ready to receive it.

FOREST HOME CAMP.

A Northern Resort for Spiritualists.

In northern Michigan, half-way between Traverse City and Petoskey, or two miles south of the village of Central Lake, and five miles north of the village of Bellaire, is the camp-ground of the Forest Home Spiritualist Association. It is named after the township of Forest Home; and is situated on the west bank of long and beautiful Intermediate Lake. On the grounds are groves of evergreen trees; I was there two and three years ago and helped to trim them. The camp-ground is part of an evergreen nursery, where shade trees of a great variety were set out and are still growing. Mr. J. W. Nixon and family of Bellaire helped to trim the locust and evergreen trees; now they are growing into a second grove.

The camp-ground of eighteen acres is nearly paid for and it has a growing successful destiny. I lived in Bellaire two and three years ago and my wife, Mrs. Jennie Martin, was one of the speakers there. We can recommend the camp to all. When Spiritualists are going to the northern resorts this summer, I suggest that they also visit Forest Home camp during a Sunday excursion. Yes, go there and build a cottage, for it is as beautiful a place as many others around Petoskey or Charlevoix. Yes, go where your own religion is and help to make it popular.

My brother-in-law, Frank H. Lesher, of Mancelona, is its president; Mrs. Maud Eastman of Mancelona, is its secretary. Just write to them for programs.

My father-in-law, Samuel Lesher, now almost eighty years, writes to me that he has bought the only log house there and will live in it instead of in a tent. He writes in a nice round hand, clear and steady; he works hard; in spirit he is just as young as any boy, full of jokes and talk. Every season, weeks before the camp opens, he has gone there, cut the hay and cleared the grounds; he has gathered the brush in piles, rolled logs together and burned them. Yes, he has done all that alone.

Now, young folks, don't let that eighty-year-old boy beat you. Go there and do something; have an object in life and you will feel better; join the crowd and push things along; be somebody and have a little influence; help along. H. EUGENE MARTIN.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Liberty, Me.—"If you are going to have any Fourth of July celebration this year," said James William Brown to his son, "you had better get it over by Saturday night, because I am going to die on the Fourth, and you will not wish to hear any firecrackers until after I am under ground." In the morning of July 4, Mr. Brown, who was 84 last May, milked his two cows and ate his breakfast. Then he read the morning paper. Soon after 9 o'clock he walked across the lawn and sat down in a summer pavilion, where he listened to the boys, who were making a loud noise in the village a mile away. When his daughter came out to call him to dinner he was seated in his armchair with his elbow propped against the rail of the summer house. His eyes were closed and his face was very pale. The family physician said he had been dead two hours. Mr. Brown is the fourth member of his family who has died on July. 4.

Isa A. Cross writes: "Mrs Nora E. Hill, pastor of the Rising Sun Mission, will lecture for the Hyde Park Occult Society on July 24. We expect a treat, as she is one of the hard workers in that busy mission. Come out and get the different ideas of different speakers. On Sunday, July 10, Walter DeVoe gave us one of his bright and spiritual lectures, which we all enjoyed very much. He says things that make people think. On that same date we went to Beverly Hills on one of our outings, and spent another delightful day in the woods. Please join us on our next one on July 24. Sunday evening service at 8 o'clock at 319 E. 55th street. Psychic manifestations by Mrs. Kline and other mediums."

The New Thought Federation which wes perfected by the executive committee elected by the convention held in Chicago last November, has made arrangements for holding the fourth New Thought Convention in St. Louis, Mo., October 25 to 28, inclusive. It will be international in scope and character, merging the work inaugurated by the International Metaphysical League and that of the Chicago New Thought Federation.

H. W. Henderson writes from Lawrence, Kans., that the camp-meeting at Ottawa will not be held this year. Long continued rains and floods, destruction of furniture, racking of buildings, inundating grounds, etc., are the reasons given for not holding the camp as usual.

Mrs. L. J. Jaquet writes: "The Evangelical Spiritual meetings will close during the months of July and August. I will still continue my Wednesday afternoon and Saturday evening circles in my parlors."

H. F. Coates writes: "I wish to announce that I will be at home, 233 East Thirty-second street, during the summer, for work as usual. I will also conduct services at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, each Sunday at 8 p. m. Many halls are closed and many are seeking a Sunday service. We invite you to our hall where the best of mediums are to be heard."

Dr. P. T. Johnson writes from Battle Creek, Mich., in reference to Farmer Riley's sickness: "I wish to say for the benefit of all, that Farmer Riley is at my house, confined to his bed, suffering with a severe attack of inflammatory fever, and has been for the last two weeks, and his recovery seems slow. I don't think he will be able this summer or fall to give any seances, or fill any of his engagements, though his guides think they will be able to get him out in a few days: My guides have done everything possible for him. All send your thoughts for his speedy recovery. We can't afford to let him pass on yet."

A Friend writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "On last Sunday evening, notwithstanding the fact that President H. D. Barrett was lecturing at the Pine street Temple, and the renowned Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was at the Odeon, Howard's hall was filled with an appreciative audience. After a short lecture by C. W. Stewart, Mrs. Folsom invited Miss Ella Preston to come forward and for a short time that excellent psychic entertained the people. Mrs. Folsom was then blindfolded and gave several readings from cards that were sent up, and then she removed the bandage from her eyes and under control of Spirit Carson she gave fifteen independent writings, all of which were recognized, in the space of ten minutes. The written messages were all given under strict test conditions and the audience was carried away with enthusiasm. Mrs. Folsom is a truly wonderful medium and the courage she displays in going on with her work despite her terrible afflictions and ill health, is the wonder and admiration of her hosts of friends in St. Louis."

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Word comes from Port Huron, Mich., that supernatural causes—tins rattling noisily and unseen bodies walking across the floors with tramping feet—are said to have reduced Mrs. Edward Glover in one week's time from a plump woman to a thin, nervous wreck. A week ago Mr. and Mrs. Glover moved from Bancroft street into the house owned by Frank McGraw, and since that time they and many of their friends have heard these uncanny noises. They assume they are caused by ghosts that haunt the place. The first day they were in the house the 7-year-old daughter of her sister, Mrs. George Ryder, of Elmwood street, came toddling downstairs from the chambers with awful fright pictured on her face. Rushing into the arms of Mrs. Glover, she cried: "Don't let that man touch me, aunty." Mrs. Glover supposed the child was only frightened by babyish fancies and did her best to soothe her distress. Later Mrs. Glover heard a tin rattling upstairs and went to investigate. She found a tin which was used to cover a stove-pipe hole making the noise and, taking it down, placed it upon a bed. She returned downstairs and soon heard the tin rattling harder and louder than ever. She rushed upstairs again. Step, step, step, the floor was creaking as if under the feet of a moving body, but nobody was visible. The sound passed all around her and the tin rattled again. Her nerves were unstrung and she rushed to the lower floor. When her husband returned she told him of the affair and he was not convinced until he also heard the noise, not in the same room, however, but all over the house. This occurred Monday, and that night she was too nervous to sleep in the house and they went to the neighbors. Tuesday night they decided to stick it out and went to bed. The light was left burning brightly, but the noises continued. This settled it and they did not sleep in the house again. The next day a number of their friends were called in, but the unnatural noises could not be located and the place was declared to be haunted. Mrs. Glover could not stand the strain and a house was rented two doors away. Their neighbors helped them to move their household goods and now for the first time in a week Mrs. Glover is resting comfortably.

C. Kirchner writes: "Rev. Thos S. Warner, assistant pastor of the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, will lecture on Sunday evening, July 24, at the Mission's hall, 378 S. Western avenue. Subject, 'Know Thyself.' Brother Warner is blossoming out as one of our foremost speakers on the Spiritualist rostrum, and always conveys the right ideas to his hearers. We will also have our usual good singing. All welcome; seats free."

The Journal of Columbus, Ohio, says: "The experiments with the treatment of alcoholism by hypnotism, begun by Russian scientists in Moscow in 1896, have been pronounced successful. It is asserted that this cure has reformed 70 per cent of the horrible examples upon whom it has been tried and the scientific gentlemen are quite jubilant. In spite of the optimistic reports sent abroad, we are inclined to doubt the permanency of the new remedy. So long as the patients are kept under the hypnotic influence, it is reasonable to believe that they will remain sober, as the traditional judge. Hypnotism made a great singer of Trilby, whose ability to carry a tune ceased the moment Svengali stopped waving his baton. So the mysterious power can make an earnest temperance advocate of a drunken old reprobate, while the hypnotist makes his own will that of his subject. But we should hesitate to trust the latter in the corner saloon, alone with the barkeeper. If a hard drinker can hypnotize himself into the belief that he doesn't really like liquor or that the indulgence of his appetite is ruining him, he may effect a permanent cure. But no young man should contract the habit with the idea that the mesmeric eye of some hypnotic individual can rid him of it later. He would be taking a long chance."

Mrs. E. Whittier writes from N. Andover, Mass.: "I do dearly love The Progressive Thinker; it is half my life. I see other papers of this kind, but I have never seen one yet that can begin with yours."

Mrs. Florence Terry writes from Wellington, Ohio: "Our Methodist minister, Mr. Gross, is giving a series of sermons on 'Delusions.' The first of this series he delivered last evening on Spiritualism, and for his scripture lesson he read the first 16 verses of I. Samuel, 28th chapter. You understand, only the first 16 verses. He held Spiritualism up to ridicule. He used no logic, and what he told concerning the ism was only what he had heard or read. Our society of less than a dozen counts five from his flock. This shows very plainly why he felt called upon to make us a subject for his best efforts. The Spiritualists are adding to their number the intellectual middle-aged adult, while the churches in general must be content with recruits from the nursery. Does Mr. Gross think that by stepping upon Spiritualists he is mounting higher in the estimation of the orthodox people? A poor way indeed to climb, and very uncertain. We as American born citizens are endowed by our creator with certain unalienable rights, and in the pursuit of happiness we shall embrace whatsoever religion appeals most to our reason and common sense."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Our meetings are a success for the time of year. All the faithful have not left the city, and we are here to stay. We have a cool hall, being cooled by electric fans, and plenty of room, and a fine ventilation. Dr. Temple has rendered good service. Sarah Thomas has been with us two Sundays and fine talent is on hand to entertain. Every Sunday evening Walter DeVoe gives us some of the rich cream from the great ocean of truth. Mrs. Herrington will have charge of the Success Circle and Happy Health Club. These vibrations are sent daily to members in all parts of the world. Come and join us."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. S. E. Mackley writes from California: "I am glad Spiritualists are doing their part so nobly and fearlessly in weeding out the frauds. Farmer Riley and W. W. Aber seem to stand firm as yet, but I hope to see some of them accept the $1,000 offer, although, of course, it would not materially affect the standing of Spiritualism before the world. 'All a put-up job,' would be the verdict."

N. A. Churen, M. D., writes: "Spiritualism is prospering grandly in Los Angeles, Cal. We have many good workers here in the way of lecturers and platform test mediums, besides other talent. There are numerous places of meeting, all of which seem to work harmoniously together. I never saw so much gratuitous healing of the sick, nor so much dispensing of charity to poor members. May the good work go on until neither a body nor a soul hungers for food."

Mrs. I. V. St. G. Williams writes from Vancouver, B. C.: "There are very few Spiritualists here and no society of any kind to help the spiritual cause. I have been giving trance readings at my home for the past month (two days a week), and expect to keep up the good work as I am permanently located here. I am sure my friends in Chicago and St. Louis, where I was known as Elizabeth Smith, will be pleased to learn that I am now married, and still working for the cause of Spiritualism."

Mrs. Allie Buhland writes from 1224 N. Senate avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.: "The workers of Indianapolis are not idle, and our industry has brought its reward. We have been throwing out life lines, and many have been drawn from the tumultuous sea of doubt into the harbor of realization through the efforts of your writer, assisted by F. V. Jackson and C. A. Buhland. On May 29, the anniversary of the spiritual birth of my first born, the little Bessie who is my sweet little test control, we organized a band of Spiritualists and investigators into the Progressive Spiritual Church, receiving our charter from the Indiana State Association last week. What we have done here we can accomplish elsewhere and would be pleased to hear from parties at any point who desire an enthusiastic, energetic worker to labor with them."

Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie is now at No. 4312 Greenwood avenue, Chicago, Ill. She writes: "I finished work at Camp Brady, Ohio, Sunday, July 10; had a splendid audience and the meeting was a success. The engagement there was most pleasant in every respect. The camp bids fair to be one of the best this season. I will be located at above address until the last of this month. Any mail will reach me here. Will go to Clinton, Iowa, the last Sunday in the month; from there to Chesterfield, Ind., for the month of August."

Mrs. Emma Hess writes from Peoria, Ill.: "Our Rosebud Club has in it just nine mediums, and we will be called upon to operate on the eyes of one who has been in total blindness for five long years. The doctor who had his case in charge is now in spirit life and he will do the work through his medium, and if it is a success we will let the world know through your valuable paper, which is appreciated for its honesty and truthfulness."

Annie H. Pierce writes from Rockford, Ill.: "The Ladies' Auxiliary to the Spiritual Science Society of Rockford, Ill., wishes to be placed on record once more in your columns as a band of earnest women, working for the cause of Spiritualism. We have regular meetings every week at the homes of the ladies in alphabetical order, with a fee of five cents each for the members, whether they are present or not, and when we have visitors, which is nearly always, we are not so ill-bred as to fail in giving them an opportunity to contribute if they desire, and in this way we manage to pick up a neat little sum aside from the work we are doing. At present we are preparing for a bazaar to be held in the fall, and as we are in full accord with the old saying, 'All work,' etc., we have an entertaining committee appointed at each meeting for the ensuing week, and so combine pleasure with profit. We have also our regular monthly social; our last was a conundrum supper, at the home of our president, Mrs. Gitchel. The supper being served on a commodious back porch, lighted with Japanese lanterns, and if it be true that people laugh and grow fat, our society must have added several pounds avoirdupois to its weight that evening. We are planning an excursion on the river for this month and expect to have a glorious good time. We hope also to make something financially."

Sarah J. Grubb writes from Colorado: "I must say that The Progressive Thinker is the best paper in the world for me. I will tell why I am a Spiritualist. Many years ago my hand was used to write automatically in the German language, and a name signed that was unknown to me. A question was answered by the control to a person who was present, but who disputed the reply. Both maintained they were correct until the control got angry and ended by holding my hand so firmly on the table that two stout men were unable to lift it. I became so frightened that I declared I never would try such a thing again. I have never been able to write since, but I must add that the control was correct and the person asking the question was the one mistaken. Both could speak and write the German language, but I could not. This was a test for me of spirit knowledge and force. The grand philosophy of progression came to me later, and has been the means of making me a better and a happier woman than all my former experience in church life. I was brought up a Methodist. I still like the habit of calling each other sister and brother. I can take in the whole world, but I feel sick of the terms reverend and pastor, and the christening of infants, and I may as well say it all, invocations. I heard too much of that when I was in church bondage."

Mrs. John Brown, Sr., writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "It will afford great pleasure to the unseen if you will allow me a small space in your valuable paper to announce to your intellectual readers that they soon will be treated to a feast of good things through the mediumship of Miss Mae Hunt, who is now residing in San Francisco, and whose work consists of various phases, and some of which are unknown to the present generation. Miss Hunt has been before the public as a speaker and test medium more or less for several years, but for the past few months was withdrawn from the public work preparatory for a higher, grander and more specific work of which you will hear more anon as the work progresses. The work consists of readings by mail and otherwise, meetings and circles of various kinds of which will be written many descriptive and explanatory letters affording much interesting

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and Mr. Richmond have passed through Chicago on route to the Eastern camps. They had just time to take a little needed rest at their home in Rogers Park before going eastward. Mrs. Richmond's work in St. Louis was most cordially received and heartily appreciated by both societies and by the Unity League. Dates for July: Corry, Pa., 17 and 22; Onset, Mass., 31st.

Reading to brighten the days of many a weary traveler sojourning on the shady side of this mundane sphere, giving new hope and new joys that they still live to know these things. As there is much controversy regarding old manifestations and their mediums the times demand the new to take their places, giving a new impetus and strength to light up the dark places and brush away the cobwebs gathered therein. The intelligence of the present demands investigation in the bright light of new developments as nature evolves them from her bosom for the benefit of her children. And it is our right to demand the highest and best obtainable and not be satisfied with anything less, receiving it with due regard."

H. R. LaGrange, secretary, writes: "The Island Lake camp association opened its tenth annual camp session, July 10, with a goodly attendance, the speaker of the day being Mrs. Margaret LaGrange. Her eloquent discourses and astrological character readings were well received. From all indications it seems as if this is to be the banner year of the I. L. C. A. Cottages are nearly all occupied, and people pouring in every day. The association has spared neither time nor expense in giving to the public one of the best programs to be seen at any camp. Following order, starting Sunday, July 17, we offer to our patrons as platform workers, W. V. Nicum, B. F. Austin, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, D. A. Herrick, G. W. Kates and wife, Julia M. Walton, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. White. All phases of the phenomena will be represented. Farmer Riley, the world-renowned materializing medium, is under positive engagement first two weeks of camp. Mr. A. W. Kaiser, trumpet medium of Toledo, Ohio, gave a public seance to a large number, Sunday afternoon, and all who sat were well satisfied. He will be with us all this month and will be pleased to accept week-day engagements within reasonable distance of camp grounds. Remember, the camp is open now. Board at our new modern 50-room fire-proof hotel, $5 and $5.50 per week. For programs and particulars address H. R. LaGrange, secretary, Island Lake Box, Brighton, Mich."

J. M. White writes: "As I expect to start South soon, letters for engagements between Lincoln, Neb., and Kansas City will reach me at Elmwood, Neb., F. R. D. No. 17, care of A. T. Hinshaw."

D. W. Hull is at the Escondido Camp, Cal. He goes from there to Wallington, stopping a few days at Stockton, and Dunsmuir.

Mrs. Maud K. Gates writes from Winfield, Kansas: "The Winfield (Kansas) Association find it impossible to hold its eleventh annual camp-meeting this year, on account of the recent floods leaving the park in a most dreadful condition."

Mrs. M. Henry writes: "The Ladies' Auxiliary connected with the Universal Occult Society will hold a lawn social on the evening of July 20, at the residence of the president, Mrs. Marian Davenport, 3138 Rhodes avenue. Admission free; fifteen cents charged for ice cream and cake. A small fee charged for palm readings by Mrs. Wagstaff and Mrs. Henry, in gypsy costumes. Music and other attractions."

Dr. Bland is in receipt of the following letter from Rev. I. K. Funk, D. D., author of "The Widow's Mite." He says: "I have read with great pleasure your book, 'In the World Celestial.' It is a charming book, whether it be a dream or a reality. I can easily conceive how it could be a dream and more real than a great multitude of what we call objective realities. Your effort tends to place a rational foundation under our belief in an inner world, in immortality. It is, to me, a very suggestive book."

T. W. Sherk writes: "Rev. Harry J. Moore's second lecture at the Church of Spirit Communion 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, last Sunday evening, attracted a full house. We wish he could have been with us longer, and hope to have him with us again when his camp-meeting engagements have come to an end. It is one of the beauties of Spiritualism that its methods have not become formal and stereotyped, but on the contrary are free and natural, each individual working and speaking in his own way as the spirit moves. Mr. Moore's methods are distinctly his own. He makes his points very forcible and some of his emphatic statements might be resented by some investigators were it not that he keeps his audiences in constant good humor. Next Sunday evening Dr. Randall will lecture and Mrs. Pierce will sing, and Mr. Coates and others will give messages. Meetings will be conducted all summer and a large attendance is desired."

Mrs. S. R. Pierson writes from Bowen's Mills, Mich.: "Mrs. John Lindsey of Grand Rapids, Mich., has finished her work in Middleville, and is here at our home in Bowen's Mills. We had a very pleasant visit and held two home circles, at which the independent voices came, and we were very much pleased to hear from our friends. The work of the Spiritualists at this place is nearly at a standstill at present, as it is drawing near to camp-meeting time. Mrs. Lindsey starts home to Grand Rapids to-day to make ready for Mount Pleasant Park camp, Clinton, Iowa."

Mrs. J. E. Bower writes from Detroit, Mich.: "'By their fruits ye shall know them,' was truly verified as the friends gathered in the parlors of Mrs. Laura L. Crawford, the occasion being her last public circle until the autumn months. Over one hundred partook of ice cream and cake she had so thoughtfully provided, after listening to a fine program, music and recitations. The tests were given by the several mediums assisting, and were well received. We have some exceptionally fine local med'ums. As a fitting finale to the harmonious gathering a beautiful diamond ring was presented Mrs. Crawford as a token of the love they bore their pastor, counselor and friend."

Dr. Eves writes to the Philosophical Journal, Cal.: "Those who do not attend the meetings at Scottish hall, certainly miss hearing something that which cannot fail to entertain, instruct and spiritually inspire them to renew the battle of life in this world as well as to revive their spiritual hopes. I have attended Mr. Perkins' meetings several times and I can say, I, as well as the entire audience was interested and entertained from start to finish, in his refreshing methods of presenting the philosophy of life and mediumship, his singing alone is worth the paltry dime that we drop in the basket. His ability to develop a hearty laugh is in itself a tonic and the tests are so spontaneous and indicative of such wonderful accuracy, entirely free from any supposition of fraud, deception, or phrenology, that gave me great satisfaction, not only myself but many others received unmistakable tests of our spirit friends last Sunday evening. There are many faces in his audience who are never seen elsewhere in similar meetings, showing his mission of converting the skeptic. The Spiritualists will lose a grand, faithful and able worker when he leaves us for the Eastern states."

Prof. O. H. Hoy, Osteopathist, has removed from Chicago to Marshalltown, Iowa. He will answer calls to lecture on Osteopathy or Spiritualism.

Washington, D. C., July 17.—After resisting the skill of two experts connected with the treasury department, a small safe belonging to Col. J. Eldridge Smith, an inventor who died recently, has been opened, and now the only question is whether it was opened in answer to Mrs. Smith's prayers or through information coming direct from Col. Smith to S. Clark Swett, a Spiritualistic medium. Mrs. Smith scouts the idea of Spiritualism, but Mr. Swett, under whose manipulations the safe door swung open, says it was nothing else. The little safe contained all the valuable papers belonging to Col. Smith and he was the only one who knew the combination. Experts gave it up as a bad job. Then Mr. Swett said he would try. Swett says he has been a Spiritualist for forty years and has about twenty-five 'spirit guides.' One of the guides, he says, is an Indian girl, and she is the one, he states, who saw Col. Smith in the other world and got from him the combination and transmitted it, thus enabling the safe to be opened.

The world does move! A few years ago neither man nor woman of outspoken Spiritualistic or freethinking proclivities were honored by the sovereign states to represent them, or given charge where rested great responsibility, while to-day, the lady in charge of Idaho's Art and Industries at the St. Louis World's Fair, Mrs. C. J. Johnson (whose husband is an honored contributor to The Progressive Thinker), is an outspoken freethinker and an excellent medium. Her picture appeared lately in the St. Louis Sunday Star. The appointing power did not ask about her belief, but knew that she was a woman of energy, perseverance and ability. This may encourage the timid ones among us to step to the front, and let the world know that they are alive.

Mrs. Walter Tooley writes from Findlay, Ohio: "Mrs. Nina Challen, of Toledo, Ohio, has been with us this last week, giving lectures and test circles, bringing souls to the light. She is a diligent worker, not alone for the money, but for the good she can do."

That One Thousand Dollar Offer.

To the superficial and casual observer it looks reasonable and feasible.

But because it has not been accepted, and may not be accepted, Spiritualism will not fall into discredit and go into degeneracy therefor.

All Spiritual manifestations are as surely in accordance with conditions and the law governing spirit return as is the coming into this life of the newborn infant, which comes only in accordance with conditions and the law governing the same. So far as I am competent to measure and judge, the situation here being considered, the conditions and a knowledge of the law of mediumship comes not within the province of human understanding.

Suppose in mid-winter Mr. Hale shall offer $1,000 for a peach to materialize on a branch of a peach tree, with color fragrance and flavor.

The offer of $1,000 would not produce a single peach. He must wait for favorable conditions to mature, when under nature the beautiful peach with all its sweetness will surely materialize.

A medium cannot work his or her mediumship at will.

Mediumship is a gift, just as our faculties, or our hands or feet. All these should have our best care and most sacred protection.

From an experience in observation (I am not a medium) covering a period of more than fifty years witnessing many phases of mediumship, my advice to mediums is to give the $1,000 offer a wide go-by. The chances are that some unfairness in producing conditions would be dominated, and a failure might follow, and this by the stupid world would go to the ends of the earth. This would cause a backset to Spiritualism. It would entail grievous mortification and much wasted time by Spiritualists in submitting explanations.

Again, suppose it be a success and the medium receive the $1,000. I would be glad for her or him. But that is all the good it would do. Mr. Hale himself would not believe it. The Jamiesons would not believe it. And why should Spiritualists care whether they believe or not?

The joy and the sweet consolation which Spiritualism brings, fills the hearts of all who are conscious of the continuity of life.

The invitation goes out to all to come. The still small voice in each breast will guide and help to get knowledge which will give more of sweetness to life than all else beside.

THE PRAYER OF THE CHRISTIAN MILLIONAIRE.

"Jesus, lover of my soul,"
Give me ninety-five per cent;
While the money in doth roll
I'll be filled with sweet content.
"Hide me, Oh, my Savior, hide,"
While I make the dollars fast,
Safe into my safe they'll glide,
You'll receive thy poor at last.

"Other refuge have I none,"
Save my bonds and notes for me;
While I skin each poor man's son,
For support I'll look to thee.
"All my trust on thee is stayed,"
To my usury I'll cling,
For my scheme is neatly played,
'Neath the shadow of thy wing.

"Plenteous grace with thee is found,"
Let new victims now drop in;
Let them each with cash abound,
Make, oh, make for me more tin.
"Thou of life the fountain art,"
Let me draw long life from thee,
Plate with gold my marble heart,
Count my gains eternally.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Dr. E. Limsford: Q. What are the facts in relation to the "miraculous" breaking out of a spring of water in Andersonville prison yard, in answer to prayer or otherwise?

A. There can be no doubt about the spring "breaking out," and at a most opportune time. The cause of its so doing, of course, depended on natural forces, for the explanation by "miracle" is not to be entertained at the present time. There has been as much need and far more a thousand times, of interference of divine power in the affairs of men, to stay the hand of cruelty and wrong, and prayers have been offered ad infinitum, and the interference has not come. If the geological formation of that section is carefully studied, the bursting forth of a spring will not be considered miraculous. The only importance attaches to the time.

I have learned from a soldier confined in Andersonville at the time, that there was a terrific thunderstorm, with flood of rain, and immediately afterwards the spring broke out. The cause was entirely natural and only the superstitious would refer it to miracle.

Verona Miller: Q. I have heard a great deal of "angel guides," and have been inclind to believe in these invisible helpers; but the Slocum horror in which between five hundred and eight hundred innocent persons were painfully burned and drowned, either from the carelessness of a cook or the criminal stupidity of the captain, makes me lose all faith in so-called guides.

It looks as though the spirits could render humanity no greater service than to apprise it of such dangers.

What can be the matter with the spirits who are presumably clairvoyant that they do not give warning to ward off these heart-rending disasters?

A. That there are guardian angels is as certain as the existence of spirits. That they care for and in many ways direct the conduct of those they are drawn to by love and affection is not to be doubted. The error lies in supposing that they should be absolute directors of the conduct of those tney are supposed to guard, and that they have omniscience and power. It comes from the old ideas of spirit, and not from the recent understanding of spirit-being as taught by Spiritualism.

There can be no more vigilant guardangel than a loving mother. Just far as it is possible for her knowle and ability to allow she warns her ren, and shields them. She may clearly foresee danger for them, and they will not be warned. She may not with her limitations foresee. Should the mother in the midst of the cares for her family leave this life for the next, she would become instead of a guardian mother a guardian angel. She would not be greatly changed, nor become because of her transition, prescient with prophetic knowledge. She could not be always present with all her loved ones, and would find insurmountable difficulties in impressing them when there was need.

Take the disaster of the Slocum as example of all others, and see how this constantly repeated objection to the belief in the care of spirit friends will apply. It is true as has been said, that some spirit might have overlooked the equipments of the steamer and have informed all interested in the dangers of taking passage on a boat, where greed had combined with official corruption. To do this, the spirit must have had a knowledge of engineering and marine equipments, and having ascertained the facts would have been met with the great difficulty of finding a proper medium through whom to communicate.

The government has appointed officials to do this inspection, and it is their duty, not the angels'. There are many people who would have their spirit friends most abject slaves to their desires. They want them to be eyes and ears, and helping hand. Sentinels on duty day and night, and absolutely for love, and without thanks as reward!

Suppose in the instance furnished by the Slocum, the spirit friends of those who were to attend the ill-fated outing, had foreseen, or been informed by some one who had by knowledge of causes and effects been enabled to perceive the coming disaster. These spirits, when they visited the homes of their friends would have found excitement and anticipation and the sensitiveness essential for the reception of impressions overshadowed. Had they succeeded in producing a sense of possible danger, the recipient would have put it aside, or if he had expressed it, would have been laughed at as timid or cowardly.

The fact, the undeniable fact, is that all persons are sensitive more or less, and at times receive impressions, which as a rule they call vagaries of fancy and pay no heed to. Of all the thousand who went on that steamer, had any been impressed not to go by the still and scarcely recognizable influence of a spirit, would they have obeyed? We give so little heed to these shadowy impressions, that often they cease because of the discouragement and uselessness of the efforts.

Then we cry out when we meet with accidents, "Why, if there be guardian spirits, do they not warn us of our danger?" If we had a telephone in our house, we would not expect messages through it, unless we had the connections perfect. If the wires were detached, or the diaphragm covered with mud, we should show childishness of imbecility in berating the instrument because it was silent. Yet we cover the vibrating diaphragm of our minds with the thick crust of absorption in business or pleasure, and filled with the one thought or idea, like the hypnotized subjects, and then cry out because we were not protected, when we did not ask for protection and would have rejected it had it been offered.

Unless a child is encouraged to walk alone, it never would do so. It may fall, that is a part of the lesson.

Were mankind under the tutelage of spirits, as this correspondent appears to think most desirable, namby-pamby infants instead of independent men and women would be the result. Evils, negligence, etc., dark ways of greed, grow, until by their own blind stupidity and disregard of rights, they perish.

Often, too often, the innocent are immolated, but their sacrifice is not in vain. Their deaths awaken indignation, and the right triumphs.

In the narratives of such disasters, there are always instances of persons who received warning. There has been published several such about the Iroquois horror, where by heeding, the recipients escaped. The Ashtabula wreck, years ago, furnished several remarkable cases. Yet from the constitution of things such warnings must be rare, depending as they do on the sensitiveness of the receiver, his willingness to obey the often scarcely distinguishable prompting, and the prescience and harmonious affection of the spirit friend.

Life is Eternal.

There is one great central truth, taught by all animate nature; a truth which is the foundation of the grand philosophy of Spiritualism, the support of all scientific investigation, and which embraces all there is of any value in the religious systems known to the world. That truth is, that Life is Eternal. What we call death is, practically, a meaningless term. At most it denotes merely the absence of life. And when applied to mankind it denotes the change from incarnate life to the higher and broader existence hereafter.

The poets of earth, who have occupied a kind of intermediate station between earthly and heavenly existences, have always recognized the eternity of life, and the true meaning of death. No true poet ever doubted the glorious continuity of life. The gifted Addison wrote:

"'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter
And intimates eternity to man."

Yes, heaven itself has breathed into the soul of man the hope for immortality, which is surely the anchor of the soul, and which will end in happy fruition, after the fitful fever of human life is over.

Moore, another master of poetry, has written:

"This narrow isthmus twixt two boundless seas,
The past, the future, two eternities."

This life truly is a narrow line between the boundless past and the boundless future beyond the grave; and death is the golden gate, through which the emancipated soul enters the realms of heaven!

Here are two pictures. The one is that of a beautiful and accomplished young lady, in the bloom of health and hope. She seems to be the handiwork of heaven itself. Her soul is as pure as the unfallen snow; her affections as warm and steadfast as heavenly love; her mind as clear as a cloudless sky. Her laugh is the sweetest music; her conversation enchanting. She is more fit for the companionship of angels than that of the erring mortals of earth. Our whole nature revolts at the idea that she can ever cease to be. We know in our souls that she will live forever!

Here is another picture. The finger of God has touched this beautiful being, and she sleeps. We look upon her wasted earthly form in the cold embrace of death. Her eyes have closed forever. Her sweet voice will never again be heard upon earth. Her cold hands rest upon her breast and she is clothed for the silent grave. For the last time we gaze upon the wasted features before us, and feel in our souls that she who occupied the prostrate form before us has entered a higher and better life beyond this earth. We intuitively feel that she is not dead, nor can she die.

We feel, as we look upon the face of the dead, as did the gifted Alexander Pope, when, on the threshold of the grave he said, "I am so certain of the soul being immortal, that I seem to feel it within me as if it were by intuition." CARL C. POPE.

The Sunshine Club.

HUMANITARIAN WORK ILLUSTRATED BY CHILDREN.

A Lesson for Spiritualists Everywhere to Consider—How Many Spiritualist Societies Are There in the United States That Make a Specialty of Assisting Those Who Are Sadly Unfortunate, and Who Need More Sunshine Cast Over Their Pathway of Life?

The Sunshine Club, as set forth in the New York Sun, has opened a summer home at Bridgeport, Conn., to which relays of New York children in need of fresh air will be sent from time to time, some to stay for two weeks, others the entire heated term.

"Any child who is a member of our club in good standing," said its president, Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, at the club's headquarters, 95 Fifth avenue, "and who has paid his dues can go to our summer home. The dues of the club are not of a nature to break him. You can send a flower to a shut-in or give an automobile to our blind babies' home at Bartow-on-the-Sound. Either entitles you to membership.

"You see our cabinet," indicating a large glass cabinet filled with a jumble of things. "Articles needful for the fresh air babies are received and given out here.

"It is like the measure of the widow's meal, never quite empty. You see the little pink sunbonnets? A downtown firm pays its annual dues by donating them, another by giving little flannel sacks for the babies.

Here two small boys came in to make arrangements for sending a third to the country.

"It is wonderful how disinterested children are," said Mrs. Alden, as the boys left. "I have one child who wouldn't go without his blind granny.

"'No,' he said, 'I can't go out in the country and leave her at home.' So, of course, we will send blind granny along, too."

She was again interrupted, this time by a pretty young woman who came with her husband to donate an organ for the home of the blind babies. She had hardly taken her departure, when another came in, asking for a refrigerator for an invalid woman.

"You might swap the organ for a refrigerator," suggested the reporter.

"We won't have to do that," smiled Mrs. Alden. "We get whatever we ask for. I asked for a carriage for the blind babies last week and got it.

"There are plenty of rich people perfectly able and willing to give what is needed for these children, if they only know about it. We tell them. We will ask for this refrigerator and get a dozen. In all probability they will shower refrigerators on us until we shall have to beg them to stop.

"But I want to tell you what the Sunshine children are doing all over the country to help others.

"In Memphis the newsboys raised $400 for a newsboy who had been run over and had lost both arms. You see, they give entertainments at which each boy does whatever he can do best to amuse the audience. Strange things they are, too, sometimes. Playing mumble-peg, for instance, whistling, or dancing a clog.

"But the most pitiful thing about this was that the boy couldn't use his wooden arms after they had bought them for him. He wore them three days. When they gathered about him then, distressed at seeing him without them, he said:

"'It's no use boys. They won't buy my papers when they see me with my two good arms.'

"It was true. People bought papers from boys who could run to them and hold out their arms, begging them to buy, but they passed by this boy with his two nerveless wooden arms, not understanding that he was a cripple.

"'Never mind,' the other boys said to him, 'you can wear your wooden arms on Sundays, Billy.'

"One way in which they raise funds is by rummage sales. They go from house to house, begging for old cast-off things, then they have a sale.

"Then they make iron holders. You have no idea how well iron holders sell. The Rhode Island Sunshiners have put an old woman into the home by selling them.

"A football team has sent us 37 cents for ice water for the babies. That is, they paid 10 cents car fare for the president, who brought us the rest, 27 cents in all. That paid the dues of the entire club, however, besides which we got up a box of things out of our cabinet for them, with something in it for each member of the team.

"In Colorado the Sunshiners got up a picnic to go to Pike's Peak. They paid two cents apiece and sent $1.55 to the Blind Babies' Home.

"In their enthusiasm these children do some very beautiful things. In one country place they saw an old man digging a grave for a child.

"'Let us line this little grave with flowers,' they said, and went about picking bluebells and buttercups and every flower they could find. When the mother and father saw the little grave so beautifully lined with flowers for their baby, they sobbed aloud.

"Down in Charleston there are thirty-three Sunshiners who have planned to build a house of two small rooms for an old lady. Each child brings a brick or a shingle, just as he can get it. A Sunshiner who is a carpenter of the neighborhood has given enough timber to help in the work. In order to raise funds for the house rummage sales are given every month at the home of the state president.

"In the Brooklyn branch the girls are making overalls—little blue overalls that are worn by boys and girls at the summer home at Bridgeport. They gather around their president, Lawrence Allin of Borough Park, who is a cripple and sits all day long in a wheeled chair. They talk to him and amuse him while they sew.

"We have a dog that is very dear to our Sunshiners. He taught a crippled baby to walk. The child had been left on the floor tied to a chair while its mother worked out for such a length of time that its limbs became partly paralyzed.

"We fastened a rope to the dog and another to the child. Then when the dog jumped up and ran to bark at something, which it did every little while, the child was obliged to move, too. The movement of the dog jerked him up and about.

"In this way his limbs grew so strong that after a time he walked without difficulty. The dog is now a hero with us and fully realizes his importance."

An old woman very neatly dressed in blue checked gingham and long white apron arose from the table near the door where she had been placing envelopes in a drawer and put the drawer in a cabinet.

"That is Emily Elwell," explained Mrs. Allen, as she resumed her seat. "We found her in the almshouse on the Island. She had been there five years. She had taught in the public schools of New York for thirteen years. Then to go to the almshouse! We took her out and sent her to the home for the aged, and now she keeps our cabinet in order for us.

"You would be surprised," returning to the subject nearest her heart, "how many children are giving for scholarships for other children and taking care of old people. A band of boys, of which J. A. McGregor is the prime president, have races. They charge 5 cent admission. With these cents they send one boy to school.

"In Buffalo the children held a sale for the support of a day nursery, so that the little mothers could go to school. You don't know who these little mothers are! They are the older girls of the families, girls of 8 and 10, who care for the babies, for very soon after the baby is born the real mother must go out to work again, you know.

"There are thousands of these little mothers in New York." The street car conductors are well acquainted with them. They put a baby on the car, then wait and call for it when the car has made the round of the city. The conductor knows the Sunshine baby and watches after it.

The trolley ride is often the only fresh air treat for the slum baby that can't go to the country. Our members among the shopgirls often call at the homes of these babies, take one out for a trolley ride, and bring it back again.

"A dancing class is taking care of a blind baby at our home. Its members raised $27 by dancing, picked out a baby and began paying its board at Trumbull Mansion, our home on the Sound."

"Mrs. Cynthia M. Tregear is the matron there. She is a professional nurse. If you are very sympathetic you would not care to go there much. Such sad things happen.

"Not long ago she told me she said something to a blind boy. He did not answer. By and by she went up to him and touched him on the shoulder.

"Why didn't you answer me?" she asked, not in an unkind way, but very gently, as one talks to the blind always.

"'Oh!' said the child, 'were you talking to me? I didn't know that. Nobody ever talks to me. That is—for these blind children never complain—nobody but the radiator.' Then brightly, 'But that pops awful fine sometimes,' he added.

"I think of all the afflicted, the blind are the most pitiful," she went on presently. "And there are so many of them. Recently a newsboy on the corner of Fourteenth street and Broadway asked me what he must do to become a member of the Sunshine Club.

"There is an old blind man,' I answered, 'Help him across the street. Then, the next time I see you, tell me what else you have done to help somebody.'

"It was a month before I saw him again. He came running up to me, breathlessly, showing me a paper upon which were twenty-seven black marks.

"'All blind men,' he panted, 'that I helped across the street.'

"'They have been there all the time,' I told him.

"'Aw, what yer givin' me?' he cried, 'I ain't never seen a blind man on this crossin' before I got to be a member of Sunshine.'

"Of course the members of the club are not limited to children or to poor children. Many rich women are interested in this home in Bridgeport. On July 1 they will come in their automobiles to take the children out for an airing.

"Our home at Hillcrest is given us by its owner. A certain number of boys live there until homes are found for them elsewhere among families.

"Rich children assist the poor ones. They give entertainments at which a fairy child touches children with her wand and turns them into Sunshiners. The proceeds of these entertainments are given to the fund. New York has the Golden Hour Home, from which fourteen children will go next week to the home at Bridgeport. You must go and see that."

The Golden Hour Home, which is at 241 East Nineteenth street, was organized two years ago. Its expenses are paid by two New York women, mother and daughter. The girls of the East Side are invited to make this their home.

They come after school in the winter, when a bowl of hot soup and bread and butter are ready for them. In the spring fruit, bread and tea take the place of the soup. In the summer they come at 8 in the morning, and stay until their mothers, who work out, come for them at night.

A pretty, bright little girl of 9 or 10 opened the door for the reporter and found the matron, Mrs. Wicks, for her.

"That little girl," explained Mrs. Wicks, "has been almost trained to truthfulness here. At first I thought we should never be able to do anything with her. We couldn't believe a word she said. Now, we can't wholly rely on her, but she has improved so you'd be surprised.

"She comes early in the morning and stays until 8 at night. Her mother works in a restaurant. Before we took her she ran the streets. Is that you Freda? Run along, dear."

When the child was quite gone: "She listens to every word," Mrs. Wicks whispered, "and invariably repeats what you don't say. I am afraid we shall never be able to trust her."

She showed the reporter through the house, which was very neat and well furnished. At the dining-room table sat a young woman dressed in black.

"That girl," said Mrs. Wicks, in the hall, "supports her mother and ten children. She works in one of the large dry goods stores."

"How can she?" asked the reporter, "on the salary she must get?"

"The poor live on tea and bread," explained Mrs. Wicks, "which is not expensive. But her home is clean. That is more than you can say of most of them, and yet to look at these girls you wouldn't think it."

Which was true, for at that moment they had entered an upstairs room in which the girls were congregated around the piano ready to practice for a concert, the proceeds of which were to go toward the boatfare of those bound for Bridgeport. They were mainly girls of 13 to 16, neatly, and many of them rather stylishly dressed. A young music teacher sat at the piano ready to begin teaching them.

"We have helped these girls for two years," said Mrs. Wicks, from the vantage ground of the next room into which she had led the reporter. "First they came to us from the streets running wild here on the East Side.

"We let them stay here. Then, after a time, we found them places in stores, where they could earn a little money to help their families. That pretty girl with the red necktie is a clerk in a millinery establishment.

"They work through the day now and come to us of evenings as you would to a clubroom. Sometimes they sew awhile. Then they read or have a little music.

"Look at this sewing. Isn't it beautiful to be done by a child of 5? See the tiny little stitches. She is making a patchwork quilt, this child.

"Now, I want you to look at that little delicate girl over there, sitting so upright in the chair. She is one of those who are to go to Bridgeport.

"For two years she was in a plaster cast. Her head had been placed as in a vise. The plaster cast weighed 6½ pounds. It should have weighed only three.

"When we found her she was gradually fading away in this prison-like thing. Her family sat by quietly waiting for her to die, in that calm way common to the very poor, to whom death is often a relief.

"Then we brought her here to our doctor. He took off the cast and the horrible thing that held her head pinioned, and she has been getting well ever since. I am glad she is going to Bridgeport. We hope she will get quite well there out in the sunshine and air."

The reporter looked at the child. She was practically a living skeleton. Though she was no longer encased in the plaster cast, her position showed the effect. The attenuated limbs were rigid. The small head, with its face of the pallid yellowness of old marble, held itself firmly in the position it had been forced to assume, the dark eyes looking out dully.

The reporter looked quickly away toward the cheerful little liar who was laughingly whispering—lies possibly, but, oh, such cheerful lies—to a neighboring girl.

"I am glad, too," she sighed.

MEDIUMS RELIEF FUND.

Final Report of the N. S. A. Secretary.

To the Editor:—It is now July 8, and we are ready to make our final report on the result of the collection of the sum required to win the second thousand dollars for the Mediums' Relief Fund that was promised by the generous treasurer of this association. Thanks to his extension of the allotted time to July, and to the helpful and vigorous endorsement of the appeal from the good editors of the spiritual papers, we have secured a much larger sum than we at first called for, as will be seen below. In the early part of June we were some hundreds behind the thousand dollars asked for, but through that month the contributions came steadily in, and our hearts were made glad by the sympathetic words and financial donations that came from far and near; as late as July 5, they came, one of the largest contributions reaching us on the third of this month.

To one and all contributors, the N. S. A. sends its most grateful expressions of appreciation and its hearty thanks; its medium pensioners will also add their silent thanks and blessings for all who have sped this good work along. Although the sum secured exceeds the amount asked for, every penny will be used for the needy mediums, and it will not be long before it will all be used as our pension bill averages over an hundred a month. Therefore while grateful to all for their timely help, we ask the public not to forget the Mediums' Relief Fund, and to realize that it will always need aid if the aged and worn are to be cared for as their needs require.

Our last report—of $802.82—included all donations to June 1. Since then the following sums have been received, making a total from the public at large, of $1,432.45—a goodly sum, which will cause every contributor to the same to rejoice in heart.

L. Andrews, in memory of Mrs. A. R. Cook, $100; J. B. Townsend, 100; Lewis Peterson, $50; Geo. A. Deleree, $25; Mrs. Lucy Somers, $20; collected by the First Association, New York City, second contribution, $14.42; Ladies' Progressive Aid Society, Ft. Wayne, Ind., $14; J. D. Munger, $12; collected at meeting of Philadelphia Spiritualist Society, by May S. Pepper, with her own contribution, $12; seance by Loe F. Prior and her friends, $11.50; collected and contributed by Mrs. B. Mu..., $11; "Boston," $10; S. A. Burgess, $10; H. M. Edmiston, second contribution, $10; Elise Stumpfe and German Society of Brooklyn, N. Y., $10; H. L. Olden, $10; Mrs. J. W. Wheeler, $10; Members and friends of Elmira, N. Y., society, $5.50; Dana, Ill., Association, $5.91; meeting by Profs. Bartlett and Manier, New Haven, $5.10; Mrs. E. W. Morse, $5; Agnes O. Wink, $5; Mrs. Milton Rathbun, in memory of her husband, $5; Mary Bragdon, in memory of her husband, $5; Mrs. P. E. M. Dunn, second contribution, $5; Susan Jack, $5; F. H. Morrill, $5; Henry Hanson, $5; Mary R. Galloway, $5; Laura Burdick, $5; S. S. Burdick, $5; Alice Cheesboro, $5; Caroline F. Rich, $5; Prof. Fred P. Evans, $6; Juliana F. Hyde, $5; Albert Bodman, $5; Mary A. Thompson, $5; Harmonial Philosophical German Society of Lawrence, Mass., $5; T. L. Lamborn, $5; Flora B. Cabell, $5; Rosina B. Albert, $5; circle by Mrs. J. W. Storrs, $5; A Friend from Onset, $5; Mrs. G. A. Dorn and Newark, N. J., Society, $5; C. B., a Friend, $5; Mrs. S. Snyder and German Philadelphia Society, $5; Mary A. Haven, $5; W. W. Hawkins, in aid of Dr. Slade, $5; "Felix," $5; Thos C. Saunders, $5; J. J. Zimmermann, $5; Folsom City, Cal., $5; H. N. Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

The Lake Brady camp was formally opened by the president, I. N. Rouse, Kent, Ohio. Mrs. H. S. Russell of Alliance, sang two appropriate solos. Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie of San Francisco, opened the lecture course for the season. Mrs. Gillespie spoke in her usual pleasing way. Since our last meeting we feel she has walked up the ladder. The sentiments presented were in the line of higher thought. She continued the same idea in the afternoon, taking as a subject, The Higher Education. She gave a number of messages at the close of her lecture. A seance was held in the auditorium on Friday evening. Messages were given by Mrs. Gillespie and Rev. Cora Benton, Toledo, O.

Mr. Benton gave a lecture Saturday afternoon on the Soul Forces. Very fine thought was presented. Mrs. Benton followed the lecture with messages that none could gainsay. The Ladies' Auxiliary met at the close of the lecture. The minutes were read and officers were chosen for the coming year.

The Cleveland excursion trains helped to swell the number at the Sunday lectures. Mrs. Gillespie ended her work here July 10. Mrs. Cora Morrell, of Grand Rapids, follows her and remains from July 17 to July 24.

Mrs. Eliza McDonell, Mrs. Emma Rullman and Mrs. Ebertshauser are located on the Lake Brady grounds near the camp and register as clairvoyants and life readers.

Mr. Benton and wife returned to their home in Toledo, July 11. Mrs. Benton gave readings during her stay.

MRS. LYDIE L. CURTIS.

Good News for Hay-Fever and Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant, recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma as claimed at the time. We have received the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery. Hay-Fever sufferers should use it before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

Mr. A. L. Clark, Springfield, Mo., writes Jan. 22nd, was a sufferer of Hay-Fever and Asthma for thirty years and thought I would die every Fall but Himalya (The Kola Compound) completely cured me. Rev. F. F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, Abilene, Tex., was permanently cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after eight years suffering. Miss D. A. Roff, Moweaqua Ills., writes May 23rd, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after several years suffering although physicians said a cure was impossible. Hundreds of others give similar testimony.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound Free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise suffers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should try it.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

An unexpected call from home has delay me in sending you a proper notice of the birth to the spiritual life of one of our prominent Spiritualists, as well as one of the prominent men of Ohio. Horace W. Tibbals, of Cuyahoga Falls, who passed to spirit life, Monday, June 27, was buried Thursday, June 30. The funeral was largely attended by his host of friends and neighbors. An Ohio paper speaks of him as follows:

"With the death of Horace W. Tibbals, aged 68 years, which just occurred at his home in Cuyahoga Falls, where he had been a resident for two years, is removed a well-known Chardon photographer who gained national fame during the Garfield campaign, when his photograph of Gen. James Garfield was used throughout the United States for campaign purposes. Probably Mr. Tibbals' greatest triumph was the choosing of his photograph of the president for use on the Garfield issue of $5 bills. Twenty-five photographs were sent to Washington for competition, and exhibited to the engravers for selection. Mr. Tibbals' photo was not only first choice, but also won second choice in the same competitive exhibition."

Cleveland, Ohio. L. W. POPE.

Passed to spirit life from his home in Los Angeles, Cal., July 5, H. P. Dryden, in his 69th year. He was for many years an earnest worker in the Presbyterian church, but for the last fifteen years has been a staunch Spiritualist.

An Interesting Study in the Occult.

SOME INTERESTING OCCULT EXPERIENCES—CLAIMED HE WENT TO HEAVEN AND SAW THE ANGELS.

Remarkable Colored Boy Exhorter Describes a Journey He Claims to Have Made to the Celestial Shores—This Colored Boy's Experiences Show That He Was Under the Control of Orthodox Spirits Who Impressed These Visions Upon His Mind for the Purpose of Influencing Ignorant Negroes to Lead Better Lives, Thus Illustrating the Varied Character of Spirit Control, Reaching Every Plane of Life, and Furnishing an Interesting Study for the Student of Occult Subjects.

"Yes, I have been to heaven and have seen what it is like. It is a beautiful land. I saw white and black angels there and there was—oh! lots and lots of music. Some angels played on horns—big long ones that shone like gold—and others picked harps and things that looked like banjos. All the angels wore robes of white—great big dresses that fluttered and waved, and they all had pretty red ribbons hanging down in front. Then there was so much bright light. The Lord came and talked to us, and back of His head was a great, glorious light. Oh—it was grand!"

Other sentences as astounding as these fell from the lips of 10-year-old George Wallace Edwards, the colored boy preacher who is creating such a sensation in the streets of Allegheny and the churches of Pittsburg. He sat on a bench in the Allegheny West Park and related the wonders of heaven to a Sunday Leader reporter, who, it must be stated, was rather skeptical as to the boy's gifts. The latter told of how he first "received the divine message to preach" in a severe attack of typhoid fever in which he says he had five relapses, something extraordinary to say the least.

"Angels hovered over me," he continued with impressive gestures, "and when I thought I was dying took me up to heaven in a blanket—yes, sir, in a blanket. The first thing I was conscious of was a mighty light that spread all about me—oh, it was a wonderful light; I never saw anything like it before! I knew it was the light that came from Jesus Christ."

"Is that not too powerful for the human eye to stand?" innocently asked the interviewer.

"The light of Jesus Christ is never too powerful for any of us to stand," said the youthful Bible student, with severe reproach in every tone. "We live by it. It is our life. Jesus never meant it should blind us."

There was something noble and impressive in the way the little colored boy said this, that quickened the reporter's interest. The response to his question was made instantly, and in excellent language that one would not expect from a mere boy. There was no hesitation or grasping after words. They seemed to flow as naturally as the water babbles in the crystal brook.

"You say the angels all wore long red ribbons in front?"

"Yes, but their robes were white."

This matter of red ribbons the reporter jotted down as a distinct addition to paradisical lore. As far as his learning went, he could not recall that any saint or seer had ever noticed red ribbons. He asked the boy whether he was sure there were both black and white angels. In his Sunday-school days the writer had been taught that all angels were white, whether on earth their skin happened to be white, black or red.

"No, they are not all white," persisted George, "I ought to know, for I was there. They played and sang. I walked up the golden streets and saw the walks of jasper and other precious stones. Whenever the Lord came there was a big lot of bright light, but when He spoke to me the light was around his head at the back."

The little boy said he saw many persons there. He recognized Mary Magdalene in a white robe with red ribbons.

"She was a bad woman," he said, "but she won salvation by going to the Savior. Then I saw Noah—no, he didn't have any animals with him; animals don't go to heaven (this with scornful glances at the writer). Noah, you know, was saved because he believed in the Lord, and all the other people were drowned. That's what was called the deluge—haven't you ever heard of it?" (looking curiously at the writer.)

The latter answered that he had on several occasions. It was evident the diminutive Bible expounder was not impressed at his hearer's fund of religious and theological learning.

"Then I saw Samson—you've heard of him—how he took his bare hand and tore the lion to pieces," he ran on glibly. "He couldn't have done this unless the Lord had given him great strength. This strength was in his hair. Why, he could pull our house to pieces as easily as if it was paper."

The boy preacher laid great stress on the fact that this strength was due to the Lord.

When asked how he knew he was "called" to the work of preaching the gospel, he said: "God just called me. When I was sick with typhoid fever I heard a flutter of wings and looking up saw a host of angels coming down in a great stream of light. There were angels of all kinds and they wore long, white robes. Then while the wings were fluttering I heard a voice calling me to preach. I know it was God's. I have believed it ever since and intend to do it. That is my work to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ."

Opposition From Parent.

The boy is a remarkable specimen of humanity. All his thoughts seem to be centered on the Bible and the Messiah. He reads the Great Book every morning and every night and prays for guidance in the seeking of truth from its pages. Despite his father's vigorous, persistent protests, he devotes himself to studying it and to preaching it on the streets. As announced the other day he called at the office of the superintendent of police in Allegheny and asked for a permit to preach at the corner of Federal and Lacock streets. Assistant Superintendent of Police John Glenn was astounded at the story, as George explained that the Lord had called him to preach. Upon Glenn telling him he ought to go to school first before attempting to preach, he replied:

"I can read the Bible and read it well. I never went to school and I have no education, but the Lord has provided for my shortcomings in that respect. He has opened the way for me and He preaches through me. When I open my mouth His words come out."

Then to prove what he said he answered many questions relating to the Scriptures asked him by the police.

When asked if he preached for money, he indignantly answered: "No, sir, I do not preach for money. I preach the gospel of the Lord for the people."

George's father, whose name is also George Wallace Edward, tried to dissuade the boy from getting a permit. When the latter asked his father to obtain the necessary license for him and the latter refused, the precocious youngster simply went to the police headquarters himself and bearding the lion in his den, asked for it. It has not yet been handed down, but it may be. Prior to this George's zeal could not withstand the formalities of a permit, but impatient at delay, has stood at Federal street and Lacock last Sunday evening and delivered a stirring and able sermon on salvation to a crowd of a couple of hundred persons who stood amazed that such deep, Biblical lore should flow so unrestrainedly out of the mouth of one so young. The rude police, however, seeing the crowd, dispersed it and George had to move on. He went home, which place is at 906 Western avenue, Allegheny, where his father, a barber in Park way, Allegheny, lives. Both the boy's father and mother are bright, intelligent-looking persons, the lad resembling his maternal parent in looks. The father does not take kindly to the son's fondness for preaching and has done all he can to wean him away from it, but this, it appears is easier said than done. The feeling that he must preach seems to be thoroughly grounded in this remarkable boy.

"God has called me to preach," he declared to the writer, "and I must heed His word. Why shouldn't I? Jesus Christ died to save us and it is little enough we can do to spread His good work to enable others to be saved. We should all love Jesus Christ dearly for He did what few persons would—He endured torture, contempt and death in a horrible form so that we may live. Yes, we should all love Christ."

"What do you think people ought to do to be saved," was asked.

"Believe in God and keep His commandments."

"If we don't do that, what then?"

"Why, then we will be lost. We will go to hell and be cast in a big lake of fire and brimstone. Yes, sir, real fire and real brimstone, and we will be tormented forever. After you go there God and Jesus don't know anything about you, you are lost."

George said he had no fear of dying when he was lying ill with typhoid fever. Everybody thought he would die.

"But I wasn't afraid," he said, confidently, "for I knew God would take care of me. I believed in Jesus Christ and knew I would be saved."

The boy said he administered baptism and received converts, but he was not an ordained minister. He is a member of the John Wesley A. M. E. Zion church, Arthur street, Rev. Johnson, pastor, and a zealous attendant. The other day he went out on the streets and began soliciting money for the church, but his father, hearing of it, stopped him. He never takes up a collection while preaching, as he scorns the idea of accepting lucre for "disseminating the gospel," as he terms it.

A remarkable thing about his career is that he never attended school a single day. He has been taught by his parents, however, and is able to read any part of the Scriptures. There is never a day but that he studiously pores over the pages of Holy Writ. He says he can read any chapter or verse in the book. When he does not understand a passage he says he prays for the light. He is never content unless he has a Bible or prayer book in his hand. Of boyish sports he has no knowledge, whatever, for he never plays ball, tag or marbles. He would rather read his beloved Bible. Such work is a passion for him. He does not care to read secular books or newspapers and manifests little or no interest in such things as the Russo-Japanese war, the election of president and other leading topics of the day. It is a curious thing that together with this abnormal love for Bible study and interpretation, certainly extraordinary for one of his age, goes a marked lack of mathematical knowledge. He admitted himself that he could not tell the writer how many 3x4 are, saying it was 5. He can count by fives, however, and by tens, his mind seeming to run on the decimal system.

Uses Rare Language for a Child.

"I have not a knowledge of the Roman notation," he remarked with a smile. Such language is certainly rare in a lad of 10 years. Of geography he cares little and knows less. In fact, outside of the Bible he manifests little desire to learn. He uses words that one would scarcely look for from a boy of his years, but his grammar is sometimes at fault. This fall he will go to school. When he speaks on Scriptures he gradually warms to his subject and uses many gestures, laying down Biblical law with uplifted arm or pointed index finger, or by movement of both hands and arms. Argument seems to bring out the force of his preaching. He has a habit of saying when answered by a doubter, "Now let me tell you something," being not at all abashed that his hearer is perhaps four or five times as old in this world's experience as he is. Numerous questions plied by the writer convinced the latter that the boy has a wonderful store of Bible knowledge and in his talks draws on the parables, miracles, prophetic visions and revelations in such a manner as to astound the hearer. He follows orthodox lines as laid down by the followers of the great Wesley, and does not enunciate any new or unique religious ideas. One would say he is well trained if he were not told that the bulk of this knowledge was gathered himself. Ever since a year ago, when he had the fever, he has been an unflagging student of the Bible.

He is not a robust lad. Prolonged study has made him delicate. He has a keen, sympathetic face, and his solemn, clerical appearance is enhanced by gold-rimmed glasses. He does not wear clothes of clerical cut, as has been stated, but dons an ordinary boy's outfit, waist, knee breeches, cap and coat. He does not wear a clergyman's collar. Although serious and apparently impressed with his mission to spread the gospel, he is not sanctimonious.

Since preaching in Allegheny, George has become known in the colored churches, and many inquiries have been made concerning him. It is likely that he will be asked to preach in some of them, and possibly may conduct a service. It may be mentioned that this remarkable boy was born in Winchester, Va., but for some time past has been living in Allegheny City.

From a Psychological View Point.

The psychological phase of the colored lad's case appealed to the writer and he sought the opinion of Rev. J. Shane Nicholls, pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church, Forbes and Murray avenues, who has made an exhaustive study of psychology and holds advanced views on spiritual affairs. Dr. Nicholls had not heard of the Edwards boy and was much interested in the Leader's recital of his sayings.

"The case is very interesting," he said after some thought, "but it is not as remarkable as some well-authenticated cases of which I have read and heard. The condition of the boy's mind may be the result of the disease he suffered a year ago or it may be one of those strange instances of subconsciousness of which we hear now and then. A vivid imagination would enable a lad to describe heaven as he has, but would hardly account for his use of unusual language for a child. Deep study and association with older folks would make him old-fashioned, as we call it, and would equip him for conversation with adults. But there are certain things which we cannot account for.

"I have in mind the case of a young man who produced a system of cosmic philosophy that has since proved wonderfully accurate in its prophetic recital of the things science has since proven. This young man was in his 20s and had no knowledge of such things. He went into trances and while in that state two reporters took down the things that he said and they have since been published in book form.

"Another case that I heard of recently comes to mind. A certain man lay as if dead for a number of days. The doctors pronounced him dead and everybody thought his soul had taken its flight. But he came back to life, as we say, and insisted that his soul had actually taken a flight; that it had been wholly separated from his body and had visited another world. The things he told were most remarkable and the circumstantial details with which he described the beyond make his case much more to marvel at than what you have told me of this little colored boy in Allegheny. The psychologists declare that this is a case of soul separation and the man himself is very positive in his belief that his experiences deserve to be classed in that category."

Dr. Nicholls, as stated, is a great student of psychic matter.—Pittsburg Leader.

DYSPEPSIA CURED

If you Suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean that you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pills," such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your troubles, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing, or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a two weeks' treatment to any one desiring to test it. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you. IT IS FREE. SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Our Open Court Now In Session.

For a time, during this camp-meeting season, which is usually the dullest business season for spiritual papers, we have thrown our columns open to our giants in thought upon one of the most important topics that come under the name and philosophy of Spiritualism. Some masterly articles have already been given our patrons and there are many more to follow.

We find some of our readers very sensitive to the publication of anything that hints of an acknowledgment that there is such a thing as fraud in our ranks, and upon the other hand we have those who have nothing to cover up, and who would wage an aggressive warfare against it openly, publicly, as a means of stamping it out. These are given an opportunity, side by side, to express themselves, and the discussion has already awakened a deep interest in the cause. The Open Court surely fills a niche that has been carved for it.

Free-handed, open and logical discussion can only be conducive to the best interest of any cause. A philosophy that will not bear criticism is a trembling failure. A science that will not stand discussion in this age of reason has not a solid foundation and should be pigeon-holed as a relic of the dim past. A religion that can not stand the storm of adversity, that can not weather the gale of mental unfoldment of the day, should be relegated to a museum as an antiquated monstrosity, lost in the fog of ignorance.

Are you reading the findings of this Open Court? Are you reading the testimony upon both sides and recording the findings in your unbiased mind? Do you appreciate our effort for truth? If so you should become a life subscriber for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. Send your name, address and remittance after you read our unparalleled premium offer.

A GREAT QUESTION.

IS CHRISTIANITY DEAD OR DYING?

Mr. Goldwin Smith Explains That Its Vital Essence of Doctrine Still Lives.

To the Editor of the Sun—Sir:—When it is said that Christianity since the middle of the eighteenth century has been dead or dying, we must ask what is meant by Christianity. If what is meant is belief in the supernatural inspiration of the Bible, in miracles, in the creeds, Christianity unquestionably is dead or dying in critical minds. The miracles, we see, were a halo which gathered round the head of the Founder superior to other such halos in that they are miracles of mercy, not of power. But the doctrine which is the vital essence of Christianity, belief in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, seems not yet to be dead or certainly dying.

During the first half of the eighteenth century spiritual life was at a low ebb, the main cause being the tyranny or torpor of established churches. That was the day of Voltaire. But toward the end of the century there was a great revival. In England there was outside the Establishment the Methodist movement under Wesley; inside the Establishment there was the Evangelical movement, which had Christians of eminence at its head. From the religious zeal thus awakened, besides a moral and social reform, sprang great religious enterprises, missionary and philanthropic. The movement for the abolition of slavery and those for the redemption of suffering classes in England were Christian in spirit and were led by Lord Shaftesbury and other religious men.

The reformation itself was a revival, and a revival not only from torpor and seeming death, but from depravation apparently the most fatal, from the Papacy of the Borgias and the reign of the Inquisition. Has polytheism, Buddhism or Islam ever shown its inherent vitality by a similar revival?

The preaching of the Founder of Christendom, who taught the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, undeniably was the great awakening of spiritual life in the world. A world without spiritual life, or religion as the embodiment of that life, and regulated by social science solely in temporal interests, is perfectly conceivable. But the religion which should take the place of vital Christianity is not. Renan says of the words addressed to the woman of Samaria that they are the essence of religion, and that if there are intelligent beings in other planets and they are religious, this and none other their religion must be.

It seems doubtful whether even the Positivist has really reasoned himself out of the pale of Christianity. He holds to the brotherhood of man. The fatherhood of God he renounces. Yet he must apparently believe in something which takes the place of the fatherhood of God in consecrating human brotherhood, though his conception may not be anthropomorphic or identical with that of the simple Galilean.

The revelations of the physical world come to us through the action of high scientific intellects. Was it not possible that a revelation of the moral world should come to us through a character of unique excellence, benevolence, and beauty, preserved in its simplicity and purity by the pastoral isolation of Galilee?

The Positivist points triumphantly to the self-devotion of the Japanese sacrificing themselves for their country though they have no religion. Is the diagnosis quite correct? When the Japanese rips himself up rather than surrender, what is his motive? Is it self-sacrifice like that of the Christian martyr or an intense manifestation of the tribal instinct which passes from the animal to the human herd? In self-sacrifice for the good of humanity such as that of the Christian martyr there would seem to be an element of another kind.

We wish to be thoroughly loyal to science and to accept heartily all demonstrated truths. We know that this is our only salvation. Nor if the truth is unwelcome will we try to disguise it by calling annihilation "eternal sleep," and the blind havoc of the earthquake and the volcano "nature's law." But we wish to have all the phenomena fairly considered, as well those which evolution has not yet explained as those which it undoubtedly has. If this world is all, it must be owned that to a great many of us at all events it is a very imperfect world.

Postscript.—An article in the North American Review on "The Immortality of the Soul" has, it seems, saddened some of its readers. The admissions made in it saddened its writer. But it would sadden him and all of us still more to rest in untruth. He has shown that he refuses to believe that all ends here. GOLDWIN SMITH.

Toronto, Can.

DON'T DRAW AWAY YOUR SKIRTS.

Don't draw away your skirts,
He's a soul as well as you;
He's a heart as tender, true.
Don't draw away your skirts.

Don't draw away your skirts,
His brown coat may not be new,
But he's human through and through.
Don't draw away your skirts.

Don't draw away your skirts,
He has struggled, oh, so long;
Very plaintive is his song.
Don't draw away your skirts.

Don't draw away your skirts,
Bear with him—this brother old,
With his failings manifold.
Don't draw away your skirts.

A Veritable Angel Visits a Family.

Remarkable and Authentic Account of the Appearance of an Angel to Four Children, and His Visit and Conversation With Them in Their Home.

The remarkable account published in the following pages was first printed in a monthly magazine, entitled Word and Work; at least that is where the present writer first saw it. He immediately communicated with the mother of the family in which the circumstances occurred, and her reply is printed on the last page of this pamphlet. He also obtained from her a certificate, signed by her husband and herself and the four young people who saw the angel, vouching for the truth of the narrative. Mrs. Hittel furnished a photograph of the family as they are at present as requested by the writer. A copy of this will be found on another page.

Of course it is to be expected that some will doubt the truthfulness of the account; but we think that the evidence we present is sufficiently strong, in the absence of anything to rebut it, to convince most of those who believe that the Christian religion is a supernatural one, and that angelic beings are God's ministering servants to watch over the interests of his people on earth.

As to why their appearances have been only occasional, whether in the olden time or the present day, we do not know; neither are we obliged to be able to say why God has permitted them to appear to some and not to others. He has his own good reasons for his actions, and perhaps angelic appearances are more frequent than we think, but they are not always related by those to whom they have occurred; possibly for fear of being disbelieved, or from the feeling that the matter was too sacred to be talked about, as appears to have been the case with these children and their parents, until their pastor drew them out. Did space permit we could relate several well authenticated instances of what appeared to be angelic appearances or interferences as helpers in the affairs of God's children. The late Elder E. A. Stockman, in his book, Footprints of Angels (for sale at this office, price 60 cents), relates several instances which have occurred in modern times.

We do not see how any who really believe that angels have ever appeared to and conversed with men, can give any good reason why the circumstances related in the following narrative may not have actually occurred. The reasons some will give for doubt in this case would apply to every case of which we have any account in Bible times.

We republished this account in our paper, Messiah's Advocate, and since its appearance have received intimations from correspondents that its publication has been of spiritual benefit to many of the readers of the paper. Their faith in the things unseen and eternal has been strengthened, and their hearts comforted in the assurance that God has given his angels charge concerning us to keep us in all our ways.

As to the question whether angels have or have not wings, the narrative does not decide the matter. It is probable that they may appear either with or without wings, but the wings were, perhaps, necessary in this case, as the children's idea of an angel was as of a being with wings, and they would not have believed their visitor to have been an angel had he appeared without these appendages.

Some have doubted the truth of the story because the children state that the angel went through the solid door without opening it; but we know so little of "the nature of angels" that we cannot tell whether the substance of which they are composed is able to pass through such substances as wood and glass, or whether it was that the door opened and shut so quickly as to make the action invisible to the children.

We have no doubt that many will be glad to have the story in the present form, and therefore we publish it. W. R. YOUNG,

Editor of Messiah's Advocate.

562 17th Street, Oakland, Cal.

BY J. M. DUSTMAN.

For the glory of God and for the encouragement of his obedient children I record this bit of marvelous history which occurred in the month of February, A. D. 1887, in the northern part of Darke county, Ohio.

About three miles from the town of Possville, there lives a man and wife by the name of John and Hattie Hittle. They had six children, whose names and ages were as follows: Oro, twelve; Henry, ten; Lizzie, eight; Ida, six; Nettie, four; and Pearl, two.

They were religious people, and enjoyed the blessing of entire sanctification. They were and are still members of the Massasinawa class of Greenville Mission of the Indiana Conference of the Evangelical Association. Their home has for many years been the home of the itinerant preachers.

There was a protracted meeting in progress in the neighborhood, and the parents and Ora were going to the meeting, while the rest of the children were to stay at home alone. They had never stayed alone before, and therefore protested against it on the plea that they were afraid. But the mother told them not to be afraid, for God and the angels would take care of them.

Finally they consented, and after the parents were gone they lowered the blinds, locked the doors, and gathered together on the sofa to have their family worship. Pearl had been put to sleep in the cradle in the bed-room. After they had all said their prayers, they happened to get hold of Foster's Child's Story of the Bible, which had been presented to Ora on his twelfth birthday. They began to look at the pictures and presently came to the picture of an angel, whereupon Henry exclaimed:

"O! I wish I could see an angel once!"

And the rest said, "I wish I could, too!"

They had hardly said this when they heard a sound on the porch as of the rustling of silk garments and a knock at the door. So they all jumped up and ran to the door to see who was coming. They raised the curtain and looked out, and, behold! to their surprise, an angel came right in through the glass, the door being locked, and stood among them. His presence did not frighten them, for he looked pleasant, and began to talk to them. He asked them where their parents were, and they told him they had gone to meeting. Then Lizzie, who happened to be standing near the rocking-chair, said to him:

"Take a chair and sit down."

He answered, "O! I can't stay long."

But he took the chair and drew it up toward the stove and sat down, saying as he did so:

"You have a nice stove and a good warm fire."

Then the children noticed he was barefooted, and as the weather was cold and the ground covered with snow, they would naturally suppose he must have cold feet. Therefore Henry said to him:

"Put your feet on the railing of the stove and warm them."

The angel did so, and then called the children up to him. They were still wondering in their minds why he should be barefooted in such cold weather, and this made them take particular notice of his feet, which looked perfectly white and glistened like wax.

He then reached out his hands and took Ida on one knee and Nettie on the other, and caressed them by putting his arms around them, stroking their hair and laying his hands upon their heads as if he was blessing them. At the same time he kept talking to them all, and told them to be good children and keep on praying to God, etc. His voice was clear and charming, his hair fine and wavy, and he wore a beautiful little crown on his head.

After he had held them and talked awhile he put them down, and rising from the chair, began to walk around and look at the pictures on the walls. As he was walking they noticed that his garment was loosely thrown around him and extended a little below the knees. It consisted of the finest white silk fabric, and rustled like leaves, or silk, as he moved. They could now also have a better opportunity to see his wings, which were quite large and fairly glistened for whiteness.

The children followed him wherever he went, and presently they came to the bedroom where Pearl was sleeping. With the children still close at his side, he went to the cradle and took Pearl in his arms and kissed her, and then laid her down again, saying as he did so:

"When Pearl gets older you must tell her to be a good girl and pray, too."

Then he said to them, "Well, I must go now," and began to shake hands with each one of them and thus bid them good-bye.

It is impossible to describe the loveliness of his hand as they took hold of it. It felt like snow or like a soft, downy cushion; and like his feet, it was perfectly white and glistening. He wore a heavenly smile upon his countenance. His voice was tender and sweet. His entire demeanor was marked with gentleness and kindness, and his whole appearance that of grandeur and beauty. They felt perfectly at home and enraptured by his presence, and it really made them feel sad when he told them he must go.

After he had bidden them good-bye, he started for the door through which he had come in, while the children were still standing at the bed-room door. When he came to the door he paused a moment and the children noticed that he had a long staff which he held horizontally in his hands, and in an instant they saw him gliding out through the unopened door in the same manner that he had come in.

As soon as they saw he was gone, they instantly made a rush for the door, literally stumbling over one another to get there first, and when they got to it and had raised the curtain and were looking out, they saw him standing on the edge of the porch, and a bright cloud had gathered around him. Then they saw him glide out into the yard. His body was now in an inclined position, with his feet extending backward and his wings partly unfolded, while the lower part of his garment and the bright cloud seemed to roll and fold themselves together in a most unique manner. He went on in this way until he came about half way between the house and a pear tree, which was standing in the yard, and then he ascended, and the last they saw of him was his beautiful white feet. Then one of the children exclaimed:

"Now he is gone!"

Another said: "I wonder why there was no light around him while he was with us in the room."

Still another said: "I wonder how long it will take him to get to heaven?"

The next thing in order was to wait until the return of the parents and Ora, that they might tell it to them. They could scarcely wait until they came, they were so anxious to tell them. In the meantime they carefully examined the door from top to bottom, rubbing their hands over it, to see if there was not a crack or a break of some kind where he had come in and gone out. But to their astonishment they could not find the least sign of a crack, either on the door, the glass, or on the casing of the door.

After a while they heard their parents coming, and were all up and ready to meet them. The mother went to the house first, while the father and Ora put away the team. Who can imagine the bustle and excitement as the mother entered the house? Henry, Lizzie, Ida and Nettie, each trying to tell it first. They jumped, they laughed, they clapped their hands, and were perfectly wild with joy. So great was the noise and holy racket that the father and Ora heard them at the barn, and wondered what in the world was the matter with the chainldren.

"Who do you suppose was here, mother, while you was gone?" they all exclaimed with one accord. "An angel, yes, an angel. O! mother, an angel was here." When the mother had quieted them sufficiently, they went on to describe him, how he looked, what he had done, and what he had said.

Their shining faces, their exultant spirits, their positive declarations and the unison of their assertions, soon overwhelmingly convinced the mother of the truthfulness of her children's story, and of the reality of the vision which they had seen. Besides, being a spiritual woman and having an insight into spiritual things, she could the more easily be persuaded of the facts in the case. She listened with suppressed emotions until her heart could no longer contain the joy which filled and thrilled her whole being. Then, going to the bedroom, she threwherself on the bed and gave vent to her feelings with loud shouts of "Glory to God." She felt that the very house was hallowed by the presence of the Lord, and that from henceforth more than ever, her home should be like a little heaven on earth. After arising from the bed, she seated herself in a chair near the stove and buried her face in her hands.

Presently the father and Oro returned from the barn, and as they entered the room where she was sitting, she exclaimed:

"O! father, you ought to hear the children tell of the wonderful visitor they had while we were gone!" whereupon the children began to tell the story to their father and older brother.

"Ah," said the father, "you are only excited, it was simply your imagination. You did not see an angel."

"Yes, yes, father; sure, sure," came from every one of them.

So positive were they and so overwhelmingly happy, that the father could not long withstand their simple arguments, but was compelled to believe that what they were telling him was true, and he also began to praise the Lord, and to participate in their joy.

This simple story has been told by this dear family to only a few of their most intimate friends. They deem it too sacred to be told to everybody, as everybody could not appreciate it. The writer became their pastor in the spring of 1896, and not until the evening of January 7, 1897, did they tell me about it; and the way it came about was this:

Ida and Nettie had been to school during the day and the question came up whether or not the Lord revealed himself to men now as he did in olden times through the ministry of angels. The teacher seemed to be skeptical, and said he did not believe such things were possible at the present time. He had never heard of this instance, and therefore knew nothing about it until Ida declared her belief in such things from the fact that they had seen an angel in their home when they were children. So when she came home she was telling her mother what the teacher had said, and how she had convinced him contrary to his former belief. I overheard her conversation and began to wonder what they were talking about. Then they happened to think they had never told me the story, and at once began to relate it. As the children were all at home, they were soon seated around me, and with shining faces, were busily engaged in making known to me this remarkable incident, and it has made an impression upon me that shall never leave me. While they were telling me I felt that such a good thing should not be kept a secret any longer. Therefore, on the day following, I wrote out a minute history of it, just as the children told me. Of course they were no longer children, but all except Pearl had grown up to be young men and women.

The reader may imagine what a thrill of joy and gladness filled my soul, while, by the help of God, I undertook to write this story. Here I was in the very room where it occurred. To my left was the same sofa upon which these children had their family worship on that memorable night in February, ten years before. A little farther on to my left was the very door through which the angel had come and gone. To my right was the same rocking-chair in which this heavenly messenger had been seated. In my lap lay the same book, opened at the very picture which had brought from them the wish that they might see an angel once; and upstairs is the stove which he said was nice.

Nearly five years later (November 27, 1901) I visited them again. All the children except Ora are still at home, and in the evening while seated with them in the same room, and talking to them about the matter, I found that after the lapse of nearly fifteen years it has not in the least lost its freshness in their memories. For, with shining faces, and with hearts glowing with gratitude to God for his great goodness to them, they still love to talk about the wonderful visitor which he, in his kind providence, had seen fit to send them in the days of their childhood. Their whole lives have been influenced by it, and I told them that when I shall meet them in glory in company with their angel friend, I should like to have a talk with them concerning this matter.

Surely "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them."—Psa. 34:7.

"When they shall rise from the dead they * * are as the angels which are in heaven."—Mark 12:25.

"And the angel of his presence saved them."—Isa. 63:9.

"An angel from heaven strengthened him."—Luke 22:43.

"Who maketh his angels spirits and his ministers a flame of fire."—Heb. 1:7.

"Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."—Heb. 1:14.

Any reader who doubts the veracity of this story, can write to Mrs. Hattie Hittle, Hagerman P. O., Darke county, Ohio, and you will receive a prompt and kindly reply. Of course a stamp (or more) should be enclosed; something should be allowed for the labor of answering.

I hope these lines will prove a blessing to many hearts by strengthening their faith in God's holy word and promises, and that they will draw the reader very near to the blessed Savior, who has promised soon to come in the glory of his Father, with all his holy angels. Let us not be ashamed to own him before this wicked world, and thus compel him to be ashamed of us before the angels of God. But let us forsake every evil way, and yield our all to him by entire consecration and faith, and he will not only pardon our sins, but will also cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Then in the morning of the resurrection we shall not only be as the angels which are in heaven, but we shall be like our blessed Redeemer who has washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God.

Letter From Mrs. Hittle, the Mother of the Family.

Hagerman, Ohio, Feb. 23, 1903.

W. R. Young, Oakland, Cal.:

Dear Brother:—Yours of the 14th inst. at hand, and for the glory of God and the benefit of his dear children will gladly respond to your request.

It has been my privilege to answer many letters since the first publication of the account, last June, and I have realized great blessings in doing so. Many of those letters were full of praise and thanksgiving, while some expressed doubt and skepticism. But we could bear well with such, knowing the incident was one of the supernatural kind, and could only be understood by those who live in real touch with the Divine, and have that spiritual discernment which he gives all who are wholly his. I am fully persuaded that the time had fully come when this wonderful manifestation of God's power, which is still the same, working wonders among the children of men, should be given to others who might be benefited thereby.

I can only say, as I have said to so many earnest inquirers that you need not doubt in the least concerning the truth of the matter. The three oldest children, who were so highly favored of the Lord on that memorable night, have often said to me when I have questioned them about it, that while they forget many occurrences of their child life, this one is ever clear in their minds; and they cherish it as very sacred.

One of the things which helped in convincing me that night was the unity of assertion, and also their so anxiously requesting me to examine the door, (which they had locked as soon as we left) saying, as they rubbed over the glass, telling me to do so also, and as we examined the wood work, "Now can you find a crack anywhere?" As it all seemed so real to them and they were so emphatic in their assertions, I yielded myself, and said in my heart, Lord, I do believe that thou didst condescend to answer my prayer in behalf of my little ones, in even giving them the blessed satisfaction to permit them to see with their own eyes, and talk with and handle one of thy holy angels.

No sooner had I thus committed myself till the glory of the Lord came upon me. To him be all the glory and honor forever and ever. I trust what I have here written will suffice, so as to remove all doubt concerning this occurrence.

Will also send family group, with names marked on back of card.

If you wish at any time for further information, will gladly respond.

Wishing to have some of your publications containing the same when issued. Yours in his service,

MRS. HATTIE HITTLE.

Hagerman, Ohio, Feb. 23, 1903.

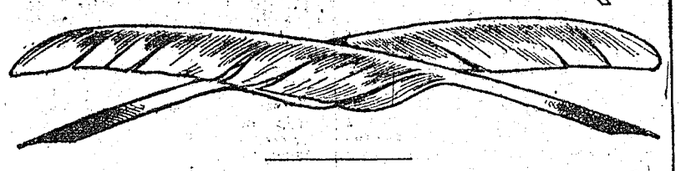
We the undersigned do hereby certify to the statement made by Rev. J. M. Dustman, "our former pastor," concerning an angel visit in our home while our parents and Ora, our eldest son had gone to church.

Parents: John Hittle, Hattie Hittle.

Children: Henry S. Hittle, Lizzie Hittle, Ida Hittle, Nettie Hittle.

TURNED HIS MOTHER OUT.

Yes, I clipped it from a paper and presume the story true,
And yet, it seems too terrible for any man to do;
But a being, called a human, turned his mother out of home;
Turned the mother who had raised him, out into the world to roam.
She who bore him, she who loved him, she who gave him of her own,
Now must struggle through the journey of a dark life all alone.



Shall we pity such a being, who is also growing old,
If some day when he is helpless, he be turned out in the cold?
Shall we sympathize when justice overtakes a cruel man?
Shall we sit down in deep sadness while Dame Nature works her plan?
Or wake up and take some measure for preventing such an act,
And begin some drastic action by corrective motives backed?

How I pity such a villain, and I'd like to beat him through,
So that I could let St. Peter know of him a thing or two.
And I'd like to be the Devil, or a stoker of the fire,
So that I could do him justice as a broiler or a fryer.
I would teach him all the tortures of a spiritual hell,
And then leave him with his conscience for a long, continued spell.
I would cook away the demon that possessed him on the earth,
When he turned out cold and hungry here the one who gave him birth.

I would put him in a dungeon, or some dark and gloomy hole,
Till the spark of manhood lighted ev'ry recess of his soul.
I would hold him as in prison, from the pleasant light of day,
Till his callous little conscience burned its virus all away.
I would hold him through the ages in the crucible of right,
Till the darkness of his spirit was excluded by the light,
Then I'd let his loving mother stand before him for awhile,
And perfect his growing spirit with her bright, forgiving smile.

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

Another Suggestive Letter From Mrs. Hyland.

It is in accord with the Spiritualistic Philosophy and the teaching of angels, that when one ceases to do wrong, and begins to do right, such a person should be kindly received and encouraged. Every fake will sometime, in this world or the next, be compelled to pursue the course that Mrs. Hyland has, or remain in spiritual darkness.

To the Editor:—"Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, the world-renowned materializing medium, is located at 328 Ellis street, San Francisco, Cal."

The above advertisement is taken from the Light of Truth; thus Elsie Reynolds estimates herself as a "world-renowned materializing medium," and the great majority of people will take it for granted that she means a spirit materializing medium, but she does not.

On my desk lies a letter written by Elsie Reynolds to myself, while she was holding "materializing seances in San Diego, just one year ago this month.

I will enclose the letter for the editor's inspection, as he is acquainted with her handwriting; its reproduction in The Progressive Thinker will have more weight than anything I may write; its contents are as follows, with the exception of a few unimportant words:

Pierce Morse Block, July 15,

Dear Laura:—

I can't give it up to have you come down here. On the 26th there will be another $3 excursion, or about the 28th, 29th or 30th at the farthest; a lot of us are going to the Escondido camp.

I will send you $5 for your ticket and little things. I have a bed and a couch and we can stay together. I'll board you and pay your fare to the camp, and then we can go back home before your ticket runs out; mine will have expired, but I can go up on the boat. You can leave Sawtelle at 7 o'clock in the morning and get to Los Angeles in time for the train, which is 9 something—9:40, I believe, and you can buy your ticket at the Santa Fe depot. * * * * Now don't bother about a trunk or "S'pt's"; you can use mine, and I will help you right in my own rooms.

* * * Write me the moment you get this and tell me positively whether you will come or not. I will meet you. Hurry up and let me know. I am in dead earnest.

Bye-bye; will wait your reply impatiently. Your friend,

ELSIE.

The important part of this letter is, "Now don't worry about a trunk or 'S'pt's'; you can use mine, and I will help you right in my own rooms."

In a leather satchel, in one of my rooms, are the "spirits" which Elsie Reynolds had reference to. May God and the spirit world forgive us both.

Some of these "spirits," or rather luminous robes were given to me by Elsie Reynolds, and sent through the mail while she was living in Los Gatos; in particular, there is a robe worn by the little "cabinet controls," "Effie" and "Sparkle," the former from Mrs. Reynolds' cabinet, the latter from Mrs. Crindle's, and I used it for my little "child control," "Alice."

There is a star and crescent robe worn by the "Italian opera singers," who "materialized" from Mrs. Reynolds' cabinet; also a crown of stars given me by Mrs. R., and a couple of my own "spirit" robes, which I had loaned to Mrs. Reynolds while she was in San Diego; all of these have been recognized, leaving no doubt on the minds of the people who have called on me from Los Angeles, its vicinity, and also from San Diego to see the strange but beautiful paraphernalia.

These people were until recently, regular attendants for many years to the Reynolds-Crindle's seances, and firm believers in their power (?) of materialization.

No word of explanation on my part, or name was ever given; this was left entirely to the inference of the visitors, at the appearance of each different "spirit" their correct names were called.

"Effie," "Lily Roberts," "Peter Buffe," "Dr. Monroe," "Lonely" and other well-known "cabinet controls" of Mrs. Reynolds' have been fully recognized and spoken to by many persons when attending my seances and exposures; so you can see how closely "spirits" can be produced and imitated by the different "mediums."

The faithful spirit (?) of "Lily Roberts" is known throughout the United States by all seance goers; persons often asked at my seances: "Couldn't Lily come and sing for them to-night?"

But I would not have dared to "use," or take advantage of any of Mrs. Reynolds' "spirit" characters, no more than I would be guilty of plagiarism; consequently after repeated requests for "Lily," I asked Mrs. Reynolds' permission, or if she had any objections if I let "Lily" come and sing for them.

You will remember in the published letter of April 2, in The Progressive Thinker, where Mrs. Reynolds in answer to my request, says: "Yes. By all means let Lily come and sing, but always say that Elsie sent her."

Dressed as a spirit (?) I would then sing "Lily Roberts'" favorite songs, "In the Beautiful Valley of Gold," and "The Bridge."

I never announced myself as "Lily Roberts," but at the conclusion of the songs, the audience, as if in one voice would say, "Thank you Lily, We are so glad to see you. We love to have you come."

It was easy to imitate "Lily's" voice, having heard Mrs. Reynolds sing the songs so often.

These things are evidence and will stand no repudiation.

From a letter received lately from an estimable old gentleman, let me quote these words:

"I assure you we both felt wiser and better for the knowledge you gave us, although it disillusioned us, as to some things which have given us happy thoughts and comforting reflections, but in every case truth is what we want and aim to get."

I should dearly love to give his name, but for the sake of his private and beautiful life, I will not draw him into publicity; neither would it be honorable on my part to divulge the names of the many persons who call in quest of light, on the subject which had been so dear to them.

The writer of the above words called the other day; he was accompanied by a lady, a lovely type of true womanhood; they are strangers to me, but it is saddening to know that they are wandering hand in hand, hither and thither, bewildered in the all-important question, "Is materialization true?"

So hard to give up the once beautiful belief of talking, seeing, kissing, embracing the materialized (?) spirits of their precious dead.

His white hair glistened as the sun shone on the silvery tribute which age has given him, as a reminder that he must soon enter the Peaceful Valley of Silence; that he would soon be added to the immortal band of spirits.

His friend, Mrs. ——, told me that the greater part of his life was passed in the perfect belief of the "materializations" of Mrs. Reynolds and many other "mediums"; and that he had spent thousands of dollars, often giving five and ten dollars at a seance; the seances were his life, his love, his all.

His faith had not yet been completely shattered, even after the many recent exposures in Los Angeles, but through our interview the other day, he awoke to the dark and terrible deceptions of the "manifestations" known as "materialization" of commercial "mediums."

I understood his deep and dreadful sorrow. I could feel his heart ache as I produced the different "spirits" which he recognized; his friend also felt the unspeakable pity for the grief of her aged friend, as he held, and gazed speechlessly at the luminous, but lovely robes.

"And these—these—I thought were my spirit loved ones," he said; his voice and hands trembled as he reverently laid away the snowy garments; still—still the old belief so impregnated within him, that unconsciously it manifested itself; he had made it a part of his life.

In moments like that, it is best to let the grieved ones find consolation in God.

Have I done wrong? I have robbed him and many others of the only pleasure on earth which was dear and sacred to them; they are desolate now and lonely; something is gone; they know not whither to go; they know not where to seek and meet their loved spirit ones, who are only gone a day, a month, or a year before them; then they, too, must experience the deathless death.

Have I done wrong in depriving so many persons of their greatest pleasure?

Many have said to me, "You are cold, cruel and merciless; let them believe it if it gives them happiness."

Believe it? Believe what?

Thousands of voices in soul-thought, thousands of voices in spirit supplication, say, "Go on, go on with your work; these people were only image and idol worshipers."

FRAUDS AND FRAUDS

There Are Many Frauds, and Not All Are Spiritualistic.

To the Editor:—Every up-to-date progressive thinker and lover of truth and clean Spiritualism is delighted with the honest effort being made through the columns of The Progressive Thinker for the riddance of our cause from the abominations of Blue Bookism and fraud and fakirism of every hue and grade; and may the good work go on till every guilty one finds his proper affinity behind the bars, or is driven to seek an honest living by honest labor, and let all the people say amen.

But let us who love the truth and hate a lie be fair. Are bogus mediums who get money and other valuables on false pretense, sinners above all other hypocrites? Let us be fair. They get the dollars from the gullibles for presenting a lying representation of a spiritual truth to the damage chiefly, of the pocket of the gulled. The man or woman who has been fakired by the Blue Book angel, has merely thrown away a dollar. They have not necessarily imbibed a false theory of life and human responsibility that may prove a serious handicap to them and theirs for the term of their mortal life and—longer. Their money has gone for nothing; they are poorer in pocket if no wiser in head; that is about their status.

But there is another picture in this gallery. It is by the old masters; has cost mints of money; hangs in a very fine light; sways multitudes for the term of their mortal career, and its power for evil, like John Brown's soul, goes marching on. It does not represent the truth, but its antipode. Its exploitation has produced horrors unmentionable, and rivers of blood and tears. To change the figure a little. This picture is a theory and being only a theory and not the truth has been exploded ten thousand times, but being venerable with age its fragments and shadows are still highly esteemed by its dupes and victims.

The traveler queries of the watchman, "Watchman, what of the night?" The watchman responds, "The day cometh, is at hand." In proof that he is right, the watchman cites the fact that the honorable ones among the promoters of the false theory are shamefacedly dropping out of the ranks of the deceivers.

Mr. Editor and your readers: Dropping the figurative, I submit, in all sincerity, is not the measly blue book fake a white-winged angel in comparison with the trained fraud who knowingly and for bread and butter continues to lead the flock, lambs and older sheep, into the wolf-infested wilderness?

Do I hear it said, "This is not our affair; let them alone"? If an enemy attacks you, is it not your business to defend yourself? If he should enter your house to maltreat your loved ones and destroy your goods, would you for charity's sake leave your family and home at the mercy of the foe and flee for your own dear life?

I am sure we are safe in guessing that there is not a well-read thinker in ten thousand in the ministry of any church but feels certain that he is teaching false doctrines to his congregations—"teaching lies in hypocrisy, such shall receive greater damnation." This is their Bible for it.

Is this false teaching, though hoary with age, to be condoned by Spiritualists, editors, speakers and writers? Are we to treat as a beneficent thing a scheme that more than any other has contributed to the darkness and crimes that have filled the world with woe and would throttle our knowledge of the truth and the truth itself, to its death could it materialize its wish?

The crime of fake mediumship sinks to a shadow of insignificance when compared with the damnable conception of an all-wise creator formulating the church scheme of human life and its obligations.

Would not we come nearer the "mark of our high calling," the unveiling of the light to those in the dark, were we to drop the maudlin sentiment of pretended love for those we know to be relentless enemies of well known truth and righteousness, by standing like a wall for the eternal truth as we know it. "Fighting the devil with fire" seems the last resort if we hope to win over the combined hosts of evil. The enemy is thoroughly organized, combined and implacable. He gives no quarter, and should expect none.

Salem, Oregon. J. RIGDON.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

That Is the Way the Banner of Light Presents the Question of Fraud.

At times it is positively necessary to point out abuses and denounce in no uncertain tones evil either in high or low places. When such denunciations are based upon undeniable proofs which can be fully substantiated in a court of law if needful, innuendo is changed for accuracy and the acceptance of personal responsibility displaces the necessity for anonymity. The plea that to expose wrong-doers helps to protect society is sound when the expose has no element of uncertainty about it, and definite statements of fact and circumstance are associated therewith.

For a number of years past now those who should know of what they state have lost few opportunities to tell the cause, and the world outside, that Spiritualism is honeycombed with fraud. The allegations have been that there was not a genuine materializing medium in the United States, that a considerable proportion of the "message" mediums gave imitation "tests," and that the cause was suffering deadly injury from the foregoing and other questionable practices of mediums, and through it all ran the assertion that a famous cerulean hued book was in circulation and used by some of "our best mediums."

Now it is a serious question as to whether such lobse and oft-repeated charges serve any real good purpose, or achieve any satisfactory result? To say, "I know the book is used," or that 'materialization is a fraud," or that 'mediums are notorfously immoral." and when asked to furnish the proof of such assertions to say it is not my place to offer the proof, shows a lamentable lack of appreciation of the responsibilities of life. If you are not willing to stand by your words when attacking the honesty of a man or a movement remain silent until you die. It is cowardly and mendacious in the exereme to anonymously assail the reputation of any one. In the case in point, as, so far, no one has been named as a culprit every message medium in this country has been placed under suspicion. Not only so, but the genuineness of message mediums in the past is raised and the entire list of mediums past and present is involved in the careless calumnies that are being so recklessly hurled about at this time. Let us know who the culprits are, bring a blue book to the light of day, send one to this office and we will reproduce extracts from its pages. We neither deny nor affirm such a book exists, we only ask, like Hudson Tuttle, to see it.

Turn your attention to Hudson Tuttle's article in this issue and note therein what he says about English mediums, basing his remarks upon quotations from a letter lately appearing in our esteemed contemporary, The Two Worlds, of Manchester, Eng., in which the writer pokes fun at some remarks he professes to quote from some trance addresses he has heard. Mr. Tuttle is perfectly justified in drawing the conclusions he does concerning the lack of intelligence among English Spiritualists who employ such speakers, if the samples of the utterances he refers to came from the lips of any sort of speaker employed by a regular Spiritualist society and addressed to a regular public service of that body. But this case supplies just the illustration to drive home the point of the previous remarks. The exposure (no doubt made in perfect bona fides) of the evil can readily be warped by the enemies of our cause away from an honest attempt to cleanse the cause from any presumed evils to a condemnation of the Spiritualists at large who apparently tolerate the sort of thing in question. But illiteracy is not a crime, nor the illiterate necessarily criminal, and at times the uneducated man or woman possesses a sensitiveness easily responsive to the spirit forces, and when the message comes unquestionably and genuinely from the other side we may deplore the poorness of the channel, but we are content to have the service, hoping to find a better means later on. But assumed "tests" are fraud pure and simple, they have no excuse, there can be no palliation. But let us know definitely and let the charge be tagged so that the cheat may be openly branded and the people warned.

Still it is a serious question after all as to what is best to be done? Let us remember that the enemies of Spiritualism failing to break down our facts, our arguments or our philosophy changed their tactics and commenced to assail not mediumship, but mediums! It was a subtle device and for a time appears to have escaped notice! Let us undermine the character of the mediums and we shall disgust the public with them. We shall win back our church members and our Sunday-school attendants. We shall call into exercise the social tabu, the cruelest of all inhibitions, and then, having done these things Spiritualism will surely die! Are we trying to play the game of our enemies? Surely we are not likely to be guilty of surpassing folly. Spiritualism without mediumship is only one whit worse than Spiritualism without the spirits. Let us clearly draw the line here, true mediumship is not in any way comparable to the tricks of the fakirs who pose as mediums, and any man or woman who substitutes imposition for genuine mediumship ceases to be a medium and at once becomes a fakir.

Once again let it be said the Banner of Light stands for honesty in all things, genuineness in mediumship, at all times. That it is unalterably opposed to fraud in every instance and will not knowingly on its own responsibility, or through its correspondents, permit fraud to be exploited in its pages. Yet, nevertheless, it claims that all men have the right to know their accusers and the nature of the offense with which they are charged. Therefore, until we have evidence submitted to us which can be attested, on oath if required, it remains a serious question whether we cannot all busy ourselves in not assisting our friends, the enemy. —Banner of Light.

Wants to See the Cause Relieved of Shams.

To the Editor:—I am for efforts to free ourselves from deception and fraud. There is no wisdom in anything less. I have followed the discussion thus far with the feeling that those who are working for purification are right; and that those who oppose it make a mistake.

Truth, purity, sincerity, unselfishness, sterling character, spirituality should be our aim; and falsehood, deception, imposition, fraud, unholy gain should be foreign to our wish or sanction. If we are silent under its perpetration in our behalf, do we not sanction it, and become participants? We are not a show company—or are we? Instead of getting genuineness, we enthusiastically keep on paying for the spurious, and are held in contempt by the judicious.

But you say: I am as anxious for the principles you have set forth as you are. Yes, here we agree; but you further fear a check upon organized propaganda, and injustice to some. In spite of what might be, I suggest calling a halt in the employment of this kind of manifestation. All must submit to some sacrifice to attain greater good. Let us be a committee of the whole, not to suppress everything, but to know with a good deal of certainty what we are doing. Let us try to develop communities of good people. Let us display in our lives the nobleness, honor, charity, love, kindness, justice and intelligence, that shall distinguish us from the thoughtless and careless.

Facts and manifestations will come as fast as we can digest and incorporate them into our lives.

J. S. Loveland's late contribution contains facts that cannot be ignored, and I recommend it to a most careful study. Is it fear or reverse that palsies action? Are we committed to movements that prevent our joining efforts for purification even we admit the need? Have we crystallized into a cult of forms and ceremonies and display, that we fear to jostle our movement lest it fall? Let us hope not.

C. H. DOTY.

Not Afraid to Express Her Opinion.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, a prominent lecturer and medium, steps boldly to the front and gives her opinion. She is not afraid to speak her sentiments, and does it in a manner that will command respect and attention. She has more calls to lecture than she can possibly answer. When giving tests, Mrs. Cooley confines herself almost exclusively to skeptics, and in so doing she is constantly making new converts. Too much time is wasted by mediums generally on the rostrum by giving tests to forty-year-old Spiritualists; they do not need the same.

To the Editor:—We have heard and read a great deal on the fraud question of late, and I had intended taking no part in the controversy until requested to do so by yourself.

Mediumship is something which should be tenderly guarded, and those possessing the same should see they allow no prostituting of the rarest gift ever bestowed upon human beings.

That there is commercialism among many workers is a well known fact, and while the "laborer is worthy of his hire," there is no need of supplementing the false for the real to obtain money, fame or position, for any and all of these qualities must be honestly earned if permanent. Popularity in any walk of life gained through false means is of a hot-house growth and generally fades quickly.

That fraudulent work is carried on under the name of Spiritualism and mediumship cannot be denied, and it is time we began to clean the "Augean stables," and no doubt the present discussion will result in something being done in that direction, yet great care should be taken along these lines.

We have no enemies to fear outside our ranks—the deadly foes we need protection from are those within the ranks. We will gain the respect of the entire world when we learn to respect ourselves.

I have read Miss Harlow's interview with the newspaper reporter at Pittsburg, about the "Blue Book," and have naught to say, but know the method spoken of in Mrs. Hyland's communications to your paper to be quite common, for in twelve years of almost constant travel I have met with many experiences that prove the existence of the exchange system.

But what is the cause of all this? The fault lies not alone with the mediums but with laymen and societies. A demand for sensationalism and drawing cards and jealousy between workers has been the means of many a first step toward fraudulent work, and once allowing themselves to practice deception, 'tis hard to overcome.

Right here let me give a few words of advice to mediums just entering into the work. Remember we all have our own work to do. Be natural—do not form the habit of imitating, but give your message to the world in your own original way.

Mediumship is a growth and improvement comes with earnest endeavor and experience. Most mediums are conscious of the greater part of that which comes through them—and pray do not get into the habit of adding to or taking from the message, but let it fall from your lips as the angel world intends it to be, pure and undefiled.

We find many a lady in a calico dress, and very ordinary walks of life, and the clasp of a warm hand, backed by a true heart and honest mind is worth more than all the applause and flattery gained by dishonest work. There are many thoroughly honest mediums doing a grand work who have not national reputations, but in their quiet way they are consoling and helping those who need their assistance, and these mediums are those who should be supported and encouraged by those who love honor and truth. With malice toward none and charity for all, I am,

Yours for Truth and Progress,

MEDIUMSHIP.

As Viewed From the Standpoint of Dr. Conger.

To the Editor:—Theodore Mayer made himself understood in his excellent article upon the important subject of "An Investigating Committee," in The Progressive Thinker, of June 25th issue.

No doubt watching is important; an unfolded life is prayerful, watchful, discriminating life. Mr. Mayer has put himself on record as opposed to an inquisitorial committee or resolution; I am pleased to have an opportunity to endorse his positive far-reaching paper.

We are not quite ready as Spiritualists, to kindle spiritual inquisitorial fires. Let us raise our standard, use our energies for equal and exact justice to all, let us broaden our conceptions upon this great subject of an infinite universe, continued life, and the significance of our spiritual duty here and now.

In the same issue E. J. Schellhous has an open letter to friend Jamieson. He calls W. F. Jamieson down, and it is time; we have been fooled enough with his promises and pretensions, tricks and exposures.

Mr. Schellhous has put Jamieson in a corner and done it neatly and in order; without doubt Jamieson must realize his position. A few such letters will dispel the Jamieson and Blue Book darkness.

The Fraud Question.

All the religions of our small world had a similar origin.

Is Spiritualism an exception? Subjugation, treachery, deception, fraud and selfishness have been the dominating ruling forces from the world's infancy to the present time, and these forces rule and dominate everywhere to-day, there are no exceptions; the fraud hunter is no exception.

Churches are all founded upon selfishness, subjugation and fraud, and organized Spiritualism is to-day making strenuous efforts in organizing and aping what is recognized as Christian churches; if fraud is what the howlers claim for it, why not be honest, fairly consistent, and cease to organize societies working them upon the fraud basis?

Are our fraud-hunters honest? Are they clear-headed? Do they think they are making martyrs of themselves? If ambition, notoriety and selfishness are not the ruling and inspiring motives of their efforts, will they be so kind as to go to the bottom of this subject and give us the whole truth?

Take the great mass—body—of Spiritualists and there is less fraud, more character, honesty and every-day manhood, than can be found in any similar class, Pagan or Christian.

But fraud is found among Spiritualists; they are human, are selfish and ignorant, made so in the churches they have outgrown.

What I desire to say is this, that Spiritualists as a whole are the equals of any, and superior to all other isms called religions.

If this subject is on the boards for discussion and thorough overhauling, let us have the facts outside of wholesale charges, showing us to be extreme fraudists.

Note the masterly exposition of the fraud subject, by Prof. J. S. Loveland, in The Progressive Thinker of July 16. Here is food for thought, not much can be added or taken from this clear and fearless article.

If every Spiritualist could read and digest it, spiritual subjugation would get a just set-back.

Relatively, fraud has not increased in Spiritualism in fifty years.

If the fraud agitation should cease, and the word be blotted from our vocabulary, at the end of ten years there would be less fraud than at this date.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $9.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co. of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men.

An Important Question for Spiritualists to Consider.

It will not do to constantly dwell upon pleasing, soul-elevating and mind-exhilarating thoughts, from the simple fact that by so doing we neglect the dark side of existence, a side that is not so pleasing to contemplate, and which should be carefully scrutinized and considered. Spiritualism is no exception to the rule.

It is sad to relate that there have recently been many exposures of prominent materializing mediums in various parts of the country. In Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Wis., and Los Angeles, Cal., and other places, the "spirit" has been grabbed, and in every case was found to be the medium or a confederate dressed in artificial toggery prepared especially for the occasion. This question is asked by an honest skeptic:

"Do all materializing mediums use artificial toggery, illuminated dresses, cheese cloth, wigs and whiskers, palming off the false make-up as a dearly beloved spirit friend? If a half-dozen exposures, one right after the other, of exceptionally prominent persons, result in bringing to light the medium or a confederate dressed in specially prepared toggery, what right has an investigator to expect that others are not pursuing the same line of work?"

The above is asked by an honest skeptic, and will prominent Spiritualist lecturers and mediums evade the question? Are they too cowardly to step to the front, endorsing or condemning such "spirit" manifestations? Can the "cry of fraud" be suppressed while such mediums pose before the public? You can express your opinion in the Open Court, ever keeping in mind the fact that Spiritualism divested of its shams is the grandest truth that ever came to this earth, and even with them as an affliction, it has done a world of good, illustrating its wonderful innate vitality and excellence.

The Great Question.

What Shall We Do to Be Saved?

Answered by W. H. Hutchinson, of Alzada, Montana.

During the winter of 1880-81 I was associated with a company of men, one of whose members was named ——— but let him be known here as John Brown. Brown seemed good-natured in a rough, careless sort of way, and, really, this appeared to exhaust the catalogue of his good qualities. He was coarse, he was vulgar, he was dirty, his social enjoyments were of the lowest order, he was miserly in the extreme. To be fair, I must admit that he could enjoy good society and good things when they did not cost anything, but would descend to almost anything to save a cent. One day while conversing with the head of our company, he mentioned Brown's name in a way which showed that John stood well in his estimation. Noting my look of surprise, he said:

"You have probably noticed that John does not spend much money."

"Yes," I responded, "neither telescope nor microscope is needed for the observation of that fact."

"Have you any idea what becomes of his money?"

"Banks it, I suppose."

"I'll tell you. When his father died John was four years old. His stepmother and step-sister cared for him tenderly and lovingly, raised him and gave him such education as their slender means afforded. During the last few years those two women have been invalid's, and John's pay has been their only support. Each month he draws a mere trifling sum and the rest goes to them. I know, for I send it."

'Twas a rough, rough husk, but the sweetness of the kernel was there, and Love's hand it was that drew it forth. Not the mere love of man for woman, but the real, unselfish article, lavished upon the fatherless, motherless little one, and later bearing fruit when so sadly needed. This man of unlovely exterior, ruled by love, was willing to be misunderstood, misjudged, avoided, that he might save for them, when that very fact in itself proves how keenly sensitive was his heart to love and good will. I do not excuse his coarseness. I seek not to palliate any one of his faults. all them inexcusable if you will. But the grandest hero war ever produced was a pigmy beside this man. He was a hero, God bless him, and the law of love made his heroism possible. Hasten the day when it becomes the sovereign law of the material universe as it is and ever was in the universe of spirit.

A former pupil once asked the question: Is it not sometimes a fact that the individual, when firmly convinced that his former fears were without foundation, is tempted to abuse his freedom and violate this or that law of his being, on the strength of a mistaken idea that penalty for wrong-doing is no longer to be dreaded?

Yes, the above is undoubtedly a fact. Here and there one will make that very mistake. In one sense this is unfortunate, for the reason that his or her excesses cast an unfavorable reflection upon the cause, tend to discourage the well-meaning but weak-kneed disciple, and furnish the skeptic with a weapon he is only too glad to use against us. But as far as the erring individual is concerned, the mistake is neither fatal nor final. Because I no longer live in danger from fire, I may foolishly feel myself free to lean against any red hot stove I choose to. Like the other fellow's, my error works its own correction. The punishment is sure, yet is never beyond one's strength, and the lesson is worth it all. His penalty may not follow as quickly as mine, but arrives in due time, all the stronger by reason of the delay. The longer the note runs the greater the accumulated interest.

It is told of the new metal, radium, that an assistant in the laboratory of Mr. and Mrs. Curie carried a small glass tube containing a portion of it in his vest pocket for a day or two without feeling any uncomfortable sensation. But by the time it did make itself felt the flesh beneath was burned so deeply that it took a long time to heal. Punishment inevitably follows an attempted violation or evasion of the laws of life, since one is a part of the other. Wrong is a keen cutting blade, and I am sometimes tempted to wield it for selfish purposes, but to do so I must seize it by its nettle-bound handle. They are one and inseparable. The mistake our teachers made was in supposing them to be separate, that wrong might be temporary and punishment go on forever.

Yes, though the danger we have so long feared proves to be purely imaginary, there are nevertheless dangers that are real. Though justice forbids, even were we cowardly enough to permit it, that another should suffer and be punished for our wrong-doing, still, "What shall I do to be saved?" is a question fraught with deep meaning to every one of us.

And I boldly assert that the danger of all dangers, the sin of all sins, is ignorance. At first thought this (ignorance) may not seem such a serious affair, but let us consider. Suppose, if it were possible, you were all at once placed on this earth, full grown, yet without a particle of earth knowledge, earth experience. None of your senses had been trained in the slightest. You were without the faintest knowledge of what any sound meant, knew nothing of propinquity or distance or the relation of one object to another. You could not raise a foot, or even stand on both feet, without falling, for you had not learned anything about balance. It would take an hour to enumerate the various ways of getting into trouble and suffering which would confront you. Would not that be serious enough to suit you? Then suppose you were given to understand by those who seemed to be in authority that such a condition was your natural state, that it would be impious to suppose you could ever do any better for yourself, but that way off somewhere lived a being who once walked the earth as a man, and at that time did all your stumbling and learning for you; that if you would fully believe all that was written about him he would at once fill you with all the skill and vigor you could need. Could that alone get you out of your trouble? Would you not have to learn to walk by walking, to eat by eating, to distinguish flavors and odors by tasting and smelling, to know the truth of everything about you by testing it?

You surely would. And, having once gained the requisite knowledge and experience, could anything ever again tempt you to put your finger into the fire, to seize a sharp knife by the blade, or throw yourself heavily upon a bed of thorns? Certainly not, for the siren form of Temptation would have shriveled and turned to dead ashes in the fire of your suffering. Would it, then, be too much to say that your mistakes and their attendant troubles, i. e., your sins and their punishments, grew out of your one great sin of ignorance? Or that it was the knowledge and experience you had gained that freed you from them, or in other words "saved" you?

Did I hear someone say, "self-righteousness"? To reply fully would be to go more deeply into that phase of the subject than space will permit. And does not Esop furnish us with a sentence which well covers the objection, viz., "Providence helps those who first help themselves." True, we cannot of our own separate strength do all these things, but so long as God furnishes the strength, the wisdom, etc., is He unreasonable in asking that we ourselves put them to use?

Says someone: "Do you not believe in Christ, the Savior?" I most assuredly do.

How do you reconcile that statement with the line of reasoning which has preceded it?"

Let us turn to the book from whence the old story is said to have been taken, and see if perchance we may not find a newer and a better when read in the light of love rather than of fear Paul, for instance, is considered good authority in regard to the reading of the scriptures. He says: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

As an illustration, suppose you meet me on the street and say: "Tell George I will not leave home Thursday if it rains." Suppose I afterward tell George that you wished me to inform him that you would not leave home Thursday. He, desiring to meet you on business, sees, as he thinks, an excellent opportunity to talk it over with you at your residence. He drives a number of miles for that express purpose and, the day being fine, is bitterly disappointed to find you gone. You might upbraid me afterward, yet you could not deny having said to me the words: "Tell George I shall not leave home Thursday." I would have given the strict letter of your message as far as I went. The fact that I had, through either carelessness or design, omitted the words, "if it rains," caused your friend to receive a message very different from the one you sent. I failed utterly to convey its spirit. So if we take from the Bible words, sentences, and paragraphs whose literal construction and rendering best suits our purpose or fits in with our preconceived opinions, and leave out all that might in anywise qualify them, there is no end to the number and variety of stories which the book might seem to justify. But if we will earnestly seek to learn the spiritual meaning back of those grand old allegories, how different the result. The sacred writer, however inspired with the truth, was and necessarily had to be free to clothe it in such language as he could best command. When we read their various writings literally, dire confusion is the inevitable result. But if back of them, hidden from the ken of the careless trifler, the idle scoffer, the crafty self-seeker, the worshiper at the shrine of ready-made opinion, and the mentally indolent who will believe anything that will relieve them of the drudgery of earnest search for truth,—if, hidden from these yet open and plain to the sincere, thoughtful spiritually minded student and lover of the true, we can find a story that agrees with and confirms our very highest ideals of Godhood; a story that harmonizes always with Love, Goodness and every phase of Perfection; a story that is ever consistent with and true to itself; surely such a story is not only worth our serious attention, but adds still further to our reverence for the book which contains it.

Let us look carefully through the portions whereon is laid the greatest stress as foundation for the old story. First, Genesis. Let us read attentively and ponder well. Reading literally, we seem to find an account of the beginning of the human race as a race, and of the planet Earth, all taking place within a week at a certain period of time. Reading with an eye alert to detect its true meaning, and an ear open to the real spirit of the message, do we not find a most faithful and accurate portrayal of the beginning of earth experience for the average human being? Born into the garden of Eden (parental love and care) with every possible want or need supplied, many of them anticipated, ignorant of wrong or evil in that it has no conception of any such possibility as wrong or evil, and wielding undisputed dominion, for does it not truly tyrannize over everybody and everything around it? Is not this the account we read? Is it not also a true picture of the beginning of earth life for an infant? It has everything, lacks no thing save one, i. e., the knowledge or experience of good and evil. In its wanderings about the garden it finds much to examine and inquire into, and uses the most convenient means, mouth and fingers, for that purpose. Slowly it becomes aware that when it wishes to lay hold upon certain things there is a restraining hand put forth or a note of warning comes into the voice of mother or nurse.

What is the inevitable effect upon such a veritable interrogation point as the average baby?

Call it Satan, call it serpent, call it what you will, there is in every human being that which is powerfully attracted toward the forbidden, which reasons that there must be something worth knowing in or about that which is persistently withheld. Nor is this inward prompting an evil thing in itself. It is the soul's natural, healthy desire for knowledge, the only direction in which it can grow. Perhaps the thing forbidden the little one is to put its finger against the stove. The time arrives at last when the impulse is unusually strong just at a moment when no one is watching; the little hand comes in contact with the hot iron; there is a frightened scream, and lo, the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil has been tasted and the little one finds itself outside the garden of innocence (ignorance) with the flaming sword of experience guarding the gate against its possible return. Is not this what we read? Is it not true, also, in every individual life?

As years pass, experiences multiply. Under wise guidance the child, the youth, the man or the woman, would learn many a valuable lesson from these experiences and be guided thereby into safer paths. But where the blind essay to lead the blind the lessons are lost sight of, false standards of action are set up, and confusion of counsels leads on to still greater confusion, unrest, doubt and suffering. Often the sufferer turns in despair from priestly counsel to that of the materialist, only to find that he has jumped from the frying pan into—the ice-box. One might as well burn as freeze.

And what shall he do to be saved? As it is only through his ignorance that he continues to sin and suffer, so only can a knowledge of the truth, a truer knowledge of himself and the laws of his beings, save him from further error and its attendant punishment.

"But," I hear you say, "we read that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin." True as truth itself!

Is not the blood the life of the body? Does not the word which is translated "blood" mean also life? I think we will find it so. Read it with this meaning and see how beautifully it falls into line with what we have already learned. See how it rounds out the natural, lifelike story which Love tells, a story that brings hope to all while awarding strict justice in every case. The Christ life (blood) cleanseth from all sin. Let us then live the Christ life, and to the extent we do this is sin impossible, and we thus saved from the consequences of sin. As we draw near to the Father and realize our oneness with him through the Christ in each of us, we find ourselves so filled with His blessed wisdom that the old dark shadows cast by ignorance no longer obscure our path or cause us to stumble, but in the radiance of the light of truth we press freely, safely, joyously forward. Aye, more. As we live the Christ life we realize as never before that life, real life, means a life of love, a life of service to our fellows. We find that one danger from which we have escaped was the danger of missing, through ignorance, so many of our chances for happiness. We find that life is love, that love is life, that only in loving service is true happiness possible for gods and men.

"Know the truth and the truth shall make you free." As we have punished ourselves by wilfully interposing the heavy draperies of tradition, superstition, and prejudice between the light of truth and ourselves, so, as we sweep them aside, do we find our lives flooded with the "Light that was never on sea or land." So dissolves the darkness once fraught with seeming danger; so disappear the dangers themselves. So do we find ourselves saved from the deadly fears which have so long held us captive. So come we into possession of our birthright. So do we find ourselves daily dwellers in that eternal city of refuge, the bosom of our loving Father.

WM. H. HUTCHINSON.

Alzada, Custer Co., Mont.

Obsession as Viewed by an Idahoan.

Brother J. M. Peebles announces in The Progressive Thinker, No. 763, that he will issue a four-hundred page book on obsession and demoniac influences. Now such book will, according to promise, show the reign of undeveloped spirits in this and foreign lands. Such being the doctor's diagnosis; but he leaves it there without prescribing a remedy to cure so fearful a state. By simply stating what are known facts, it might create fear in some, and make it absorbing thoughts of sensitives, which, instead of creating firmness as a counteracting agency may allow unwholesome thoughts to draw such influences towards the very ones whom we in all honor ought to guard. Much of the "yellow journalism," which describes facts as they really are in human lives, are prohibited passage through the mails or sold on our railroad trains; and why? Because they describe the lower stratum, and do not prescribe remedies to cure the social evils or curb the brutal instinct in man.

Admitting that the lower strata in spirit life are peopled by brutal and undeveloped spirits, how are we to reform them, and at the same time guard against their leech-like contact? This is the question that this present generation must solve manfully, firmly and boldly, or let it remain as a scarecrow like the angry, revengeful God, the undying fires of Hades, and the infant damnation of old theology.

Now there are remedies for all ailments, or at least remedies to cause cessation of pain without anaesthetics. Certain cases may be termed incurable, but acquired fortitude will lessen the pangs. Then let us in this case try the remedies first.

Allowing that all men are more or less influenced by spirits in as well as out of the body, influenced by their associates, climatic conditions, harmonious or disturbing surroundings, atmospheric and social conditions, one must, as if he stood on slippery ice, stand firm, but not stubborn; live a true life, while not condemning a weaker brother; lift up a fallen brother, shake him well and let him go. Blend justice with charity, discourage dependency, give pity to no one, but encouragement to all. Seek spirit communion for enlightenment, but not fortune-telling; ask no spirit to guide you in your business if you do not wish to draw the worldly-minded ones; be as willing to teach the spirits as they are to teach you. If your coat is wet, surrounding dampness will draw towards it by attraction, so will a lying spirit draw towards you if you are not truthful. If your resorts are saloons and gambling halls you may expect that unseen spirits who assemble there will endeavor to encourage you to their level. If ignorant spirits draw to your circle, don't despise them, but set a certain time and hour when you can instruct them, and be punctual, for as a rule they will be. Intelligent preachers of to-day respect a manly Spiritualist far higher than they do many of their cringing congregation, hence do not skulk away from your conviction. Be not "all things to all men," not honest on account of policy, for if you do, you live a lie to yourself, and will attract spirits of the same grade. Spirits do not attract to you on account of the fineness of your garments or the diamonds displayed, but according to your aspirations, habits, pursuits, innermost thoughts and soul growth. A crude poem reads:

"Every flea has little fleas, and these have fleas to bite 'em;
And these again have little fleas, and so on infinitum."

And thus we daily find souls graded in capacity and size, but who in the course of evolution will grow to understand the closeness of the two worlds to each other, and will accordingly learn how to attract the ones whither their aspiration listeth.

Continuity of Life.

Moses Hull Writes to an Inquiring Friend.

To the Editor:—Not long since one of Iowa's able attorneys forwarded to me a series of three letters from an able thinker—one who had lost confidence in the old theologies. This man had also lost a promising son of twenty years of age, beside others who were near and dear to him. He had tried in Spiritualism to find evidence that they still lived. While he found some things that he could not explain, he found nothing that was fully satisfactory to him. He found some things which to him were evident frauds. He had studied the late Thomson J. Hudson and others who had left him as much in the dark as he was before reading them.

He also read Rev. Minot J. Savage, Prof. Crookes and other honest and intelligent writers on behalf of Spiritualism, but was still on the hunt for satisfying evidence that some part of man continues to exist as a conscious individuality after death. I wrote him a letter, and it has occurred to me that if the argument made therein was good for this man it might assist other searchers for light, so I revise some portions of it a very little and send it to you to print in connection with this preface.

Ever Your Brother,
MOSES HULL.

My Dear Brother:—Through the courtesy of our mutual friend ——— ———, I have three of your letters to him accompanied with the request that I should write to you. From a perusal of those letters I learn that you are a doubter—an honest doubter—that you, yourself long to have your doubts removed; perhaps you wish to get rid of them more than you should. There is nothing more helpful to you than a fair amount of doubt. Good, honest doubts often lead their possessor to look deeper than he otherwise would, and thus enable him to get hold of the bottom facts in the case. Tennyson said:

"There is more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds.'

Doubts are the best, if not the only antidote to fanaticism, with which I am acquainted. Spiritualism has in many cases been cursed with a fanaticism which would swallow anything if it was big enough. There are, or have been, in the past, many Spiritualists, who, if a nightgown was put on a broomstick in a partially darkened room, would recognize it as their grandmother. The more of such Spiritualists we have, the heavier its load of barnacles.

I see by these letters, that you have done much reading and thinking along Spiritualistic lines. The writings which you have read are, for the most part from honest and intelligent men, yet you are not wholly satisfied in the matter. I do not think that what one sees and hears along these lines is always calculated to satisfy another. Others of course can tell what satisfied them, but that is not exactly what the soul wants. The soul wishes to see and feel its own inherent divinity, and hence its own immortality. Physical evidences, that is, the evidence of physical phenomena, are generally only convincing to that part of man which beholds them through the eyes and ears. And then they are only convinced that there is an unknown power there—a something not exactly comprehensible. Such evidences prove that "there are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

When one gets so that he can see himself as a spiritual being, then he does not need to make the effort, in a darkened room, to look upon a supposed materialized form to convince him of spirituality.

I notice that it does not seem credible to you that spirits can in five minutes reproduce a body which it was from twenty to sixty years in producing in the first instance. And then go on repeating that, up to, perhaps, the thirtieth time in a single seance. Nor is it credible to me.

The fact is, the most of pretended materializations are out-and-out frauds—impositions, for which the perpetrators deserve to be put in jail, and kept there long enough, at least, to have an opportunity to thoroughly reflect upon the enormity of their crime.

In cases of genuine materialization—if there are such—I have never been able to believe that it was the real form of my friend who materialized, but rather a lay figure produced by mechanics or chemists on the other side of life. Perhaps the spirit who may be represented more or less correctly in supposed cases of materialization may have been there and sat for that form, as one in this life sits for a picture. When the medium is caught tricking, it is generally called a personation or a transfiguration. I call it a downright fraud.

Even though the genuine manifestations in many of the seances may not come from those who it is claimed produce them, I find in the phenomena evidence that man is more than a bunch of cells. I came into Spiritualism from Adventistic Materialism. When clairvoyants described my friends, my eyes do not see them, or rather I do not see them through my eyes, but the medium does see them, therefore they exist; or if they did not exist this medium gathers this description from something in my mind. If the medium sees my friends, or if he sees something else which he mistakes for spiritual beings, then it follows that there is a sight not of the physical eye; if they hear words unheard by others present whose ears are as good as theirs, then there are sound vibrations not caught by the physical ear, if that is so, then there must be intelligence not in the physical. That being so, intelligence does not inhere in the physical, nor does it depend upon the physical for anything more than power to express itself to those in the physical.

The intellectual and the spiritual come from the organized animal, or the organized animal comes from the intellectual and the spiritual. If the intellectual and spiritual if the unconscious organized the conscious—if the brain grinds out thought, then we have the phenomena of brain evolving what had not been involved, or, in other words of giving out what was never in it. But if the spiritual brought into existence the animal, if the conscious organized the unconscious, then we have no more in that than appears when man makes an organ or a piano. In that case the body of man which manifests consciousness may be no more conscious than the piano may be a musician. The piano, under proper manipulation expresses music as the body of man is made by the spirit to express consciousness.

Thus I reasoned until I reasoned myself into the conclusion that genuine spiritual phenomena, even though a spirit never communicated, establishes the fact that mind—spirit, does not inhere in matter, and therefore cannot die with the disorganization of the material organism. I see immortality as a necessity; I think I have grown beyond the possibility of doubt on the question.

Spiritualism proves to me an unfleshed existence even though no spirit ever communicated. But if man is a conscious entity beyond death, and if intelligences do come back and manifest, even though such manifestation is imperfect, why do not the spirits of those who once dwelt in the flesh return and communicate? They knew us and loved us. If spiritual beings can return, then our friends can return. If they can come back, would they not be as anxious to talk with us, even though such communication was imperfect, as other influences would? If man remains a conscious entity, independent of what we call materiality and its laws, then the law of death cannot affect him. If the law of death does not affect him, then he is still in conscious touch with those who still remain in the flesh. If he is in conscious existence, then returns that old question, why would he not be likely to go to his friends in the flesh and signify to them some of his thoughts? At least as much so as other intelligences would to assume his name and claim to be what they are not.

From thinking along these lines I came to see, through my reason, that man's existence does not terminate with so-called death. At the same time the thought occurred to me that what the eye of the understanding sees the physical eye does not need to see.

You say in substance that Prof. Crookes does not in his work on Psychical Research, say that these manifestations come from the spirits of the dead. No, he did not. I do not see how he could. His articles were written for scientific skeptics, and first published in his Quarterly Journal of Chemistry. If he had in those articles, gone on to state conclusions, he would have inferred the inability of his readers to draw conclusions from his statements, and would thus have weakened his cause. In such a case he would have appeared more as an advocate than as a witness only to what he had seen and heard.

My great regard for Friend W——, who forwarded your letter to me, and for yourself, as I sense you through your letters, leads me to almost decide to reply to points in your letters seriatim; but I am a very busy man, and I suppose you to be the same; I will not, therefore, inflict more upon you at this time. I would, in conclusion, simply urge you to try to find your own spiritual nature. When you learn that you are, even now, a spiritual being, it will not take you a great while to get in touch with yourself as such when you get to where you can yourself make excursions as a spiritual being, you will cease to try to have your dear departed friends come to you. You will as occasion requires go and visit them.

Hoping and praying that this spirituality may come to you, I am yours in the hope of building Spiritualism on broader and more solid foundations.

MOSES HULL.

Love to Humanity.

For humanity's sake, love to do good to all things; feel a kind, loving feeling to all mankind whether rich or poor, whether ignorant or educated; a kind sympathy for all things that are weak in body or mind, and lend a helping hand to all those in distress from whatever cause it may be, "and as you would that others should do unto you" if you were lacking or needed the same aid that you see, wherein they need help. Be gentle and kind, as in kindness you will see and feel the greatest power to help any and all things, animate and inanimate, for in the latter you will realize that good feeling there is in the realization of doing good, and thereby comes a harmony of feeling within yourself, a sweet relief that you cannot get in any other way, and thereby you are doing good to yourself; and how quick it is mirrored in your face, and reflected on others. What a great good there is in a bright shining countenance! How quick that sympathetic chord is touched, and how quick it vibrates and every loving thought reaches out to the object or person you are brought into contact with.

What a loving world it would be if every one in it would try and do loving kindness to all and everything living. Just try that kindness on your dog and cat and horse, and see for yourself how easy they are managed, and how quick your kindness is returned, and many times recognized in a friendly way.

Human kindness is the most powerful weapon that ever was used and the most far-reaching, and with such glorious results, stop and think what a world of unnecessary amount of expense has been accumulated for war material and the use thereof, when if the strong arm of loving kindness had been used instead, none of our far-reaching guns could reach so far or be so effectual as love and kindness.

Then teach it to your dog and cat, and show it to your children by example to them, and before them. Teach it in our schools and show it in our daily walks of life and our conversation. Meet our fellowmen with a smile and a kind greeting and let your face reflect a kind and noble feeling and show a sincerity that will reach the hearts of man, and penetrate his inmost soul, and it will reflect back to you in a tenfold light and happiness; a happiness the vibration of which would reach around the world. Yes, the strongest weapon ever invented and the most far-reaching.

Then let our schools be our arsenals of loving kindness and our scholars a walking store-house of loving kindness, and every neighbor will be loved as he loves himself, and nations will learn war no more and the peace that passeth all understanding will be ours; and when we leave our clay house and take up our spiritual body, we will be better prepared to meet and mingle with those that have gone before us to the realms of endless progression and to an eventual realm of endless happiness, for as you build your life here, so must you take it up over there, and then how it behooves us to live a life of human kindness. Then let us forget selfishness, strife and discord and live for one another, for in a day when you know not, you will be called to that home not built with the almighty dollar.

DUBIOUS MORALITY.

As Comprehensively Illustrated by a Critical Thinker.

In a recent newspaper article, one who subscribes himself as a "Friend of the Churches," has discussed the "Law of Church Comity." While I do not find myself in accord with the conclusions of the writer, he doubtless reflects to a certain extent a popular feeling, and the subject seems of sufficient importance to warrant further comment.

This law as defined by this "Friend of the Churches" is the practice of the golden rule between churches. It forbids the pastor, Sunday-school teacher or other member of a church from "offering social, financial or other inducements," to persuade members of a church or Sunday school to leave their own church or Sunday school and join his. Nay, he goes farther and declares that one who countenances such work is a "thief and robber," and like the man who finds his neighbor's sheep in his flock and neither returns the sheep or informs the owner. If I understand him correctly, however, he limits the application of this law to the church "that serves Christ," by which I understand him to mean, to only such religious organizations or individuals as are willing to accept his views of the real or ideal character known in Christian literature as Jesus. Now the inference is obvious that he has no condemnation of the methods themselves. Social, financial and other bribes may be freely used to persuade men not of his way of thinking, to stifle their own convictions, sacrifice their intellectual honesty, affiliate with him and reap their reward. Spare the sister churches, says he, but go to the multitude without the churches.

It is true that it is sometimes assumed that the reason the masses of the people are unidentified with any religious organization is because they are without knowledge or conviction on religious questions. Nothing is farther from the truth. Every one who has been in a position to come in intimate personal contact with all classes of men, will testify that he has quite as often found, to say the least, men with no church affiliations, who were possessed of the most sensitive conscientiousness and had the most positive convictions; and on the other hand, that he has quite as often found among the most active and influential leaders in church organizations, men who had never given any serious thought or study to such questions, and who were without any deep and sincere convictions upon the most vital issues. Indeed, it has been sometimes said that these men make the most useful, and in a certain sense the best, church members. They see no lions in the way of any scheme proposed for the aggrandizement of the church. Too sensitive consciences in pastor or people lead to heresies.

Is not, then, the morality of the means employed for proselyting, a question of far greater importance than any law of church comity? What shall we say of the condition of morality which permits of the offering of any personal advantages or emoluments to tempt men to forsake their honest convictions and profess others? Or seeks to influence men to subscribe to any belief, by appeals to their passions or emotions, or by any means that does not satisfy their intellectual consciousness?

Is there any law of righteousness for one class that does not apply to another? If the means employed are branded as dishonorable when applied to organizations of like faith, how are they made respectable when used to seduce men from other faiths, or to overcome the weakness and poverty of mankind in any quarter of the globe?

Much has been written of late of the numerical growth of churches and the decadence of intellectual power in the pulpit, and the reason for it. How far the offering of "social, pecuniary and other inducements" to obtain membership has contributed to such a state of things may be worthy, at least, of some consideration.

LEWIS D. BURDICK.

Oxford, N. Y.

Cure of Rabies.

To the Editor:—Seeing an article in your valuable paper on the subject of rabies, I thought I would offer an item to your readers on the subject, which by further trial may prove an infallible remedy, and it certainly is a harmless one.

While in Phoenix, Arizona, there was a little girl died of rabies, which is the only case I know of on the Pacific coast. After her death, many incidents were related of cases at other places. There was a man there from Chela who reported a case which is worthy of a place in your scrapbooks and worthy of a trial. The man said that while he was in Chela, a boy was bitten by a rabid animal, took hydrophobia and kept growing worse until death was inevitable. He became so violent in his spasms, that his folks could no longer control him by holding him as they had done, so to protect themselves, from being bitten they put him in cellar and shut him in. There was a pile of garlic in the cellar which the boy fell down on in his spasms, grabbing all the time with his mouth to get something to bite. He got a whole bunch of garlic in his mouth, chewed and swallowed it. When he came out of that spasm, he was perceptibly better. The inference was that the garlic did it. So when he was far enough out of the spasm to do what he was told, his folks put him to eating garlic. But as the man did not say how many per day was eaten in that or any other case, I cannot inform you; but that matter of quantity could soon be decided. If garlic is an infallible remedy for rabies, everybody ought to know it. The informant said further that all people thereafter in that neighborhood, bitten by rabid animals were caused to eat garlic; and that no person nor animal so treated ever became rabid.

Rabies in different places must differ in character and intensity. In Ohio where I was born and lived about thirty years, they were often intrusive. One dog went to a house in his running paroxysm, and the lady of the house was alone, and had just time to glide into the house and keep the dog out, by closing the door after her. The dog remained at the door and barked, terrorizing the lady at least two hours.

A PRACTICAL COURSE

FOR

Physicians and Students

of Occultism,

Treating on the Following Subjects:

Personal Magnetism, Psychology, Hypnotism, Mesmerism, Suggestive Therapeutics, Psycho-Therapeutics, Magnetic Healing, Self-Mastery, Hygiene of Mind and Body, Nervopathic Massage and Various Kinds of Manipulation, Corrections of Vices, Education, Etc. By

PROF. OSCAR H. HOY, D. M., S. T. D.

This course of instruction is different from any course ever printed. It is a condensed encyclopedia, conveying the highest truths and most valuable information in terms so simple that a child can understand them. Much has been written on these subjects by different schools, but they were superficial and it has been left to the author to weld them together, the philosophies of the east and the west. His methods are not a theory or a fad, but are correct treatments, based on scientific knowledge, research and experience. He uses the best methods known pertaining to these subjects, enveloping all that is taught in other schools, and then going far beyond anything known in the west.

The course treats on the fundamental principles of universal law, and descends to individualized concrete matter, giving the "evolution of the individual" to its highest attainment of consciousness. It contains a more complete course on hypnotism than any other course, and manifests a new era in the study of practical psychic philosophy.

The regular price of this unique course is $25. We have decided to let a limited number go at $5. Those desiring this course can buy it at the price mentioned if purchased within the next four months. Address all orders to

Has the Universe a Purpose?

Persons of a philosophical cast of mind that takes pleasure in thought along scientific lines, will enjoy the terse reasoning of the following editorial in the Chicago Sunday Tribune:

Everybody who has been first amused and then bored by the intellectual slovenliness with which scientists of a certain consolatory type have appropriated the phrases of religion will applaud the attacks made upon them by Prof. Hyslop of Columbia.

Why talk about the "purpose" of the universe, says Prof. Hyslop, if you exclude the intelligence with which alone purpose can be connected? It may be, says he, that there is no adequate scientific reason for believing that any intelligence of a superior and controlling kind exists? Then why not face the consequences of such convictions? Why not admit that the forces of evolution, while they work together for the production and preservation of certain species of animals, such as man, and while they can be seen to produce continual changes in the universe, are yet absolutely unconscious of any predestined end and therefore cannot be said in any accepted use of words to have a "purpose"?

If Prof Hyslop's remarks could be forced deep into the minds of twenty or thirty prominent American philosophers we should hear less about the "ultimate benign purpose" and the "inherent moral intentions" of the evolutionary process of which all that can be predicated is that it cruelly eliminates the weak, violently preserves the strong, and thereby produces certain effects which, if they are not controlled by a superior intelligence, can only be said to be blind. Even if it be granted that the final consequence of evolution will be for the benefit of the human beings who happen to be alive—a circumstance which to us of the present generation is only remotely consolatory—what logical ground is there for speaking of that final consequence as a "purpose" for which we ought to feel grateful to the universe? Indubitably it can be spoken of as a result. But a result, a blind purposeless result, does not inspire gratitude, or trust, or faith, or any other emotion rightly connected with religion. Would not the cause of clear and honest thinking be subserved therefore if the men who do not believe in a superior controlling intelligence should drop their attempt to mitigate the loneliness of a strictly scientific world by talking comfortingly about a "purpose" which is impossible except in connection with an intelligence which they deny?

The question whether there is such an intelligence or not is beyond the ken of a secular newspaper. Even a secular newspaper, however, may be permitted to wish that the phrases of religion could be left to those who believe in religion and that the exponents of unaided natural forces would refrain from confiscating them without due process of logic. With intelligence there is a purpose in the world. Without intelligence there is no purpose in the world. If this latter condition seems unsatisfactory and the mental comfort of the former condition seems attractive let the fact be admitted, but let not logic be made to suffer for the sins of desire.

It Is a Fool Who Suicides.

There seems of late years to be a suicide mania among the clerics. The daily press abounds with mention of those who have shuffled off the mortal coil, evidently intent to escape what is, or see what lies beyond. Sometimes we think it is a self-inflicted penalty on those who are trying to make others a great deal better than themselves. The latest case noticed is that of Rev. Coli Duguid, a Presbyterian, at Maisonneuve, near Montreal. While his congregation were waiting him to commence he sent a bullet through his heart.

A cleric may best serve humanity by such an act; but, on general principles, we think a person is a fool who commits suicide. Whether in mortal or immortal life the consequence of every wrong follows the wrong-doer, and he must suffer the penalty for his act. There is no escaping it by prayers, lamentations, repentance or death.

Mrs. M. L. Butterfield.

Mrs. Butterfield, a Spiritualist and a medium, is lying dangerously sick at No. 292 Wells street. She is, we are told, greatly in need of prompt assistance. Will the Spiritualists and mediums come promptly to her aid, especially those on the North Side. Don't neglect this opportunity to do a good deed.

Exhilarating.

It gives one a delightful sensation of coolness, suggestive of mild breezes, restful shade, and the enjoyable pleasure of nice ice-cold lemonade, to read the following editorial outgiving of the esteemed Chicago Tribune in a recent Sunday issue. The open expression of such views by a leading secular journal is another proof that the world is progressing. Says the Tribune:

One has but to compare the sermons of twenty years ago on the subject of eternal punishment with those of today to realize that the old-fashioned hell has been superseded by a new hell much different in character and in population from the old one. It was said of Emerson "that if that man went to hell he would change the climate and immigration would set that way." This was not only a tribute to the gentleness and liberality of that philosopher but is a clew to the kind of influences which have changed men's conception of hell within the last half century.

According to an article in the North American by George T. Knight, professor of theology at Tufts College, this change of the popular idea of hell is due to a change in human character. There is more altruism than formerly. Men are more tolerant of their fellow men and more concerned over their welfare. Public charities are more abundant. Hospitals are increasing in number and efficiency. Associations having for their aim the betterment of the unfortunate are springing up on every hand. More tolerant of their fellow men while on earth, men are more liberal in their conceptions of the hereafter of their race.

At the time of the reformation the theory of infant damnation was almost universal. The children of the heathen and the unbaptized children of Christians were all condemned to everlasting flames. The extreme of the reformation idea of hell was expressed by the great Dr. Bellamy when he said "that the happiness of the blessed in heaven would be increased 9,600,000,000 times on account of the misery of the damned."

Since this worthy doctor's time there has been a steady reaction until, as set forth by many pulpits, hell has lost all its former terrors and has indeed become attractive to those who do not like to associate with people who are "too good." One of the most extreme of recent doctrines is as follows: "The supreme penalty of sin is the loss of our original and ideal relation to God." This is the kind of punishment which many sinners wish—seclusion and complete independence of their maker.

It is possible that the new hell has become too pleasant a place to accomplish any good as a punitive institution.

The Bible Teaches Rank Infidelity.

"That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth? Wherefore I perceived there is nothing better than that a man shall rejoice in his own works."—Solomon. Ecclesiastes 3:9 to 22.

The wisest man continues in the same strain in chapter 9:

"Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart. * * * Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest."

And the patient Job agrees with Solomon, Job 7:9:

"As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away; so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more."

That is rank infidelity. An agnostic is one who neither denies or asserts that man is immortal; he does not know. But the wisest of men, Solomon, and the most patient of men, Job, were positive in their denial of an existence beyond the suspension of mortal breath.

Now good reader, contrast this Bible statement, a book inspired by God, every word of which the churches tell us is inerrant from cover to cover, with the teachings of Spiritualism:

"There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

* * * * *

"And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is LIFE—there are no dead."

The Vegetarian Soldier.

The vegetarian does not believe in shedding the blood of his fellow man any more than that of his other fellow creatures, but if compelled to fight in self-defense or in defense of the oppressed, he is no coward either in the manner or the method of his warfare. By courtesy of the Record-Herald our May number presented a picture of the typical Japanese soldier, whose brilliant military strategy and unparalleled physical endurance have won the admiration of the world's armies Like the soldiers of Cyrus, who conquered the world on barley, and the heroic Spartans with their black bread and olives, these militant vegetarians of the twentieth century have taken their little bags of rice and marched to victory, with such steady stride that never again will vegetarians hear the trite excuse for flesh-eating from those who never expect to ever hear the roar of cannon, that "vegetarians cannot be good soldiers"

There is another fact about this vegetarian, Japanese soldier which, we note, is not heralded in our metropolitan press, but for which our missionaries in Korea are giving him due admiration and praise, viz., wherever he goes, he is the protector and not the violator of woman. His presence means that womanhood is safe. Unhappily, this cannot be said of any of the flesh-eating armies of so-called Christian nations. This is no accident, but only another illustration of Shelley's declaration concerning the reform in diet: "It plucks up the whole evil by the root."—Vegetarian Magazine.

TELEPATHY

Considered as a Factor in Evolution.

The difference between the "crank" and the scientist is merely a matter of time. Some fact radiating from the source of all knowledge comes vibrating through space and strikes the brain of a person sensitive to its reception. He in turn gives it verbal expression and sends it out into the world. There it goes through three stages. The first stage is opposition. The second, acceptance. The third, application.

Telepathy has reached the last mentioned stage, after a hard battle with the first two. I am assuming that everyone—who thinks at all—is aware that telepathy is accepted scientifically, as one of the great forces of the universe. That it is considered to be as capable of conscious direction as electricity. That it is a subtle form of electricity, in fact. But, lest there be some who still doubt the scientific acceptance of Telepathy, I will quote from a recent edition of the Scientific American—probably the most conservative and cautious of all the publications on mechanical sciences. In an article headed "Electric Waves and the Human Brain," I find the following:

"In a note to the Academy of Sciences, Prof. Thomas Tommasina, of Geneva, reached the conclusion that the human body may be employed as a receiving station in wireless telegraphy.

"We ourselves have several times verified Prof. Tommasina's assertion and found that the human body is a receiver almost as perfect as a wire or metallic rod. It is less of a conductor than metal, but, as an offset, presents a wider surface, which practice has demonstrated to be very advantageous for the reception of waves in wireless telegraphy. We have made use of our bodies both as receiving and transmitting stations, first insulating ourselves properly from the ground. We have thus been able to make communications at appreciable distances by sending and receiving the waves through the body.

"Mr. F. Collins, a young electrical engineer of the United States, has gone still farther. He has found that electric waves of great frequency, those of certain flashes, for example, act upon the brain of man and animals both before and after death. The brain acts as a coherer, and coheres and afterward decoheres itself automatically. And this is not all; the human body may serve as a complete receiver in wireless telegraphy. Having the receiver and coherer, we need a battery. This Mr. Collins finds in the nervous system.

"In experimenting upon a live cat that had been put to sleep, Mr. Collins and his collaborators, among whom there were some well-known specialists and professors, remarked that the cat jumped up under the influence of the electric waves, just as when it was submitted to an intermittent or alternating current.

"It may be admitted that the waves that cause the nerves to approach or recede also cause the passage or interruption of the nervous current of the brain, by producing extra opening and closing currents. The nerves serve as conductors, and the receiver is the face, which, in nervous persons especially, shows the action of lightning by signs of fear.

"The following are Mr. Collins' conclusions: (1) The electric waves emitted by the flash act in such a way as to cause the nerves to approach; (2) the cerebral matter acts like a coherer, in life as well as after death; (3) what is often defined as fear is due to the action of electric waves upon the brain; and (4) the electric waves propagated by the disruptive discharge of the flash are capable of producing characteristic accidents followed by death.

"Such facts are of interest to wireless telegraphers in particular and to humanity in general.

"It results from what has been said that waves of great frequency, which like X-rays, possess a great power of penetration, should be replaced by those of low frequency obtained especially by the discharge of Leyden jars (Braun system of wireless telegraphy), or, better still, by the alternating current system (without sparks), of which Lieutenant Poncelet and ourselves are partisans. But there is still another standpoint from which we should view Mr. Collins' experiments and results. As the electrical world remarks, the phenomena pointed out by this gentleman are of a nature to throw light upon the theory of telepathy.

"We certainly scarcely expected to see telepathy, or the transmission of thought to a distance, appear. The remark is merely incidental, but, since scientists have a tendency toward admitting the possibility of this psychic phenomenon, it is of interest to try to explain it. Mr. Collins' experiments give a certain range to this theory. From the experiments that we have just mentioned, it is evident that transmissions from brain to brain can be produced at a distance, just as in wireless telegraphy. One brain sets the nervous waves in action and the other receives the waves, as in the ordinary wireless receiver. Once again we have here a hypothesis, but one which, according to Mr. Collins' experiments, has a certain value."

This fact admitted, stupendous possibilities open up for the betterment of the world. When we know how to send our thoughts to any point or person, when we become fully conscious that our thoughts are forces that live and crystallize into acts in the minds of those about us, we will be more careful of our thought-world. We will begin to reform the world by reforming the mental image in our minds.

Under the health-radiating influence of consciously directed thought, disease, misery and wrong-doing will disappear. Whether present experience that we call Death will ever be disposed of, I am not prepared to say. I do not think that it matters. The fact that we can still communicate after this change through the soul-sense of telepathy will dispel all doubt and fear and space.

The fact that telepathy is such an evident factor in scientific research at the present age when the world is beginning to outgrow materialism, is evidence that it is part of the plan of evolution.—Dr. Alexander J. McIvor-Tyndall, in Psychic World.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker are already acquainted with character of this book. It is intended by its assisting, inspiring spirit-authors to furnish a compendium to the student of psychic laws and manifestations. It has been more than thirty years in preparing and contains all that has been received by me through inspiration and research during that time on the subjects it treats. Few questions will arise in the minds of investigators that are not answered in its pages. Price, $1.25, postpaid.

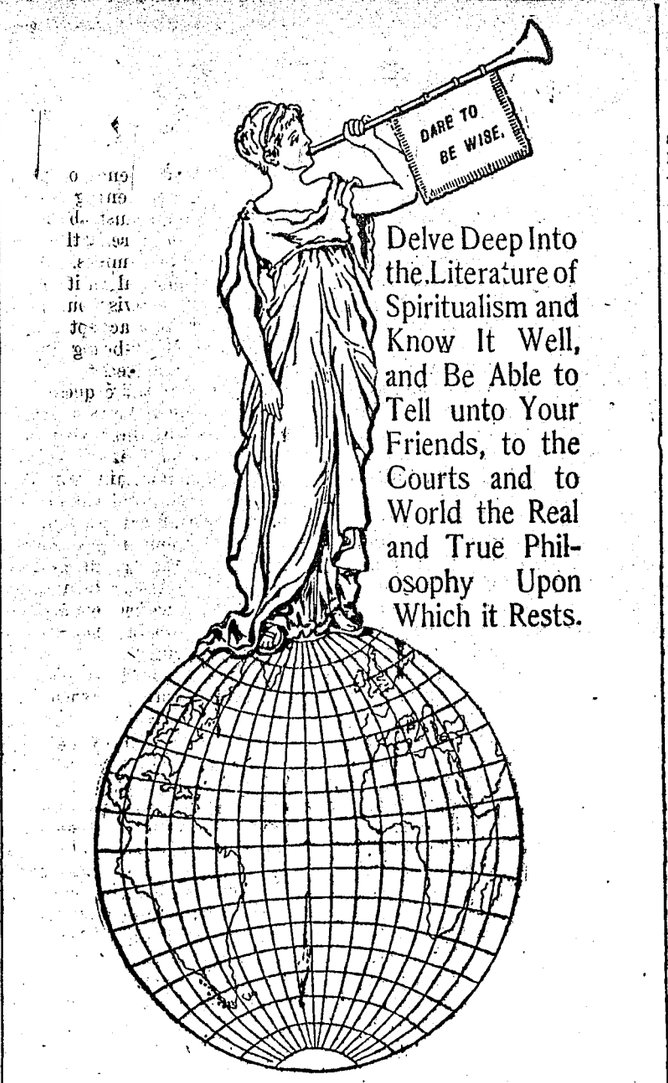
Cry of Fraud Exerts a Healthy Influence



Spiritualism divested of all fraud is one thing. When mingled with fraud it at once becomes an object of grave doubts and suspicion. As a man who in any sense allows or practices fraud, loses the confidence of business people, so will any sect lose caste that tries to suppress the cry of fraud when that poisonous weed actually exists. He who would suppress the cry of fraud when fraud actually exists, acts in harmony with the crook who receives stolen goods, but strenuously objects to having the "cry of thief" raised, fearing somebody's fair name will be soiled. I am in perfect accord with Mayor Harrison where he says:

"Don't compromise with what you believe is wrong; never mind the fear that you will lose; better be right and lose than wrong and win, for in the triumph that comes of a compromise with wrong you lose in the end, and in going down with the sinking ship of a cause you despise, you can't enjoy even the satisfaction of a dying cheer."

I also endorse the following: "When deception is allowed to continue, without making it public, it takes deeper, wider and more influential roots, and finally to a great extent strangles the truth, and weakens greatly the cause it represents, and in the end is far more injurious than giving it continual publicity."

It is my thought that the cry of fraud, when fraud actually exists, exerts a healthy influence, and those who think otherwise are working in harmony with every crook in the land.

JAMES KECK.

A Chicago Girl In Luck.

The following from Mr. Thessman, of Chicago, contains an account of most remarkable spirit manifestations. We are well acquainted with Mr. Thessman, and know him to be thoroughly reliable. The spirits have often brought various things to his house, and occasionally give his daughter money. Much food for reflection is in these manifestations, and the one following, in reference to opening a safe.

QUEER DOINGS.

A Chicago Girl's Very Singular Spiritual Experience.

On February 13, 1903, our daughter received her first knowledge of Spiritualism. Some one told her: "Go on the next street and you will find a ring." She did as told and got the ring. Next day she was told to get the box the ring came in. I was informed of this and did not know what to make of it.

A few days later, while walking with our daughter, she talked all kinds of incoherent talk to me. All of a sudden, while passing a dark alley some one (unseen by me) gave her a blue silk boa. This made me shiver. She was told, "You will get a new dress for Easter; it must be made like your green one, and if you believe in us you will get lots of things."

One day before going to school the voice told her, "Take a newspaper and lay it in the vestibule." She did as told, when she saw a hand come and take the paper away. On returning from school there lay in the vestibule a bundle containing the making of a waist, blue goods, lining for same, hooks and eyes, two kinds of thread, buttons, three kinds of ribbons. She was told to get the waist made up. For the skirt she received $3 in school; for a wreath on her last year's hat she received $1.35 in school. On Easter morning she was dressed in her spirit dress. This money was brought by spirits.

We receive all kinds of goods including flowers, three carnations, one for each of us.

Every evening before or after supper the three of us would have to hunt for articles in our parlor.

All this put me and my wife on nettles. I did not know what was what. One evening while alone in our parlor and thinking over all these happenings, I asked for proof: If all this is true, bring to me for my birthday, March 11, a red and black tie. No one knew this request. I got my wish. This was a stunner to me.

My wife made a request one evening for her own satisfaction. She got it. No one at home but her. The first month we did not keep tally of what we received, or dates. To relate all would fill a book.

Nov. 6, 1903, received a message, "you will receive a Christmas present." Dec. 3, she received a beaded chain. All the messages are signed Maggie, a daughter of ours who passed out 17 years ago, at 11 months old; M. E. Coleman, a friend of ours, passed out 20 months ago; John P. Altgeld, Red Rose, Blue Bell, Carnation and some writings we can't read.

All these things have come anywhere, in our home, in school, in the street; spirits have handed her articles in broad daylight and talked to her.

In conclusion I will say that I have been an agnostic all my life, but always seeking for truth and knowledge. Our daughter, who will be 16 years old coming August has never been to any church. We do not believe in churches; we always tried to make our home our church. CHAS. THESSMAN.

Who Opened the Safe—the Lord or a Spirit?

Col. Eldridge Smith, an inventor, died at his home in Washington, D. C., June 25, 1904. After his death his safe could not be opened; the combination was tried again and again, but it failed to work. The widow called in two experts, but they failed, and told her it would have to be sent to a shop and "drilled out."

Then a model maker, S. Clark Swett, who had been employed by the deceased, was permitted to try his hand at the job of opening it. Meanwhile the pious widow wrestled in prayer to God to have it opened without resort to the method prescribed by the two experts, which would leave the safe dismantled and useless. Nor had she any faith in Mr. Swett's Spiritualism upon which he was relying to enable him to hit the right combination. He had been a Spiritualist more than forty years, and during the last twelve had been a medium, claiming to have many spirit guides, among whom was an Indian girl. He got an impression that she or some other of his guides would help him open the safe. The next morning he went for another trial. Seating himself before it he instantly felt a tingling in the nerves of his hand and wrist. Then he involuntarily turned the knob of the lock to the right, then to the left, not noticing the numbers either way. The door swung open. He then examined the lock, and finding it in perfect order re-arranged a combination to his own liking, leaving the door open. And so it still remains.

When he had finished the opening of the safe his hand and arm remained numb, as usual under such spirit control. At first he was unable to tell which of his spirit guides had directed the opening, but that same evening the Indian girl told him she had obtained the combination from Col. Smith in the spirit world and had used Mr. Swett as a medium to turn the knob.

But the widow stoutly combats Mr. Swett's claim. She insists that the miracle was wrought by the Lord to whom she was devoutly praying at the very moment when Mr. Swett came in and announced that he had himself done it under spirit control.

The safe contained valuable papers, among which was the last will of Col. Smith, bequeathing to his widow their homestead.—Abridged from the Washington Post of July 17, by W. H. B.

Tolstoy on War.

The following highly interesting and suggestive letter from Leo Tolstoy appears in that great daily, the New York American and Journal, of July 10.

You are astonished that "the authorities teach soldiers that it is permissible to kill men in certain cases and in war, when, in that book held sacred even by those who teach that, there is nothing which resembles this permission;" and "that, on the contrary, one finds there not only the prohibition of all slaying, and the interdiction of all violence against man, but the prohibition to do to others that which one would not wish to suffer one's self." You ask me, too, if this may not be a fraud, and, if it is one, for whose benefit is it committed?

Yes, it is a fraud, and contrived in favor of those who are accustomed to live on the substance of other men, and who, with this object, have misapplied the laws of Christ given to man for his happiness, but subsequently changed into the principal source of all human ills.

This phenomenon has been produced in the following way: Governments and all the members of the upper classes who depend on governments, and who live by the work of others, have need of a medium for governing the race of workers. This medium is the army, the existence of which the defence of the country is only a pretext. The German government frightens its people with the Russians and the French; the French government frightens its people with the Germans; and the Russian government frightens its people with the Germans and the English; thus do ally governments.

But not only do the Germans, the Russians and the French not want to have war with their neighbors or with other people, but what they fear most in the world is war. Therefore the governments and the idle upper classes in order to have a pretext for their domination over the race of workers, behave like the gypsy, who whips his horse in secret, and then pretends not to be able to hold it back. In the same way they irritate their own people and some other government, and then make believe that for the happiness or defence of their people they are forced to declare war, which is advantageous to the generals, the officers, the merchants and in general, to all the rich class. War is only the inevitable result of the existence of troops, and troops are only necessary to governments in order to dominate the race of workers. This is a criminal thing. But the worst of it is that the governments, in order to give a rational basis to their domination over the people, must pretend to profess the highest religion which men have ever known—that is, the law of Christianity—and they instruct their subjects in this doctrine.

This doctrine, in its essence, is hostile not only to murder, but to all violence, and governments, in order to dominate the people and call themselves Christians must rob Christianity of its true nature and hide from the people its true sense, thus depriving men of the happiness which Christ brought them. This falsification of Christianity began long ago under the scoundrel, who for this deed has been canonized—the Emperor Constantine. All governments since then, above all the Russian government, have striven by all means to prevent the people from perceiving the true sense of Christianity. For if they perceive its true sense they would understand that governments, with their taxes, their soldiers, their prisons, their gibbets, and their lying priests, are not only not the supports of Christianity, which they affect to be, but its greatest enemies.

Because the Earth Is in the Hands of the Rich.

From this change have been produced the frauds which astonish you and all the evils from which the people suffer.

The people are crushed, despoiled, miserable, ignorant and why?

Because the earth is in the hands of the rich.

The people are bound to the workshops and the factories because the government draws from them taxes; because the government lessens the price of their labor and augments the price of everything which is necessary to them. How are we to remedy that?

By taking away the land from the rich? If we do that the soldiers will come, who will kill the agitators and put them in prison.

Take away the factories and workshops? It would be the same thing.

Strike?

That never succeeds.

The rich can keep themselves longer than the workers. Troops will be always on the side of the capitalists. The people will never emerge from the misery in which they are kept as long as the troops are controlled by the ruling classes.

But who are these soldiers who keep the people in this slavery? Who are these soldiers who will shoot the peasants, occupying the lands, the strikers who will not end the strike, and the smugglers who would wish to carry merchandise without paying duty?

The soldiers are those same peasants from whom we have taken the earth, those same strikers who wish for higher wages, those same taxpayers who wish to be delivered from this payment.

Why, then, do these men wish to shoot their brothers?

It is because the government has inculcated in them the idea that the oath is unavoidable which they are compelled to make on entering the service, and that, if it is not lawful to kill men in general, it is lawful to do so on the order of one's superiors. That is to say, they are victims of the same fraud which has astonished you.

Christ Did Not Permit Murder.

How can reasonable men, who very often can read, write and are even intelligent and educated, believe in a lie that is so apparent? However little educated a man may be, he cannot be ignorant that Christ did not permit murder, but that he preached gentleness, humility, forgiveness of injuries, love of one's enemies, and it is impossible for him not to understand that, according to the Christian doctrine, Christ could not permit him to kill all those he should be ordered to kill.

How can reasonable men believe, as they have believed, and as all those who are now in the military service do believe, a lie so gross? Here is the answer:

It is because men are not only misled by this fraud, but are prepared for it from infancy by a series of lies, by a system of trickery which calls itself the orthodox religion, and which is nothing but the most gross idolatry. Through this religion men learn that God is triple, and that in addition to this triple God there is a queen of heaven, and that in addition to this queen there are also saints of all sorts whose bodies are not destroyed, and in addition to the saints that there are also images of God and of the queen of heaven, and that one must illuminate them with candles and pray to them. Men learn further that nothing is more important or sacred in the world than the little wafers prepared by the priest every Sunday behind a curtain, and that after the priest has mumbled over the wine and bread the wine is no longer wine, the bread is no longer bread, but the blood and body of a triple God.

Assassination Most Expressly Forbidden by all the Laws of Christ.

All that is so foolish that it is impossible to understand the meaning of it. Furthermore, those who teach this religion do not order the people to understand it, but only to believe it. Accustomed to these falsehoods from infancy, men have only to believe in all the other foolish things that are told them. Then, when men are so blinded that they believe God is hanging in a corner or that he is incorporated in the little piece of bread which a priest gives them in a spoon, when they embrace wood and relics, and believe that to surround them with candles is useful in this life and even in the future life, they are called to military service. Then they deceive them, as they wish, by first of all making them take an oath on the Gospel (where the taking of an oath is expressly forbidden) that they will do what is forbidden by the Gospel. Then they teach them that to kill men by the order of their superiors is not a sin, but that the sin is disobedience to their superiors.

Therefore this error of the soldier—that they may kill men by order of their chiefs without sin—is not isolated, but is bound to all the systems of deceit without which it would be without effect. Only a man completely mystified by this false religion, which is called orthodox, can believe that without sinning the Christian can accept military service, promise to obey blindly every man placed higher than he in the hierarchy; learn on the order of another assassination and do that which is most expressly forbidden by all the laws of Christ.

A man, free from the power of lies and of the false Christian religion, called orthodox, will never believe that. This is why those who are called sectarians—that is to say, Christians who deny the doctrine of orthodoxy and who accept the doctrine of Christ, as it is written in the Gospels, and, above all, in the Sermon on the Mount—have never allowed themselves to be deceived by this lie, and have always refused, and do refuse, to serve as soldiers, not believing military service reconcilable with Christianity, and prefer to suffer a thousand torments, as has happened to hundreds of thousands of them. These are, in Russia, the Doukhobortsi and the Molokans; in Austria the Nazareneh; in Switzerland, in Sweden and in Germany the Evangelicans. The government knows this, and that is why it watches over nothing with so much solicitude as this falsehood of the church, without which its power would not be possible, and which acts upon childhood even, and which no man can avoid. The government permits everything, including drunkenness and bad morals, which it not only permits but encourages, but with all its force it prevents men already freed from the power of falsehood from freeing others.

The Russian government above all practices this deceit cruelly and insidiously. It orders all its subjects under threat of punishment to baptize all its children in the false religion called orthodox, and when the children are baptized forbids them to discuss the religion in which they have been involuntarily baptized, and punishes them as much for the discussion of this religion as for their conversion to another. Thus one cannot say of all Russians that they believe in orthodox religion. They do not know whether they believe or not, for they have been brought into it as little children and are kept there by force and fear of punishment.

This is why the only means of delivering men from all their ills is to deliver them from the false religion which is imposed upon them by the government, and teach the true Christian doctrine which the false hides from them. This true doctrine is very simple and clear, to be understood by all, as Christ has said, but it is simple and comprehensible only when man is delivered from the falsehood in which we are all brought up.

Live in the Noblest Manner From Birth Until Death.

One can put nothing useful in a vessel which is full of useless things. It is first necessary to empty it of all which is not useful. Thus, in the acceptation of the true Christian doctrine it is necessary to know that all those stories—that God six thousand years ago created the world, how Adam sinned and how man fell through ancestral faults, how the Son of God, born of a virgin, came into the world and redeemed it, and all the fables of the Bible and the gospel, and all the lives of saints, and stories of miracles and relics—are nothing but a gross mixture of the prejudices of the Hebrew people and the falsehoods of the clergy. The doctrine of Christ can only be comprehensible, simple and clear when man has been freed of all this nonsense.

This doctrine does not treat of the commencement or the end of the world, of God or of His plans. It does not treat of what we cannot know, but speaks of what man must do in order to be saved—that is to say, to live in the noblest manner, from birth until death, this life for which he has been brought into the world.

For this it is only necessary to do unto others as we would that they should do unto us. That is the whole law, as Christ has said, and to act thus one needs no image of God, no relics, no mass, no priests, no sacred history, no catechism, no government.

On the contrary, we need to be completely freed from all these things, because to do to others as he would that they should do to him, man must be free from the fables which the priest gives him as the sole truth. He must not be bound to act toward other men as they shall order him.

Then only man will be able to do not his own will or that of other men, but the will of God. The will of God is not that we should make war and oppress the feeble, but that we should consider all men as brothers and help one another. Such are the thoughts which your letter has aroused in me. I should be very happy if they help you to elucidate the questions which occupy you.

LEO TOLSTOY.

Not a Thing.

The Walpole Wreckord rhymster is sad: Listen to him:

"There's not a song, a sound of mirth, there's not a fair thing on the earth;
there's not a blossom or a flower,
a smile from sunlight or from shower;
there's not a kind word from a friend,
there's not a message to amend;
there's not a hope on land or sea,
there's not a thing—a thing for me!"

Poor fellow! Some one should give him a stick of candy to hold. He needs it.

The Evolution of Life. = By Sar'gis.

To the Editor:—The Associated Press furnishes the following to the newspapers:

"Anderson, Ind., July 1.—Dr. Charles W. Littlefield, whose beliefs in the creation of animal life from chemicals have interested the scientific world, is a physician and surgeon of this city. He came to Indiana eight years ago from Kansas. Dr. Littlefield is a graduate of a homeopathic college of Kansas City and a member of the Indiana Homeopathic Society. Of his work in deriving animal life, in the form of insects, from chemicals, Dr. Littlefield said to-day:

"'There have been millions of these insects generated or produced from a drop of inanimate matter. Each one has a distinct individuality and is not in any way dependent on the others for its power of locomotion. You can see them grow, seemingly from nothing. Thousands fly into the air, where they live from a few minutes to several hours. One colony that was created last night lived all night and was as lively as ever this morning. They do not come from pre-existent forms of life or from eggs of any kind. They have no ancestors other than inorganic matter.'"

In a recent article on evolution by the writer, in The Progressive Thinker of May 21, 756, occurs this sentence: "But so long as science discards what it chooses to call 'spontaneous generation,' so long will evolution, in parts, be a debatable hypothesis." And in another place this: "This is the doctrine of evolution as it comes to the world through the light of spirit." And again this: "Sometime with the permission of The Progressive Thinker it might be in order to discuss the spirit theory of life's advent on our world, but it is not now."

This now reported discovery of the Kansas-Indiana chemist seems to afford a timely reference to that subject—for taken in connection with Prof. Loeb's experiments at Wood's Holl, and other chemical results of late date, the twentieth century bids fair to make "creation" a new chapter in modern science.

And while these quoted sentences from the former article are the premises that will color what may follow here, there will be no foot notes, no extracts to confuse. What is said will be the story of a reporter or translator, with no personal egotistic claim of originality.

The origin or advent of form-life on our planet is attracting the attention of science to an extent that made it the subject of Lord Kelvin's recent annual address before the royal society—among its suggestions being life-germs brought by meteorites from other planets or worlds. Now, don't get confused over what has to be assumed before such a hypothesis can be entertained: That there are other planets having life-forms, and that they can and do throw off fragments that overcoming gravity are projected to our earth. Or, in other words that several organic science theories must be set aside before this could be. But as the theory of this writing is disclosed it will be noted how the idea of life from cosmic sources may be groping amid the mists of material science toward the light of the spirit concept. Both agree that at one time life-forms did not exist on our planet, and that so far as that is concerned there was a "beginning."

Both, too, agree that at one time this globe was an incandescent mass—as comets show the primary formation of worlds. Clear thinking need not be disturbed by using geologic or astronomic details as to the age of our world—it can be best treated by periods. One thing is sure, that in passing from a globe of incandescent matter to a world of present or historic condition it must have been subject to all intermediate states and influences. The existence of fossils and ruins of pre-historic civilization and peoples attest this fact.

As life—form-life—only exists to-day when in an environment varying about eight degrees temperature, Fahrenheit, with ninety-eight degrees the normal, the planet must have been at a corresponding temperature in order to admit of its advent in the first place. This idea meets strong corroboration when it is noted that the food which the planet produces for the sustenance of its animal forms, in its chemical transformations by the viscera, generates a heat that keeps the material body within the limitations. Could a stronger illustration be asked? And here it may be as well stated that when the term life is used, it means form-life—for only life in form is open to our observation and study—or life only manifests objectively through form.

As life-forms were impossible before the planet cooled to admit their existence, as we see them, they must have come in one of two ways: (1) By what we call spontaneous generation—chemical action in a suitable environment; or (2) by the fiat of a creative power. Which? If we say the latter, what then? All analogies show that whatever the power, it operates wholly and only through what we call chemical law. So, for all purposes here both concepts work by the one method.

We see enough in the geologic and in the prehistoric evidences to tell us that our planet has undergone radical changes in its features and in the character of the form-life upon it—in its flora, its fauna, its geologic aspects, and even in the multitudinous life of its seas. If then it was "created" the process was very slow, ages and ages as we conceive of time, and is still in progress. So taking either concept the observant thinker arrives at the present in practical agreement.

In the former article mention was made of the great discovery of the nineteenth century—the law of "valence"—or of chemical equivalence—which discovery accounts for all form as the result of this formative power through polarity of substance. Water is "created" by a fixed equivalent of hydrogen and oxygen—so of all forms existing on the planet, and of the planet itself. All that is needed is for the chemist to find the equivalence, blend together, and he has anything he desires.

Now, this "law" must have presided at the introduction of form-life on our world, as well and as logically as it does to-day over its phenomena. Every discovery, every blended product of the pharmacist, the distiller or inventor of potentials in explosives, simply invokes this law. And so with Dr. Littlefield as quoted in the beginning of this notice.

With all these primal facts in mind we are prepared to think about the introduction, advent or origin of life on our own world. As life was once impossible and it is now the home of millions of organic forms it must have been in the intervals at every stage of unfoldment, and at one time at the normal temperature at which we know life is only possible. That fact should be fully comprehended and made familiar to the mind before its lesson can be comprehensively applied. And as planetary cycles as we know cover long periods of time—thousands of years without tangible change—evolutionary transmutation in life-forms, like the rock-crust, blend in harmonious sequence from the simpler to the more complex until intelligence, the ultimate of form-life, makes its advent.

Now, say, the earth was at one time from ninety-four to one hundred and two degrees for an average—that being the margin it which life now exists, and you have the essential conditions present for the advent of life in form expression. And very suggestively it is found that the gigantic forms of the paleozoic ages—the saurian, reptilian and other primeval types actually required a planetary condition that furnished a higher temperature, and that as the planet cooled to present conditions they became extinct. This is the lesson of the fossils and other remains of the time the planet was emerging from the heated conditions to the stage of form-life. Say this transformation period lasted, as others we know about, for three or four thousand years. What the possibilities of this brooding time of the planet? With this incubating temperature, and with constantly varying conditions, as now, of latitude and altitude, we may cease to wonder at the infinite variety of those forms that this "creative," this generative period bequeathed to the present age of a higher mental evolution.

Are there any evidences, any indices, any signs, so to speak, of this planetary power, these beginnings of life-forms and the processes back of their coming? Let us see.

In the first place we must revise the premises from which to think. Proud as modern science may be of its freedom to investigate and its worship of a fact, it has not yet got rid of the "made" concept that ruled theology before it was born. It was only within the closing years of the nineteenth century that it began to reach out from this basic beginning—that matter was primal and fixed. This idea was anchored on the "atom"—the ultimate of materiality. Planets were only aggregations of atoms, rendered visible by quantity. This is science yet as to the mass of its disciples.

Of necessity all deductions from this ultimate were but guesses—hypothetical only. On it was founded the "law" of gravity. This was logical because you cannot think attraction without the condition of bodies to be attracted. Newton's theory has no repulsion, no polarity—that belongs to chemical and electric theories. And it is one of the curious things that science accepts both with all their opposites to a working hypothesis. But it only thinks one at a time. You can't safely put new wine into old bottles, nor can you fit new discoveries to old theories. So it is that you cannot discuss spontaneous generation and hold to the "made" cosmogony of Genesis.

As now advised we must start out with the premise that all life is chemical. In this concept there are no ultimate atoms.

Scientists—some of them—are breaking away from the atom as they did from their once "void space," by predicating an ether, and dividing it into electrons or ions. It don't matter that this destroys the etymology of the atom, but even this doesn't get away from the basic idea of an ultimate, as it still holds the thinking in the old channel. So we come to this alternative, either to abandon the concept of an ultimate of matter, or deny the claims of chemistry and electricity—and polarity as the working method. And why not change?

Up to near the close of the sixteenth century—1543—the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, that made the earth the center of the universe, was universally accepted by the learned world. This idea governed all thought—religious and philosophic. Of it were born gods, god, creation and matter as the primal element in all things. Copernicus changed that as to form, but the world went along, not making the new truth practically potential.

Somewhat is this like the church and the Bible. After spending half a generation and enlisting the ripened scholarship of the nineteenth century, the revision was completed and approved. Yet to-day the old versions with all their errors and mistakes are still in use, as if the revision had never been made. Inertia is a universal attribute of the mental mass.

But in the presence of the discoveries of the nineteenth and the opening fears of the twentieth centuries, the thinker must abandon the old atomic or material concepts and read the fast accumulating facts from differing premises. And one of these is, that all life being chemical in its manifestations in form, we must not only revise our position as to spontaneous generation but to accept it as in harmony with the chemical theory—being the only method by which form-life is "created."

And now as to the question: Is there anything at present existing or known that looks like the manifestation of life without seed, or fertilization, as it is called by the material evolutionists? Of course the conditions that dominated on the planet when organic life was born do not obtain now, but there are things in nature that afford a sign, so to speak, or an example of life without seed, and that answers the question, or solves the problem as to its possibility. And once admit the fact that spontaneous generation is possible, the conclusion logically follows that it disposes of the miraculous creation of the old cosmogony. But to return:

For one example, take a pond of still water in the hot summer months, when the nights are warm and the temperature is high for days at a time, and you will find it covered by a green scum, like cream on a pan of milk. Next, put some of that green scum under a strong glass and you see a forest of vegetable forms. Throw a stone into it or let a wind break it up, and it floats to the margin, and in course of time springs up into visible life—a new crop of vegetation. Still there was no seed, no fertilizing agent—nothing but the spontaneous advent of life in a new beginning. As generation is thus produced now, without seed, in the present earth conditions, the question is answered for the possibilities claimed for the advent of life without the "creative" method held by theology in terms and by science inferentially.

Ocean life, also, might be invoked in the case of the jelly-fish, that reproduces, or rather produces its vast numbers without agencies other than chemical. But the opposing theorists have so tortured plain facts by theories of self-fertilization, bi-sexual organisms, etc., —that are the despair of clear-thinking—that too much space would be taken to discuss it in detail. But the new discoveries in the domain of chemistry make it so plain that there need be no hesitation in setting it beside the green scum as an example of animal life by chemical agencies alone—or spontaneous generation.

And so, to the Spiritualist student the claimed discoveries of Loeb and Littlefield are not a surprise but very gratifying.

And if sufficient now to produce life, all that was requisite for life's advent was its presence potential enough to so introduce or produce all life. And it must be remembered that this theory includes the holding in ether of all substance, or matter, in solution, and that this solution is in space after the manner of the clouds in our atmosphere, of differing densities and areas vast in extent. Oxygen, nitrogen, hydrogen, carbon, and those things science calls gases, are primal elements of space, floating in boundless realms and through which the planet travels in its evolutionary journey of growth and ripening.

Why do we manure our fields? To get from nature the chemical conditions for plant life. Space filled with these fertilizing agencies by which plants are fed, moving for thousands of years through these denser regions with temperatures stimulative of chemical activity, is, by lights of known conditions now, the only thinkable method by which organic life became possible. It is, too, so reasonable and so plausible that even the atom disciple can think out results without entirely abandoning his idea. Like all truths, it can modify even crude conceptions as to its action.

There is another fact in nature that neither science, theology, philosophy or evolution has ever touched, and which is full of suggestion on this theory. And that is the periods of gestation in animal life: Man nine months; elephant two years; lion five months; hog sixteen weeks; dog nine weeks; goose thirty days; hen twenty-one days—and so on. And here is one of the hardest nuts for the germ-evolutionist to crack: There is not on record in all historic, tradition or fossil time, that any form of life ever changed its period of gestation. And there is no evidence of a new species "created" out of another—for hybrids are infertile—the chemical conditions for the production of the ancestor is lacking in the abnormal descendant.

It is not straining if we speculate legitimately within these ascertained or fixed conditions. In all periods of the planet's unfoldment it has been subject to the variable phenomena induced by its astronomic relations—its zones, latitudes, elevations, and depressions, oceans, deserts, and its ecliptic environments. The period of the advent of organic life was simply that the earth was in a dense region of space, the commingling of atmosphere and substance more intimate, and quickened by the more blended inherent energies of the planet and its environing forces.

For example, the place or places of man's first appearance must have been where there was a favorable condition of ninety-eight degrees for nine months. And so of other forms of life—just as now is the even temperature of the womb, or the incubated egg necessary for the quickening and evolution of life as we know it.

There is nothing in all this that does violence to a single logical deduction, but it does furnish reason with a chain of possibilities entirely in harmony with existing facts and that runs counter to no discovery of science, nor to any requirement of evolution. Indeed it is much more rational than the theory of differentiation from a single germ, that marries man to the animal despite the facts of to-day, and of the teaching of the fossil world from the earth's foundations. And if so, what then?

If, then, it is demonstrated that life—living things—can be produced or is originated without seed, then that must be accepted as the one way and miracle discarded. For there cannot be two ways for the one "creation." Or, in other words, that the old cosmogony based on an anthropomorphic creator must be set aside forever. It does not follow that the knowledge that dismisses the one and demonstrates the existence of the other, should furnish a theory or "law" embracing the ultimate infallible truth. That prerogative is not given to man or spirit. But the fact once established as a concept the method becomes a problem for the human mind to investigate and solve according to its capability. This the process, the incentive, the inspiration of growth—or, if you prefer it, evolution. It is too the manner of science itself and of philosophy as well.

Nor is it necessary to inject into it the anthropomorphic or any other God theory or idea. No hypothesis affects the fact—nor does it matter practically in any way at all. Because whichever or whatever may be accepted, investigation has settled the fact that what may be behind phenomena, if nature, if any thing is, the process of growth, development and unfoldment is one. If a God is postulated it doesn't unfix the law of phenomena or change planetary conditions—he must work without miracle.

If God is set aside and Nature assumed, the same facts are there and unchangeable. Be it God, be it Nature, be it "law," or be it anything else, everything is so fixed, so uniform and absolute that you can tell for a century ahead, or for any future century when there will be an eclipse of the Sun or a transit of Venus, and at what places and at what second of time it can be observed. So what is the use of quarreling over the echo, what or why behind these facts, when the best we can do is to guess—but never can know. You can not carry your soul in your pocket, nor define God by tables of quantity or force. In other words you can't lose your soul, nor can you find out God. Then let us investigate what the mind can conceive—for imagination is not infinite—it never transcends form.

And to close this already too long dissertation, when we arrive at the fact of spontaneous generation, we are at the beginnings of an entirely new cosmogony to science, at the turning point of our premises of thinking and philosophy. And it is not necessary here to enter upon speculation. The problem is about this:

As all form-life is the result of chemical action, the planet is the parent.

As all life exists within certain degrees of temperature, its advent originally must have been when planetary conditions were thus favorable.

As the planet is untold millions of years old, passing from an incandescent to its present state, it must have been at all intermediate conditions. And as its fossil records tell us those periods were thousands of years in passing, the incubating period was long enough to evolve all we know and see of form-life.

As every form of life has its fixed period of gestation, and as law is universal, a planet must have its time to incubate and bring forth its living children in form.

And lastly, as to speculation: At the end of the miracle cycle of thought as to the "beginning," it may be allowed to see the lesson as to the end. It is this:

As the earth's temperature only admitted of form-life when it had cooled to present conditions, so if in the lapse of ages it falls below this normal, form-life as now must cease. As in the case of primeval form-life when present conditions supervened, propagation will fail and life become extinct. And so the "end," as peaceful as sleep.

A rule in homiletics imposes a peroration at the close of a deliverance—but this is not one. Only to ask what is the lesson of all this as a basis ideal? That though slowly, yet with the inevitableness of truth, the human mind is coming to the realization that the functioning power behind creation is Motion.

This concept is and will be wildly traversed by terminology, suited to the mentality of the user—vibration, telepathy, the subconscious, the occult, etc. But after all it is motion—the Unseen. So to us, to science, and to the knowing of philosophy, "God" is Motion.

Motion is the quickener that infuses substance—"germs"—with life. Motion is the producer of heat, of light, and of all phenomena. Electricity is but intensity of motion. Motion forms worlds, controls planets, and in its cosmic manifestation is life. It is the unseen and potent. Motion creates conditions, and conditions are what we call law.

Science is beginning to awake to this truth, and at the threshold is met with the mystery of form-life. Chemistry is its mode of manifestation through form. And man is its interpreter—completing the circle of use.

SPIRIT CONTROL PROLIFIC IN RESULTS.

Great Achievements Traced to the Spirit Realms as Their Origin.

I, an ordinary Spiritualist, happy and contented in the belief that those upon the spirit side of life were better situated and far wiser than their brethren of earth, was much astonished and not a little dismayed to be informed in reading Charles Dawbarn's article entitled "After Death, What?" that spirits "have never yet startled the world with any new grand invention or discovery." This is, indeed, a lamentable fact, calculated to strike terror to the heart of the timid believer who has a more or less decided faith in the potency and value of inspiration from a spiritual source. And then, as if to make his declaration more emphatic, Mr. Dawborn informs us that "Radium and the X-rays were not announced by spirits, and we look to mortal genius for whatever may be our next advance in knowledge and its power for good or ill upon earth life."

This ought to make us lose faith in Spiritualism entirely, and cause us to reiterate that unanswerable question so often hurled at us by the hardened skeptic, "What good is Spiritualism, anyway?" But somehow or other it fails to have the desired effect. It is merely the old, old objection presented in a different form and to meet it in its new garb is not at all difficult.

If Mr. Dawbarn will step into his library, take down a volume bearing the title "The Arcana of Spiritualism," brush off the accumulated dust, and open the book at page 223, 224, 229 or 230, he will gain some enlightenment upon this subject that may cause him to doubt whether mortal genius is responsible for every invention, discovery or gain in knowledge. I quote a few extracts from the above mentioned source:

"Often it is said in sorrow or with a sneer, that if the utterances of the trance speaker are those of Webster or Parker, they have lost their wits. * * * Think of this subject for a moment! Would the spirit Webster follow the wanderings of a frail woman for the purpose of speaking to an audience affected only with wonder at his name?"

"Is it not correct in reason to suppose that the statesmen of the past will gather at the Capitol, and impart their ideas to those who can at once place them before the country? But it is said in reply, the senators and representatives are not mediums. True, not the passive tools mediums are generally supposed to be, but who shall say that the far-reaching statesmanship, which at times cuts through the fog and darkness, is not impression from a superior source?"

"The passive medium may write or speak in verse, claiming some great poet as the source, to the disgust of those who read or listen, and Spiritualism is scorned for the barrenness of thought and rudeness of expression. Not so fast. The spirit poet would seek the poet, and with responsive soul enlarge and beautify his thoughts. * * *"

"If an inventor departed to the spirit world, and having some invention with which to benefit, wished to impart it, he could not do so through an ignorant boor, unless he could induce absolute automatic trance, which would be scarcely possible. He would find inventors with minds turned in the same direction as his own, with whom he could become en rapport, and by stimulating their minds impart his ideas. They would not be conscious of any superior power, and would refer the result to their unaided mentality * * *."

"The great souls standing along the stream of time like beacon flames, lighting the wastes of darkness, were of this class. Thought, intense study, self-absorption, unconsciously to themselves prepared their minds for the inflowing of the tide of spiritual intelligence, and also for its understanding and radiation.

But I have already quoted enough to show the meaning I wish to convey, or in other words, to prove that because man departs this visible world he does not necessarily cease to be a factor in its growth and development. Step by step humanity is advancing, and who shall say that our rapid progress is not due in part to the helping hands reached down to us from a higher and better shore to guide our foot-steps into the proper path, to assume the leadership where we individually are inefficient for the task before us? Who shall determine the place where mortal foresight gives place to immortal prescience? Or where mortal genius ends, and inspiration begins? It seems that genius is only inherent capability developed and utilized by spirit power. But however this may be there can be no doubt but what we owe much of our high development in the arts and sciences and kindred necessities of civilization to the unseen and often unrecognized influence exerted upon us from the spirit side of life.

HOPE ON, HOPE EVER.

Hope on, hope ever; though to-day be dark,
The sweet sunburst may smile on thee to-morrow;
Tho' thou art lonely, there's an eye will mark
Thy loneliness and guerdon all thy sorrow!
Tho' thou must toil 'mong cold and sordid men,
With none to echo back thy thought, or love thee,
Cheer up, poor heart! thou dost not beat in vain,
For God is over all, and heaven above thee—
Hope on, hope ever.

The iron may enter in and pierce thy soul,
But cannot kill the love within thee burning,
The tears of misery, thy bitter dole,
Can never quench thy true heart's seraph yearning
For better things; nor crush thy ardor's trust,
That Error from the mind shall be uprooted,
That Truths shall dawn as flowers spring from the dust,
And Love be cherished where Hate was embruted!
Hope on, hope ever.

Hope on, hope ever! after darkest night
Comes, full of loving life, the laughing morning;
Hope on, hope ever! Spring-tide, flushed with light,
Aye, crowns old Winter with her rich adorning.
Hope on, hope ever! yet the time shall come,
When man to man shall be a friend and brother;
And this old world shall be a happy home,
And all Earth's family love one another!

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. TR, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

OUR ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS.

They are our own publications.

They are neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

No other publishing house in the United States excels them in the mechanical work—binding, printing and paper.

The three volumes of the "Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," contain more valuable data on Death and Spirit Life than can be dug up in all the libraries of the world.

Then comes the valuable work by Hudson Tuttle, "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science."

Then the excellent work by Dr. J. M. Peebles, "The Seers of the Ages."

Then comes the "Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson. It will fill an important niche in your library.

Then follows "Ghost Land," "Art Magic," "The Next World Interviewed" and "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands," and the "Occult Life of Jesus."

All these ELEVEN PREMIUM BOOKS are furnished to our subscribers for $3.35 (postage prepaid)—a price never before known in ancient or modern times. Read over our premium list and then send for them. They will delight you. They will constitute a perennial fountain of knowledge for you and your family. After paying postage about all we realize for these eleven books is $2.22—an achievement only accomplished by The Progressive Thinker—a miracle in modern business enterprise!

"Poems of Progress." By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"Death, Its Meaning and Results." By J. K. Wilson, of the Pennsylvania Bar. An absorbingly interesting volume, of decided value. A narrative of wonderful psychic events in the author's experience. Cloth, 560 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

"Right Generation the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." By Dr. M. E. Conger. An appeal to reason and man's highest aspirations. A plea for justice and equality in all the relations of life between men and women. Cloth, 75 cents; leatherette, 50 cents.

"The Attainment of Womaly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of especial interest and value. Price $1.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull. Price 10 cents.

"The Spiritual Significance, or, Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price $1.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. Price 25 cents

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

"Mediumship and Its Development, and How to Mesmerize to Assist Development." By W. H. Bach. Especially useful to learners who seek to know and utilize the laws of mediumship and development, and avoid errors. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

N. A. St. Clair writes from Toronto, Canada: "The Toronto Spiritualist Association is continuing its meetings through the summer. An excellent series of lectures are being delivered by M. F. C. Willson, a local lecturer. Mrs. J. A. Murtha is serving as test medium during July, and is meeting with her usual good success. She leaves here to fill engagements in western states. We would be pleased to hear from mediums desiring engagements for fall of 1904 and year 1905. Address me at No. 3 Classic avenue, Toronto, Canada."

Robert Binder, President, writes: "The First German Spiritualist Society of the West Side, 590 So. Ashland Avenue, will give their seventeenth grand picnic in Reissig's Grove, Riverside, on Sunday, July 31. Take Garfield Park L to 52nd avenue, or 12th street car to 48th street, and then LaGrange car to the grove. English and German speeches. Messages given through the mediums. Indian fire in the evening. Good floor; good music. Admission 25 cents. All are invited."

Dreams are often prophetic. Here is one coming from Des Moines, Iowa, and published in the New York Herald: "Through the agency of a friend's dream Mrs. Thomas Horner, of this city, recovered a lost pocketbook containing $26 in currency. The purse was found beneath the roots of a tree several miles from the city, where a party of women, members of the X Y Z Club of the First Baptist Church of Des Moines, had held a picnic July 4. When Mrs. Horner discovered the loss of her pocketbook the twenty-five women present organized into a searching party and looked over the grounds, but they were unsuccessful in their efforts. At the following meeting of the club the conversation turned to the lost purse. Suddenly Mrs. G. Hotsford, a prominent member arose. 'Do you know,' she exclaimed, 'I dreamed of that pocket-book. I thought we were again at the picnic ground searching for the lost purse. We had worked until I was weary and sank down upon the bank of a stream to rest, when, to my great surprise, I saw, beneath the roots of a large tree which extended out over the stream, a pocketbook. In my delight I called aloud to the members, but just then I was awakened by my husband.' 'I remember such a tree,' said Mrs. Horner, 'I suggest we go to the picnic ground and look at the spot.' The two women, followed by their friends, started for the picnic ground. To the surprise of all, there the purse was found, with the money undisturbed. 'The dream was nothing more than an ordinary dream, so far as I can tell,' said Mrs. Hotsford in referring to the matter. 'What caused the dream I cannot imagine. If it were some people, they might lay it to inspiration or Spiritualism; but as I have never had any previous experience of the kind, I can hardly believe that it was more than a happy coincidence, with a delightful culmination.' Mrs. Horner is pleased at recovering her property, but is, however, puzzled as to why the dream did not come to her direct."

Martin Wedin, whose wife and nine children are reported to have been lost in the Norge disaster, believes he had a premonition of the loss of his loved ones. He says that on the night of the accident he felt that all was not well with his family and was not surprised when he read that they were victims of the accident.—Duluth News-Tribune.

M. Adele Thieman writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "Your paper comes to hand regularly. I am enjoying it very much. As to the premium books I received, I do not know what I would do without them. Not only do I deem them a valuable addition to any library, but I also think that no library is complete without them. I am at work at the translation into German of the Occult Life of Jesus."

Mrs. C. R. Sanders writes: "I lost my daughter. She has come to me a great many times. In 1903 my husband passed away. I have seen him in the daytime and in the evening. He always speaks."

We congratulate Mr. C. F. Short on having easy access to the columns of that great New York daily, The Globe. No doubt this opportunity will be used wisely and well. We quote one of his recent letters to the said paper: "The recent effort of Mr. Donald McPherson to instruct the reader as to what Spiritualism is seems so far fetched that a reply is necessary. He says that man's mind dies with his body, and nothing is left to return, and just here we are treated to a lot of texts. Pity it is that he had not wisdom or honor enough to state that all such quotations refer to the physical body and not to the spirit part which survives the decay of the body—lives, moves, speaks, writes, and under proper conditions shows a materialized body, as I have seen hundreds of times, as well as thousands of other people. Many scriptures teach us that man lives after the mortal body has dissolved. If you can't find them we can do so for you."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

ATTENTION LYCEUMS. — During June, July and August the Progressive Lyceum will be sent to Lyceums for one cent per copy. This will enable you to increase your subscription one-half its present number, with no extra expense. Address J. W. Ring, care of the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Mary Skogland writes: "The Spiritual Progressive Thought Society of Wellington, Ohio, wish to make this request through the columns of your excellent paper, feeling that it will reach the ears and heart of some one who wishes to aid the cause. It is that they send any books that may be used as a circulating library in our little village. We will pay postage on such books. I would add that we shall soon have the eleven premium books offered by you, as I am to send my subscription and the money for the books soon. We also have a few other books, but feel that it will do no harm to have more than one copy of many of them. We would also ask any speaker who may be passing near us in going to and from the camps to come to us, if possible, for a Sunday evening or a week-day evening. We can only promise the collection and will pay the hall rent. We have a small society and all of the working class, but are doing our best against much opposition to spread this great truth. We had Mrs. Anna Baird, of Elyria, with us last Sunday. Her address was partly in reply to the sermon (by the way, Mr. Editor, what is a sermon?) on the 'Delusions of Spiritualism.' This sermon has really advanced our cause here and strengthened those who were weak in our faith. Opposition often serves to put one on his mettle and leads him to put forth his best efforts."

Mrs. John Brown writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "Notwithstanding the various meetings and the season of the year that many people are away on vacations, and after several months of silence from the public platform Miss Mae Hunt held her initiatory meeting, assisted by Mrs. D. N. Place giving messages and an able choir in Covenant Hall, I. O. O. F. building, San Francisco, which was filled with an appreciative and intelligent audience who listened with rapt attention to the whole programme, which consisted of singing by the choir and the audience and a poem by Longfellow, read by Miss Hunt preceding the lecture, which was a flow of soul-inspiring logic and oratory by the Spirit John Pierpont, on the subject, 'The Benefit of Spiritualism,' which he handled in as masterly manner as though in his own form, and spoke of its different aspects both from the physical and spiritual standpoints, covering the ground from the atoms to the great universe seen and unseen to the eye. It is the intention of the unseen promoters of these meetings to make them a developing as well as instructive, to bring out the best in everyone who attends them. From time to time the various great souls in spirit realms, too numerous to mention will speak in their turn giving variation in logic and scope, who will have mention in their place through the press, giving the public ideas of the progress which will grow in interest, for there is a treat in store and a harvest of rich things to be given to the public ere long. And we hope to give these lectures in part or whole that they may benefit the many. There is much could be said but for the present this will suffice that the public may appreciate them the more when they come as a clap of thunder from a clear sky."

Joseph M. Bare writes: "Wireless telegraphy will end in airships. The experiments of Dumont, Spencer, are not in the right direction, and do nothing toward solving the problem of aerial navigation. Heretofore Mahomet's coffin has been the only successful airship. I quote the following from a recent issue of Cromwell (Ind.) News: 'The subject of aerial navigation is one of never-failing interest, particularly at this time when many engineers agree that the problem is one whose solution may be expected in the near future. Almost all engineers, however, further agree that the solution will never come along the lines of the dirigible balloon, and that the many interesting experiments with so-called airships which rely upon the gasbag to overcome the attraction of gravitation while drawing popular interest to the subject of air navigation do nothing toward advancing the time when real airships will become a possibility.' I quote only the headlines of an article which appeared recently in the Weekly Chicago Inter Ocean, which shows that this inventor has taken a step in the right direction; when he takes another such step he will be above the earth. 'To revolutionize railway travel. Great claims made for invention which has just been patented by Dr. Albert C. Albertson. 300 miles an hour without wheels. Attraction of gravity to be overcome by magnets, thus rendering the heaviest train as light as air—actual test made.'"

Mrs. Emily L. Judd writes from Townville, Pa.: "The Religious Society of Progressive Spiritualists here was chartered by the state of Pennsylvania nearly forty years ago, and since that time has had its ups and downs as all societies are liable to, but as a rule we have had the best of speakers when we have had any, and are never satisfied with any but first-class, and our last efforts to procure speakers have been as successful as any in the past, for Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing served us the two last Sundays of May, giving us two splendid discourses each day, and after the last discourse gave a dozen or fifteen psychometric readings, which were considered by some the best tests they had ever had, and her whole work while with us gave the best of satisfaction. The first two Sundays of July Oscar A. Edgerly was with us, and authough he was in very poor health it appeared to make no difference with his guides, as they seemed to be able to put him in harmony with the higher spheres long enough to deliver his lectures with credit to himself and them, and we hope they will be able to impart to him a healing influence as well, for the world is in need of just such workers and we shall hope to have him with us again."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "Mrs. J. Staner Adams will lecture for the Hyde Park Occult Society on Sunday evening, July 31, at their hall, 319 East 55th street. She is a grand, good worker in the Spiritualist field; come and hear her. Our picnics are very pleasant gatherings, and a day spent in the beautiful woods at Beverly Hills is one long to be remembered. We hold regular Sunday evening services; good speakers and mediums are always present. Mrs. Kline gives messages as usual."

Saturday and Sunday, July 30 and 31, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley will lecture at Genoa, Ill. From the 7th to the 15th of August she will be at the Wonewoc (Wis.) camp. Then she goes to Clinton, Iowa, where she will remain till the close of the camp. Then she goes to Buffalo, N. Y., and St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. G. C. Love writes from his present home, Union avenue and Ainsworth, Portland, Ore.: "After one year's residence in southern Oregon, I am once more located in Portland, the garden spot of Oregon, and the home of my boyhood. Since my return to this city I find many strange faces in the spiritual meetings, and there seems to be an earnest endeavor to in all ways advance the cause of Spiritualism by harmonious work and effort. The First Spiritual Society is having good attendance, the result of putting good lecturers and mediums on the rostrum. Officers and members seem to be entirely free from bickerings, each one striving to do all they can to obtain the best results for the meetings and the cause. Mrs. Mallory, whom all speak of in highest praise and esteem, still opens her parlors on Monday nights, Tuesday and Friday afternoons for public meetings, which give many people their first lessons in Spiritualism and a thirst for more. There can be no one more earnest in the cause than Mrs. Mallory, and her kind ways and higher inspirations are gifts that win for her the respect and good will of all who know her and attend her meetings. Her parlors are well filled by seekers after truth on all occasions, and the close of each meeting is the scene of lingering good-bye from those who enjoyed themselves so well they are loth to leave the soothing magnetic current that pervades the atmosphere of Mrs. Mallory's home. Many subjects pertaining to Spiritualism have been discussed in her parlors, and at times the audience under the inspiration of the speakers, seem to leave the earth and earthly conditions for the time being to soar on wings amid the beauties of a world better than this, where loved ones clasp glad hands with us, giving assurance they still live, and live to love and bless those yet incumbered with our material body and its conditions. Heaven grant that Mrs. Mallory may long be spared to the people of earth for the good she is doing, and in being spared to us, may she continually share the choicest blessings the angel world can bestow. The camp-meeting at New Era, is now in session, and I am told they are having a very good meeting. I expect to visit the camp some time during the meeting, but as yet am uncertain as to date."

Cadet Hall Messenger of Lynn, Mass., speaks as follows of Miss Elizabeth Harlow: "Miss Harlow, who is a prime favorite with New England audiences, is an inspirational speaker of the highest order, progressive and liberal upon all subjects. She is unable to fill the demands upon her time by societies both East and West."

L. S. Lonse writes from Clyde, Ohio: "E. W. Sprague and wife of Jamestown, N. Y., came to Clyde and organized a society of Spiritualists. We have over thirty charter members. We have adopted the First Spiritual Research Society as a name. Mrs. A. B. French was elected president; Mrs. L. S. Lonse, vice-president; Miss Kittie Grover, secretary; A. Jacob, treasurer. We now believe in a resurrection, and hope in the near future to convince people at least in this vicinity that there is no death for Spiritualism."

Canon Cheyne, the distinguished author of the "Encyclopedia Biblica," addressed the Churchmen's union at Westminster, London Eng., on "the discovery of new facts and justification of a more searching Biblical criticism. Contending for a free and untrameled criticism in the cause of progress, Canon Cheyne held that the national church was not merely a hospital for the morally sick, but a union of men devoted to the highest ideals and to historic truth. He said it could be shown easily that some of the narratives in the Old Testament were colored by the Orental mythology. The earlier chapters of Genesis containing the cosmogony and the deluge and such stories as Jonah in the big fish were semi-mythical and Oriental in origin, showing the influence of Babylonia. Certain elements in the Bible were borrowed from a culture older and richer than the Jewish. "I have no intenton of giving any shock," said Canon Cheyne, in touching upon the virgin birth of the Redeemer. But he claimed that the new facts brought to light showed that the Jewish narrator had derived it from a non-Jewish source, and that was the mythology of Babylonia and Egypt. The use of the word "virgin" arose out of a misunderstanding of the meaning of the original word, which referred to the divine generation of certain favored persons. 'As a historian, he could not refuse to recognize the possibility of this origin of the story. After showing how many names of people and places in the Old Testament were wrong, he said there were two great works remaining to be done. One was to find what meanings the last editors of the Old Testament put upon the books when they had suffered much corruption. The other was to complete an improved textual criticism.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Everybody is invited to our annual picnic at Calumet Grove, Saturday, August 6th, 2 to 8 p. m. Take any South Side car to end of line; take car to Blue Island, then transfer to Calumet Grove. The grounds have been kindly donated and there will be no charge except car fare. There will be entertainment for all, races, games, etc. This is a lovely grove on the banks of the Calumet river; fine boating, fishing, swimming, etc. Our Sunday meetings are full of interest to all. Walter DeVoe will be with us every Sunday evening and the best mediums will demonstrate psychic phenomena."

C. H. Toler writes from Marietta, Ohio: "On her coming to Marietta, Mrs. E. J. Demorest, of Pittsburg, Pa., has, during the past five or six weeks, been giving lectures on Spiritualism, with readings, messages and tests, in the homes of many of the estimable families of the city. Courageously has she been doing a noble work. A few who never had been to a seance slipped in to see if there were any 'goblins' around. They went again and again, till they became enthusiastic, going out amongst their neighbors and friends telling them what manner of things they had heard and received. Now their regret is that the medium has to leave the city next work for other fields. A few days ago I wrote an article touching upon the short discourses and other occurrences at the seances and took it to the Daily Journal, which is the same size of The Progressive Thinker, and having a large circulation. There has been no article admitted to any daily here in favor of Spiritualism since I know not when, if ever. Not knowing what fate awaited my manuscript, I handed it to the editor, telling him in a few words what I wanted. Glancing over parts of each page a few minutes, he very cordially said, 'Yes, sir; I will publish it with pleasure.' The same evening it appeared on the editorial page filling almost a column, so conspicuous, that all would be sure to see and read it. I mention this in regard to Spiritualism as showing the way the wind is beginning to blow to what it did formerly. Mrs. Demorest will take with her the good wishes of her old and many new friends."

SPIRIT LIFE NOW.

A Message From Spirit Frances E. Willard.

To the Members of the Frances E. Willard Health and Developing Circle: Greeting—Dear Brothers and Sisters:—It is with a great degree of pleasure that I embrace this opportunity for communicating with you, I wish to assure you, one and all, that I am with you in universal love and for the purpose of receiving and giving aid wherever needed and when possible. Now you can all better the condition for our communication by being faithful to the Thursday evening appointment; no matter where you are or what you are doing, at 7 p. m., on that day, let your thoughts be with me for at least a few moments. The full hour would be better, but I understand why many of you cannot concentrate with me all that time, but I will assure you that my thoughts are very much concentrated all the time upon the circle work, and I am ever seeking avenues for its perpetuation, and ways and means for making it a source of good for the spiritual unfoldment of its members. I am greatly assisted in this work by Lily Bell Scott, who brings members of your own families into thought communion with you, and whenever possible produces more material manifestations in your home circles. Fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters and little children wish to communicate with each other, and the power of thought communion is unlimited between incarnate and decarnate spirits, although many planes, even spheres, may intervene. Thought travels like the lightning, with great force and rapidity, and may harm, injure, or bless the ones to whom it is directed. I wish to thank you all for the kind thoughts you have sent me and the medium for the circle. We are assured that much good is being done, and hope with your kind help to do much more. The circle is open to all who wish to enter into its protective care; none are rejected and we will come into any home whose inmates will open the door and bid us welcome, for ours is a circle that teaches the fatherhood and motherhood of the universal God; that love can and does overcome all evil; that we are all brothers and sisters in spirit, and that all will eventually be on the same plane of goodness and equality; that by assisting others to ascend we assist ourselves to obey the law which is, "Give and ye shall receive."

DREAMS ANALYZED.

What Are They and What Is Their Cause?

The word dream was first spelled "dreme," by old English authors. Later it was spelled "dreem," "drem," and finally "dream." The Icelander speaks of it as "draumr"; the Swede, "drom"; the Dane, "drom."

Tracing the derivation of the word farther, we are impressed by the close relationship it bears to the Icelandic word "draugh," meaning a spirit; in fact, the Icelander rarely uses the word "draumr" in any sense other than in connection with the word "draugh"—that is, he believes a "draumr" is the direct result of a visit from a "draugh." In the "Land of the Great White Silence he has evidently solved a problem that has puzzled the so-called "wise heads" of the temperate zone; for in direct opposition to the humble Icelander's ideas of the origin of a dream is the opinion of a Mr. W. K. Clifford, who says that: "A dream is a succession of phenomena having no external reality to correspond to them."

One of our books of reference states that a dream is: "A succession of images, or fantastic ideas, presented to the mind during sleep * * * That which is presented to the mind by the imaginative faculty, though not in sleep; a vision of the fancy, especially a wild or vain fancy." Another attributes a dream to: "An involuntary train of seemingly real fancies passing through the mind in sleep, sometimes ascribed to divine agency."

Webster, the lexicographer, defined a dream as "a sleeping vision." We were heretofore unaware that visions were in the habit of sleeping, but good Noah would have us believe that such is the case!

Mr. L. Colange, LL. D., once stated that a dream is "a series of mental impressions occurring to sleeping persons, and which, therefore, are not under the command of reason." Of the cause of dreams he said: "Dreams have been referred to various causes; among others, to direct impressions on the organs of sense during sleep." From this definition we would naturally infer that the impression must come from without, since most of the other faculties of the body are at least partially dormant or undergoing recuperative processes—assuming, of course, that the brain and nervous system are the "organs of sense."

Impressions, as the psychologist well knows, are more or less accurate according to the state of the "organs of sense"—the rippled surface of a lake does not reflect the trees upon its banks accurately, but distorts their mirrored lines according to the degree of disturbance existing upon the water's plane.

If, for the sake of illustration, we allow the disturbed surface of the lake to represent the worried, non-passive mind, and the reflection of the trees the distorted impression commonly called a dream, we will readily come to the conviction that

"The baseless fabric of a dream
Is not so baseless as 'twould seem,"

but is directly traceable to its source—a disturbed receptive condition of the brain.

A prominent writer has said: "In health there is less tendency to dream than in disease; in the earlier than in the later periods of life; and the very act of dreaming shows that the brain is not enjoying a complete state of rest."

Suppose we apply this explanation to the dream upon which the Christian religion is founded—that of Joseph, the foster father of the child Jesus; for Joseph sought by means of this convenient "dream" to escape the wrath of his relatives and people."

Naturally, his brain could not have been enjoying a complete state of rest" under the circumstances, for he had probably been engaged in some intense thinking during the days preceding the dream. Excuses are very difficult to call to mind sometimes—particularly when we are not so sure they will be accepted as the unalloyed truth, even after we have dressed them in the purple and fine linen of plausibility—and Joseph, the husband of "the mother of God," evidently experienced this difficulty.

The child Jesus and the Christian religion were born as the logical results of indiscretion and brain disturbance. The former triumphed over the tainting circumstances of his birth and did a great amount of good to some classes of people and quite a large amount of harm to others, but the latter never ceased to be true to its cause—it has been a disturbance ever since, a source of wars and oppression, dissension and strife.

Dreams have ever been the companions of ambition and unhappiness. The unworried mind receives impressions both by night and day as accurately and clearly as the calm, unruffled mountain lake reflects the pines at eventide.

Investigators in the realms of materialistic science have stated that, though there is a suspension of volition, the powers of sensation continue through sleep, and they account in that way for the phenomena of dreams. Others who have sought still farther for a logical explanation have found by experiment that the brain can be made the servant of the soul by self-suggestion; that is, if the firm resolve, "I will not dream to-night, but I will sleep calmly and dreamlessly until morning," be repeated until the thought is impressed with sufficient distinctness upon the brain, the brain will obey that expressed thought, and the result will be sleep undisturbed by dreams.

Soul's Wireless Telegraphy.

Mrs. Allyn, in her address at the Parkland Sunday camp-meeting, Philadelphia, Pa., declared that Spiritualism was the wireless telegraphy of souls, and was not confined by any means to communication with the dead. She said it was the same principle which leads a well-fed cat or dog to return to its old home.

"Rich men are financiers," said Mrs. Allyn, "poor men are simply thieves. A rich man has dipsomania, and the doctor is called in to treat him; the poor man is drunk.

"We are beginning to think and to cease folding our hands and saying, 'Thy will, not mine, be done, O God.' If you ask any minister, who is about to go on a steamboat excursion, if he had rather trust to his faith in the Lord, or to a boat that is sound and has a good fire crew, I venture to say every one of them will take the sound boat.

"Formerly we were taught that the Bible was the only sacred book. Now we are beginning to learn that everything is sacred, equally from the lowest dumb animal to the highest archangel.

"We used to think that woman had no soul worth thinking about, and we have carefully peopled heaven with men. We have a man for a God, and God for a man, and every one of the angels must be strictly masculine, but we are learning better. We are reading from the Bible to the newspapers, and are learning the true relations of things and people.

"We are rapidly approaching the time when we won't need one day as sacred; all days will be sacred. Death is merely a promotion.

"The relation of Spiritualism to the Christian religion is that of a child to its mother. Christianity taught us that there is something beyond and possibilities of the soul not thought of before.

Christianity uses the spinning wheel, but we use the machinery of the modern factory; Christianity travels by the canal; we use the airship. But while we may laugh at the old spinning wheel we do not laugh at the dear old grandmother.

"We don't believe everything that is in the Bible, and we know there are many things objectionable in it, but we accept the good and expurgate the evil, and we look forward confidently to the time when Spiritualist, Christian, Jew and Pagan can all harmonize, like the voices of a quartette."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Emma Teed Langdell.—It is with profound regret that I have to announce the death, on July 1, in Los Angeles, Cal., of this estimable lady. She was not only an ardent Spiritualist but a splendid clairvoyant and trance medium. As Mrs. Emma Teed her name often appeared in The Progressive Thinker as an indefatigable worker and test medium. She carried out her profession in Denver from 1896 to 1899, when she married Mr. Perly Langdell, whose parents were old-time Spiritualists. Mrs. Langdell died suddenly through heart failure.

GEO W. WALROND.

Stanton J. Hussey, 67 years old, departed the material life at Chesterfield, Ind., July 13. He leaves a wife and five children and two sisters to mourn his loss. He was a Spiritualist for many years. Funeral services were held at his daughter's home, Mrs. Carrie Mong, at Muncie, conducted by Mrs. Maggie Waite; also by I. O. O. F. at both house and grave.

Mrs. Lena Bock, of Clinton, Iowa, passed to the higher life June 14, 1904, aged 65 years. She leaves one son, Mr. Wm Bock and one daughter, Mrs. H. J. Jacobs, both of this city, who were present to perform the last affectionate services to the deceased. She was a pioneer Spiritualist and had converted many to the truth of Spiritualism by her exemplary life and logical arguments. The funeral was held at the home of her daughter, and the services were ably conducted by Mrs. Alice C. Barry, of Philadelphia. Mrs. Bock's life was one of good works and charity for all. The Philosophical Society of Spiritualists of which she was a member, keenly feels the loss of her material presence. LOTTIE LEAVITT.

SEEN AND HEARD.

Brief Notes on Topics of Interest, by Hudson Tuttle.

Chicago is famous for starting new schemes. It has college professors who have startled the world by their originality of expression, and the "Windy City" has a university run on religious lines by the most pious trust-magnate in the world. And now its gospel ministers came forward and bid for notoriety with plans for domestic harmony.

It is the Reverend DeLong who is overcome with the "Divorce Evil," and family jars, and has hatched a scheme by which domestic quarrels may be settled and harmony and peace reign over the family hearth instead of discord. He is practical, inasmuch as he does not advise an appeal to Jesus, or the beloved pastor. He would have certain members of the church appointed to form a "Home Mending Society." Whenever there is a family row, the parties are to bring their case before this tribunal, and it is to use every available means to bring about a reconciliation. Or if the case is not brought before the society, then its members are to visit the disputants. The executive of such a society would have a most undesirable position. Those who have with the kindliest motives interposed between husband and wife, will advise the society to let such rough houses indefinitely alone! Their uniform experience has been that the most friendly effort is looked upon as an unwarranted interference, and oil poured on the domestic flames makes a spark into a conflagration.

If the Chicago pastor really wants a "mending society" of usefulness, why not turn his attention to the establishment of one for the churches? There are more disturbances in the churches, more contention and quarreling, than among families. They are of such character that they involve whole communities, and are persistent as Kentucky feuds. Why not have a society chosen from hard-worked worldlings—it will at once be seen that church-members would not be admissible on such a commission—before which all church disputes must be brought, instead of a church meeting, and have a decision rendered on the grounds of common sense, instead of orthodoxy? It is said nothing pleases the devil more than a church row, and no missionary work would be more displeasing to his Satanic Majesty than this same "Church Mending Committee."

Should Not the Label Tell the Ingredients?

The pharmacists are clamoring for a law which shall compel the makers of all patent medicines to print on every package the recipe by which it is compounded, so that the taker may know exactly what he is swallowing. This would probably be a good law, but if the credulous, patent medicine-taking public were to know the real value of the medicines for which they gave their good dollars, nine-tenths of the concerns would go out of business.

It is plain to see why the druggists push this measure. The patent medicine business hurts their own. There is less profit in a bottle, than in a prescription. They want their competitors restrained—of course, for the sake of the dear people. The doctors join with them for they get nothing when a man prescribes for himself a bottle of cure-all, whereas if he consulted one of them they would receive a fee for a prescription and the druggist would pocket another for filling it.

If the patent medicine mixer is to be forced to tell what is in his bottle of elixir, why should not the physician be compelled to with his prescription so that anyone for whom it is written can read and understand? If those who take "patent medicine" do not know what they are swallowing, neither does anyone know what the doctors give them. The doctors take high insult if asked by their patients, and the patients would feel insulted and in nine cases out of ten refuse to swallow it, if the doctors told them.

A man fancies something is wrong with him, and consults a physician, who finds nothing but overwork, or underwork, or perhaps some symptoms he does not understand, and prescribes some simple thing, as bread pills, or mint-scented whisky, well knowing that anything that will take the attention until rest brings strength will answer the purpose. To charge one or two dollars for such a prescription in plain words, would be like a joke, and the druggist would be handicapped in making the price of a penny worth, fifty cents or a dollar according to his conscience!

Write it in jargon Latin with cabalistic symbols, and the mystery is worth the money!

Then the doctor may give an active remedy that is altogether too active, and between the disease and the medicine the patient yields up the ghost. Is it not blessed for the doctor that no one knows?

It is just as necessary for the patient to know what the doctor is giving him, as to know what is in his patent medicine. He thinks he is sick and after taking a bottle or two feels better. He probably would if he had not taken the "vitalizer." He believes the remedy cured him, and usually keeps up the habit of taking, that he may not be sick again. Most of these "medicines" are fair substitutes for whisky toddy, and some of the most advertised have a tremendous sale in prohibition-ruled localities.

We believe the proposed law a good one, but let it not discriminate in favor of one class against another. If it has been found essential for the health of consumers to have all goods labeled just what they are, should the patient whose life is in jeopardy be compelled to swallow like an open-mouthed robin, the medicine dealt out to him, asking no question?

The Prohibition Convention

went through all the motions of a real convention and two victims were chosen for the sacrifice. There is nothing comparable with intemperance, for the evil it brings, yet prohibition is a narrow plank for a great national political party to stand on. Fortunately the number who desire to stand on it, are not so large that they are crowded.

To stand for one's convictions is worthy of all praise, but is this clamor for prohibition the real milk in the cocoanut? Is there not something concealed by this temperance cloak? The prohibition party is strictly a church party. It has Sunday observance as a foremost demand, not for the saloons alone but for everybody. It has now shown unwittingly that it is the "God in the Constitution" party. One of its most conspicuous delegates at Indianapolis was Mrs. Britten "of Boston" who came before the convention with the avowed purpose of "enthroning Christ in politics." There was no objection offered. Christian churches have been attempting to make mankind after the Christ-ideal these 1900 years and have now reached the point when a famous Chicago professor declares that a man like the Christian ideal would be a "cad!"

There have been newspapers run by Christ, or rather by men who run them as they thought Christ would were he to have charge of a paper. The prohibitioners, or this Mrs. Britten "of Boston" do not for a moment expect to put Christ in control of the government, but to control the government as they think Christ would. This means that Christ would have as little influence as Bryan had in the St. Louis convention, and that they would shape the laws and execute them according to the narrow lines of their bigotry.

The party nominated the Reverend Silas C. Swallow for president. He of course has no "barrel of money," and does not dream of being elected. There is no probability of his getting a single electoral vote, yet the vote may develop a strength that may bring defeat and disaster to one of the other parties. The cause has grown. The first candidate, when the party was organized in 1876, Green Clay Smith, received only 9552 votes. Four years after the famous Neal Dow had less than 1,000 more. The eloquent St. John in 1884, had 151,809. In 1900 the vote was 208,555. It will probably be greater this year, and that number equally drawn from the other parties may have a deciding voice in the election.

The time may come when this church party may be strong enough to command one or the other of the great parties, and for its vote receive concessions that it never otherwise would gain. It should be held in mind that every such concession is a step backward, towards religious tyranny.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Lake Sunapee Spiritualist Camp.

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Lake Sunapee Spiritualist Camp will be held on the east shore of Lake Sunapee, at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., beginning Sunday, July 31 and closing Sunday, August 28.

In the last year many improvements have been made on the camp grounds and about the lake shore. New highways have been built and new hotels erected. Steamboats connect with all passenger trains.

Sunday dates for excursions to Lake Sunapee during this season, Sunday, July 31, and Sunday, August 21, for stations Brattleboro to Charlestown inclusive. Sunday, August 14, Keene to West Hopkinton, Manchester and North Weare Branch. Sunday, August 7, Nashua to Greenfield, and Peterboro Branch.

The list of speakers is unusually large and the exercises are expected to be the most interesting in the history of the association.

LORENZO WORTHEN,
Secretary.
Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Friday evening, July 16, Mrs. H. Ebertshauser gave a public test seance at the auditorium for the benefit of the association.

Mrs. Cora Morrill began her work here July 16, by a lecture. Sunday morning her lecture upon the subject, "Progression in the Present World and the Next," was to the point. The thought presented tore down some of the old ideas—forgiveness undoes the wrong done one another in this life. This is Mrs. Morrill's first engagement at Lake Brady, having been in this line of work only two years. The thought presented was directly from the spirit side of life, as Mrs. Morrill speaks in a trance condition. Her afternoon lecture was followed by messages, each one receiving them recognized them as truth.

The large audience listened to the lectures and expressed themselves well pleased with the fine order of light presented in the thought.

July 17, the management and players of the Lake Brady theatre were arrested at the instigation of the orthodox ministers of Ravenna and Kent, under the old law that no house of amusement should be held open on Sunday. This idea of right is agitating the arrest of the official who runs the excursion train to bring people to Lake Brady camp to enjoy "religion" in accordance with the dictates of their own conscience. The management of the Lake Brady resort says, "The ministers felt he was taking money from their till."

If these gentlemen did this for right's sake, would they arrest young women to be tried in a court as criminals? This little theatre in its presentation of different plays has shown the right idea of right to each other. The company composing the troupe are people above the average minister in thought of right. This blow was dealt at liberty. If a refining thought be given from any source whatever it should be upheld by the liberal mind.

The thought now being presented from the spirit side of life is that the human mind must be cultured if wrong ever ceases upon this earth. Giving the thought will not right the wrong, but holding up the hands for justice will teach the selfish that there are others must have employment as well as they, also will show to them that the right thought is not all in their thought.

ESOTERIC AND SPIRITUAL NOTES

LETTER FROM ST. LOUIS.

The Indians and Other "Wards of the Nation."

There is no more interesting exhibit, none indeed fraught with greater food for reflection than that of the U. S. Industrial and Educational School for Indians.

There seemed to your correspondent a vast spiritual concourse of arisen children of the plains and forests bending above the building and grounds occupying a remote corner of the exposition area. The "village," tepees, wigwams, tents, of various selected specimens of tribes are somewhat unimportant and altogether inadequate to show how the natives live when at home, since mud, unsuitable sanitary conditions and groups of prying curiosity seekers cannot prevail in the forest or on the plains where the Indians live in their native state. If this is intended as a background or foil for the Industrial school, it is not fair, since the native in his native state can only be seen when the tribes are one with nature. The fashioning of the tents or wigwams, the manner of cooking, the dress and war paint all are perhaps, a fair presentation.

Of the Industrial School too much can not be said in praise of the work accomplished and of what it promises for the future of the remnants of the race of red men in this country.

Not only does the exhibit contain the finest specimens of native art and skill, such as canoes, bows and arrows, moccasins, costumes of dressed and undressed skins (many of them highly ornamented), bead work, etc., but under industrial training, cooking, sewing of modern garments, cabinet making, decoration of china, saddle and harness making, in fact every industry. In the school also every usual branch of learning—reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, composition, painting and drawing, all that is taught in the usual public schools. The girls and boys of pure Indian blood are taught. And they excel in a larger percentage of cases than the pupils similarly taught in our public schools. Many of these Indians, old and young, came from Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. Schools, printing presses, agriculture and all modern trades and considerable of the arts and industries of the highest civilization existed in the Indian Territory more than thirty years ago. And even the division of the territory, and the compulsory abandonment of some of their finest farms and villages, have not served to blot out the desire for improvement manifested by those Indians.

Two things occur to the impartial observer: These young members of the Indian tribes differ in no essential particular—except the one fact of color—from similar groups of young people of the Caucasian or Latin races. They are fully as bright, ready to learn, eager for amusement, interested in all they see at the exposition.

Has it taken a century of time for this government to discover that all the Indians needed was an opportunity? The cry that the "Indians cannot be civilized," is not only forever silenced by what the Indians themselves have done, but the education of these young men and women of the various tribes has proven utterly false the equally long-cherished error that the Indian cannot be educated." Instead of wars, massacres, and treaties (made only to be broken), fertile fields, towns teeming with industry, and social centers of activity and refinement, are among the saddest of all "might have beens." We have killed off thousands of these people, have exposed them to the still more destructive influences of the military frontier (in time of peace) and now we are told by this exhibit, "see what civilization and education can do for the red man."

Your correspondent felt the spirits of a thousand thousand red men, sent to the hunting grounds above in futile war, and remembered while watching the skillful and graceful movements of these pupils of the Industrial School, that every medium for spirit ministration and manifestation has one or more Indian controls, who come in the spirit of kindness, to heal the sick, to strengthen and assist the mediums in their work, and I could not help feeling that there is a mighty debt to be paid—somewhere—sometime.

A stanza from one of the poems of Mrs. Richmond, given some years ago, after the massacre of the Cheyennes by some irresponsible U. S. soldiers, floated through my mind.

"Mokotevata, thy race shall rise again;
Thy spirit to its hunting ground hath risen;
Thy body bursting from its wintry prison,
Blossoms in blood-red flowers on the plain.

* * * * * * *

"Down through the golden gateway they have trod;
The mighty scions of a nation come
In sweeping circles from their shining home,
With weapons from Love's battle plains of God."

The Philippine Reservation.

That which is true of the red man of North America cannot be literally applied to the Filipinos. Geographically the latter are not related to this country. The incidents of the war with Spain concerning Cuba has brought the Filipinos into our governmental protection.

If we could or would let them become—as we have the Cubans—a separate and self-governed nation. Will we?

There are savages among them, some of the tribes are almost barbarians. (But we are not without barbarians even in St. Louis, Chicago, New York and London.) The majority of the Filipinos one meets are intelligent, well-mannered, quick at conversation or repartee. And the exhibit shows a great degree of industry, cultivation and refinement, in the products and manufactures of the country. The village, the structures, the various industries, all proclaim a high state of civilization. What we will do with them no one can or will foretell. Let us trust that the wisest and best counsels will prevail and that the spirit of the world-wide republic—or chain of sister republics will soon govern all the nations of the earth.

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Never have the beautiful grounds at Lily Dale presented a more attractive appearance than on Friday, July 15, the grand opening day.

The spirit of preparation, which had been active for many weeks under the able management of President Pettengill, has culminated in a system of arrangement that is perfect in all its details, and its results everywhere visible.

The auditorium has a new roof, the electric light plant a new boiler, the broad walks have been cleaned and trimmed and the trees shorn of their too numerous branches. The smooth-cut laws are profusely ornamented with effective combinations of ferns and flowers that smile a welcome to visitors and make doubly inviting the rustic seats the shady park supplies. Repeated rains have made the foliage heavy and luxuriant, and birds are always singing in the tree-tops.

The cottages are rapidly filling up with arrivals that come pouring in on every train. Hotel Leolyn, with its pleasant and agreeable landlord, Mr. White, has already a large number of happy guests. Mr. John T. Lilly, a popular, old-time favorite, and a resident of California for the past six years, received an enthusiastic welcome from a host of old friends on Thursday. Everybody feels that it is good to see his genial face, to hear the music of his voice, and enjoy his magnetic presence once more. Mrs. Lilly is expected a week or so later. Mr. Lilly will have the entire charge of the singing, and will be actively identified with the terpsichorean interests.

Miss Emma Pumphrey of Cincinnati, has been engaged as accompanist on the piano for the season. The Northwestern band of Meadville, furnishes exquisite music morning and evening from the band stand in Melrose Park, and the sweet strains bring an indescribable feeling of harmony and rest that is keenly felt by all.

J. Clegg Wright and wife are here, and Mr. Wright will lecture and give class lessons.

Mr. Lockwood will also hold public and private classes in addition to his regular lectures.

F. Corden White occupies his lovely cottage on Melrose Park, and gives test sittings daily.

Mrs. Bartholomew, trumpet medium, is at her old quarters in the Hauff cottage on South street.

N. H. Eddy of Buffalo, "scientific astrologer," is at the Bach cottage, and consults the stars with good success it is said.

Miss Danforth, whose work as palmist and seeress, is familiar to the old habitues of the place, is on Cleveland avenue, and doing good work as usual. The Maplewood has been thoroughly rejuvenated and made ready for arrivals, with Leo. Manger at the helm. He will be pleasantly remembered by the patrons of last year.

The first initial service was held at the auditorium on Friday afternoon, with a fine audience. The platform was tastefully decorated with jardinieres of wood-ferns and flowers, and from the ceilings hung a gorgeous array of small flags representing a large number of foreign nations.

Above the stage in immense letters, the suggestive words of the immortal Lincoln, "With malice toward none and charity for all," also the attractive word "Welcome." After some very enjoyable music by the band, President Pettengill addressed a few, graceful, hopeful, sympathetic words of greeting, and was heartily applauded. She read a telegram from Chairman Barrett, regretting his enforced absence until Monday, and introduced Mr. Bach, editor of the Sunflower, who had kindly consented to serve in that capacity during the interim. The chairman introduced Mr. Lilly who, in a neat speech, expressed his great joy at being back again among old friends and valued associations.

Mrs. Twing, the speaker of the afternoon, disclaimed all intention of sermonizing or lecturing, but gave a real heart to heart talk which frequently brought tears to the eyes of her listeners. She furnished tender reminiscences of the faithful workers who had left vacant places in our midst and passed on. Mrs. Gaston, Mr. Skidmore and others, not forgetting Mr. Bellows, the pop-corn man, whose kind face and modest demeanor won the good wishes of all he served. Generous tribute was paid to the memory of each with a depth of feeling and pathos that always characterizes the utterances of Mrs. Twing. She said Spiritualism stand for manhood and womanhood. "Don't rob men of their duties, of their share of the worries in the partnership of home. Every man should be impressed with the responsibility of his position, that his wife cannot represent all of the religion, all of the philosophy. The partnership of home is a house with a man and a woman added to it whose lives are consecrated to the best. Spiritualism is the open door to natural living and broad thinking on all lines. We should teach others by worthy examples. The real idea of Spiritualism is not for the moment, not to find out whether someone is alive who has been dead, or what they would say were they here with us, but for the real growth of the soul. If we do not impress other lives for the better, our living is worthless. Those who are rounded out in thought find they have something to do, someone to help, someone to cheer. If we want success we must banish hate and uncharitableness; if we want that which is most beautiful in our natures we must make room for it. The real understanding of the spiritual philosophy must be the blossoming of the soul."

Mrs. Maud Lord-Drake followed the speaker with expressions of appreciation for Lily Dale, and the spirit of love and good will so widely prevalent. She prophesied for the City of Light assembly a season of success and prosperity surpassing all that had preceded it. Mrs. Drake psychometrized several articles passed up from the audience, and gave tests to strangers that were promptly recognized. Mrs. Drake has rooms in the Binney cottage and will give sittings and the dark seances for phenomena for which she has been so celebrated in the decades that have gone wherein so many skeptics have been convinced of the continuity of life.

Saturday morning conference bell called together a goodly number of people, with the genial Mr. Bach in the chair. The musicians rendered "America," in which the audience joined, and the inspirational uplift was apparent in the ten-minute speeches which followed. The subject, "What can we do to make this session of the assembly a complete success?" proved of general interest.

Rev. B. F. Austin of Toronto, Mr. Hulburt of Buffalo, Mrs. Clara Watson of Jamestown, Mr. Edgerly, Dr. Temple, Mrs. Twing and others responded in quick succession, and all pleaded for a higher interpretation of Spiritualism, more kindness and consideration in our dealings with each other, more love and charity felt and expressed, especially for the mediums, the sensitives who always feel the shadows of every unkind or suspicious thought. Loyalty in thought and feeling that would prove a sustaining power to the management, sentiments that received ready response from the audience.

Mr. Sneider, a young man and a stranger, gave some excellent thoughts on personal responsibility. Mr. Sneider has a pleasing personality, and suggests much promise for the future.

Mrs. Drake signified a willingness to give without money and without price the benefit of her psychometric gifts to any who might chance to meet her about the grounds and by freely ministering to all, help to make the season a complete success.

S. M. KINGSBURY.

Spiritualism at Lauderdale Springs, Mississippi.

Last winter Mrs. M. A. Crooker, her son Edwin and daughter, Mrs. Hollingsworth, all sincere and earnest Spiritualists, while attending the camp at Lake Helen, Fla., stayed at our Sanitarium Hotel, which is only about 80 rods from the camp. Mrs. Webster, who is a very sensitive medium, as she often does in such cases, had sensed the condition of Mrs. Crooker's little grandson who was very ill, twenty-four hours before their arrival. She had never heard of the Crookers and knew nothing of their coming. Mrs. C. followed Mrs. W's. advice in her treatment of the child and everything turned out as the spirit guides had foretold. In taking care of the child Mrs. C. gave out and was given a vapor bath and Osteopathic and magnetic treatment by our daughter, Dr. M. I. Webster, who gives such treatments and has charge of the bath-rooms in our Sanitarium.

The result of all this was that the Crookers desired Mrs. W. and Dr. M. I. to come to their sanitarium at Lauderdale Springs, Miss., the Doctor to give baths and Osteopathic treatments, and Mrs. W. to help in spiritual work by her lectures, tests and mediumistic work. Our spirit guides approved of our coming, and the three of us are at the springs for the summer.

Lauderdale Springs was a famous health resort before the civil war. A physician had the water from some of the springs analyzed, and becoming satisfied that it contained valuable medicinal qualities, purchased the land. Buildings were erected with a dining-room to seat 300 people. The springs had thousands of visitors who came for health or pleasure during the summer months. During the war the Confederates established a hospital here for sick and wounded soldiers. Afterwards an orphan asylum was kept on the grounds for several years.

After the asylum was removed the property changed owners several times, until finally five years ago it was purchased by Mr. G. A. Crooker. In doing this he followed the advice of the spirit guides of his wife, who had been a medium for about fifteen years.

Mrs. C. has had a wonderful experience as a medium, and her guides had given so much evidence of their intelligence and ability to give good advice, that they had gained the confidence of the whole family. About ten years ago Mrs. C. and her two daughters, Jessie and Hattie became much interested in the idea of establishing a sanitarium where Mrs. Crooker's healing powers could be utilized. Their home then was in Louisiana. Their spirit friends said that was not the place, but that they would find one that would be desirable. They afterward lived in Mississippi, and visited Mineral Springs and popular resorts, but the spirits said no one of them was the right place, that the time had not come yet. They were evidently waiting till there would be an opportunity to buy the Lauderdale Springs. In the meantime their daughter Jessie passed to spirit life, still keeping her interest in the sanitarium. She often told her mother that the right place would be found, and and they would tell them where to go when the right time came. They finally made their home in Meridian, one of the largest cities in the state, and 18 miles from Lauderdale Springs, but with no idea of going there. A friend of theirs told them about the springs and the spirits said that was the chosen spot, and that the time had come to make the purchase. The party who owned the property had not wished to sell it, and that was the reason the spirits had not told where it was. Mr. Crooker was advised to employ a certain lawyer who was acquainted with the owner and would be successful in making the purchase.

The Crookers got the springs and 320 acres of land for $7,500. They have since spent about $15,000 in various improvements and expect to spend much more. There are bath rooms with hot and cold water, hot air baths, etc. There is quite a difference in the analysis of the water of the different springs that supply the mineral water. Many who have used it have great faith in its valuable qualities, and it is daily being sent to different parts of the state.

Last January Mr. Crooker passed to spirit life, but Mrs. Crooker and her son intend to go on with the work planned by their spirit friends.

Mr. R. S. Walker is manager of the hotel for this summer. Mrs. Crooker's guides give seances every Saturday evening, often followed by spirit communications and tests. Mrs. Webster gives lectures Sunday and Wednesday evenings, and reading and tests at any time during the week. Two ladies who were very desirous of hearing from their spirit friends, learning that Mrs. Webster would lecture June 15, came 350 miles to see her. They stayed several days and said that the communications they got through Mrs. Crooker and Mrs. Webster paid them well for coming so far.

It has been quite a surprise to me to find so many people here in Mississippi anxious to learn about Spiritualism. Mrs. Webster's mediumistic gifts are being much sought by people desiring to investigate.

She does all she can for such people, whether they have anything to pay her or not. I do not see the decline in Spiritualism, but in my opinion the greatest good is not always done by those who take the most money for their work. The guides of Mrs. Crooker and Mrs. Webster say that this place has been selected by the spiritual forces in the higher spheres as one of the centers for the promulgation of the spiritual philosophy. Time will tell whether they are true prophets.

Do You Suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the Kola Compound before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

Mr. J. B. Ayle, Estherville, Iowa, writes Feb. 28th, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after 28 years suffering, could get nothing to even give relief. Miss Eva Preston, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, suffered beyond words for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma, until cured by the Kola Compound. Physicians told her she could not be cured. Rev. S. H. Eisenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., a very bad case was permanently cured of Asthma after many years suffering.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Company, No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Progressive Thinker who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

"Beyond the Vail." A Sequel to "Rending the Vail." Being a compilation, with notes and explanations, of narrations and illustrations of spirit experiences, spoken, written and made by full-form materializations; setting up a scientific and personal verification of "What We Shall Be," and a code of ethics, requisite to the most speedy realization of the highest and purest felicity attainable in the future life. A very remarkable book. Large octavo, 500 pages. Price, $1.75.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only four books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book in the list at that price.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and who desires only ONE premium book can make his selection from the following list for TWENTY-FIVE CENTS:

11—The Great Debate Between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

After Death--What?

BY CHARLES DAWBARN, SAN LEANDRO, CAL.

CHAPTER SECOND.

It has been universally assumed and believed that life in the spirit world, for those, at least, not tied to earth, combines all that mortal man could conceive as an improvement upon our life and surroundings of to-day. We are told that the spirit finds himself upon solid ground, with mountains, valleys, rivers, lakes, oceans, and a fertile soil producing everything but weeds. Everything responds to the wonderful power of the spirit. He walks or floats in the atmosphere as he may choose, yet transports himself to enormous distances almost instantly. He has boats for his water, carriages for his land, and motors for his excursions in the air. The land is dotted with his structures, from the charming cottage for the individual home to the grand temples where the spirits gather in masses for instruction and amusement. Flowers, green grass, wide spreading trees, and the most luscious fruits are his to command. They have a land of peace and plenty; at least it is so called by one of Mrs. Piper's controls. Everything responds to the will power of the spirit. And we are told, yet further, that as the spirit progresses he finds new and improved editions of a spirit's power over his surroundings.

Every spirit claims all this, and much more of the same sort, as a most satisfactory answer to our question "After death—what?" So much, at least, has leaked through "fog-land" for our benefit and blessing by comforting us in our hours of earthly sorrow, suffering and unsatisfied cravings.

In the early days of spirit intercourse the limitations of fog-land were not known, or even guessed by the enthusiastic believer. Everything a spirit said was counted as from a being altogether superior to mortal man. Death was the wizard who changed the fool into a wise man. And when there were discrepancies in stories told by different returning spirits concerning their personal experiences in spirit life, plausible explanations were invented to silence the critics. Spirits who proved very objectionable were enrolled in a class to themselves, and said to be "earth bound." The others were counted as more or less advanced, and therefore with varying degrees of knowledge of spirit life and its details. The existence of a "fog-land" as a mental state into which a returning spirit must pass, and wherein he must meet a mortal if he wished to communicate, is still, for the most part counted by the believer as a poor attempt to explain the confusions and contradictions of spirit return.

Husband, wife, son, daughter, friend, have each contributed to the perplexity when attempting to communicate. They could not tell the same tale through different mediums; and the wisest mortal of to-day evidently had become three parts a fool by the process of death. The usual spirit talk was what Huxley called "the babble of country parsons."

The believer knew by personal experience that returning spirits often healed the sick by magnetic treatments; they lectured through unlearned lips, and even wrote and told thrilling tales of spirit life in Beulah Land. Still everything alike was of the earth, earthy. They could prescribe for the sick, but just as the herbs and minerals were drugs belonging to earth life, so even their talk about the hereafter might be an attempt to tell the truth, but it was always put up in a capsule of mortal manufacture and flavor. Fog-land does not exude spirit truth of spirit experience "over there," save with a Swedenborgian flavor of heaven and hell, that leaves a bad taste in the mouth after you swallow it. It has been taken in liberal doses from every medium, and at every seance, but the real trouble is that it will not digest and assimilate.

The reader may here interpose and ask "why will it not assimilate?" He thinks he believes all about the naturalness of the next life, and its little details worked in by controls and guides who inspire mediums, and perhaps write and talk through himself. Therein is great trouble for the present unfortunate student who is writing down these thoughts. He is perpetually knocking his head against what Spiritualists call "facts in their own experience." He would undoubtedly become a "slain man" were it not that the facts thrown at him cannot get through even a thin coating of common sense, at least with sufficient solidity to injure him.

We know that spirit life must be passed amid conditions very different to those of earth. This is proved by the fact that the normal mortal has no sense by which he can recognize the presence of spirit man. Even his lungs cannot breathe any atmosphere less dense than that of earth. The mortal entering earth life takes nine months to develop a form with organs shaped to the conditions of this planet. And this is so, no matter how many or few are to be the years spent here. But somehow, and in some unexplained way, when the mortal body is dropped we are told he is all ready with another body adapted to a very different kind of life. He is not to be born into that new life, as he was here, but is to "burst in" all ready to become a citizen, save, perhaps, that he needs a few hours' sleep to enable him to forget the old way of doing things in this life's "fitful dream."

As to how and when this new body was shaped and manufactured spirit return is silent. It will not satisfy thethinker to tell him it was evolved from the old body, although that is the common and accepted explanation. For if that were the case we should want a further explanation as to why and how he gets rid of certain organs which would of course "spiritualize" but are not wanted over there. For instance the entire sexual organs of both sexes could be of no service over there, for either they are not begotten and born as spirits, or if so born it is by some process of which we have been left totally ignorant by the revelations of spirit return. Yet, if we think a moment, we see the absurdity of supposing liver, heart and lungs to "spiritualize" and yet the sexual organs to remain purely mortal, and unable to cross the divide.

Nature in earth life directs all her energies to the continuance of species by propagation, and we are often pointed to the ingenuity by which she effects this result. Every form is designed with this end in view, and for this one purpose. It is still another absurdity to suppose that the spirit form can be like ours, for it needs none of these ingenious schemes and designs. Yet, we repeat our question, how are they to be left behind. And how am I to recognize my old friend whose new form is unshaped by having all the sexual organs left out?

We know by experience on earth that in a refined atmosphere the lungs have to increase in size. Dogs taken to the highlands of Mexico cannot run without immediate exhaustion. But their offspring can. So the lungs will have to change, and the new form must adapt itself to that change.

But our mortal form is arranged and planned for a system of mastication, assimilation and excretion which keeps boards of health busy selecting and branding eatables and drinkables, and enforcing elaborate systems of sanitation. How the spirit escapes all this we have never learned. But even if a spirit strolls up to a ripe peach, with his hands in his pockets, and just sucks its delicious flavor and essence, he must have some way of assimilating the necessary, and rejecting the rest, that requires organs very differently constituted to ours. We cannot suppose he just lives on "baby food" such as is loudly recommended here, for that is far too coarse for entrance into spirit life. His eyes may become microscopes or telescopes; his ears audiphones; and he may go round catching thoughts as they fly, and sorting them for his private perusal, but all this demands organs very different from ours, and would make us shout "ghost" if we happened to meet a spirit loved one at some midnight hour.

In a word, since the spirits are living in an atmosphere and amid conditions impossible to us, they must have bodies so different from ours that we cannot even guess how they got them by any process of evolution. And most certainly we would not recognize them if we came across old friends strolling in one of the parks of the New Jerusalem. Of course we get all sorts of guesses how its done, by way of learned explanation, but we want solid facts that will "hitch on," as every effect must "hitch on" to its cause.

This little peep into the coming mysteries is only just the beginning of our troubles. We accept spirit return as a fact demonstrated by abundant experience. but do not let us pretend to be learned and scientific, and know, or even guess how it's done, and what shaped garments the yesterday mortal is having made for to-day. The writer most humbly acknowledges that he cannot answer questions on this interesting subject, at least from any scientific or common sense standpoint.

We now, in our imagination, and pocketing our present experiences of spirit return, pass on to the beyond, and begin to search for solid facts on which to build our philosophy. And, once again, we repeat our query, "After death—what?"

(To be concluded.)

BILLY AND I.

They say they are going to shoot you, Old Billy, but don't you fret,
For the fellow that dares to meddle with you must reckon with me, you bet;
You're a poor old horse, Old Billy, and you aren't worth much, it is true;
But you've been a faithful friend to me, and I'll see you safely through.

Shoot Old Billy? I guess not, though you may be old and gray;
By the self-same stretch of mercy they'll be shooting at me some day;
For I'm three times older than you are, for I've reached three score and ten;
And shooting isn't the thing to do to horses no more than men.

That's right, Old Billy, I like it—your muzzle against my face;
We've had rattling times together, and once we won the race—
Do you remember it, Billy, the dude that we downed that day?
And the way he swore, that an old farm-horse should show his trotter the way!

I haven't much love for the fellows who follow the shooting plan;
If they had more pity for horses and dogs, they'd have more love for man;
And this world would be much nearer the glad millennium day
If they'd just stop burning powder for good and fire their guns away.

Well, Billy, we're both great sinners, for we've both grown old, you know;
And we've only a little further adown the road to go;
So we'll travel along together till the Master calls us home
To the happy Home-Land stables, and our feet forget to roam.

Yes, we've jogged along together for many and many a day,
So we'll just keep on a jogging to the ending of the way;
And at last, when the shadows falling shall tell the time for rest,
We will meet them, nothing fearing, for you know
we've done our best.

Won't it be jolly, Old Comrade, in the pastures green and fair,
To roll in the fragrant clover that must bloom forever there?
You'll be there, Billy, I know it, for they'll surely let you in—
I only wish my record on earth was a quarter as free from sin.

They tell us that horses have no souls, and they all declare it true;
That shows how little they know, Old Boy, and it proves they don't know you;
Well, well, 'tis a mighty question, and quite beyond my ken—
But the more I know of horses like you, the less I brag about men.

Now, trot away to the pasture and hear the thrushes sing;
And list to the children playing, and hear how their voices ring;
See the white clouds drifting over, hear the cooling brooklet's flow—
'Tis a sweet, glad world, Old Billy, and we'll stay till we have to go.

Shoot Old Billy! By ginger! they better not try that on;
For the man who draws a gun on you will wish he'd never been born;
They say it will cost to keep you all right, you have earned it fair;
So don't you worry, old friend of mine, you shall have your honest share.

You've been a good horse, old fellow, sturdy and brave and true;
You have given us faithful service—done all that a horse could do;
You have earned your keep; you shall have it, so live as long as you can—
For justice is justice, and right is right, whether it's horse or man.

ASTRAL WORSHIP By J. H. Hill, M.D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,
HON. A. B. RICHMOND,
Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narrative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book or reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 188 pages. SPIRITS AND SPIRIT.

When Sydney Carton, in Dicken's great novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," said, "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known," He gave up his head as a sacrifice for the thing he loved. Are you sacrificing anything to know yourself, to be great when death ends your mortal life, to realize your God-given divine powers? If you are not you are not a progressive Spiritualist. Our Open Court Now In Session.

For a time, during this camp-meeting season, which is usually the dullest business season for spiritual papers, we have thrown our columns open to our giants in thought upon one of the most important topics that come under the name and philosophy of Spiritualism. Some masterly articles have already been given our patrons and there are many more to follow.

We find some of our readers very sensitive to the publication of anything that hints of an acknowledgment that there is such a thing as fraud in our ranks, and upon the other hand we have those who have nothing to cover up, and who would wage an aggressive warfare against it openly, publicly, as a means of stamping it out. These are given an opportunity, side by side, to express themselves, and the discussion has already awakened a deep interest in the cause. The Open Court surely fills a niche that has been carved for it.

Free-handed, open and logical discussion can only be conducive to the best interest of any cause. A philosophy that will not bear criticism is a trembling failure. A science that will not stand discussion in this age of reason has not a solid foundation and should be pigeon-holed as a relic of the dim past. A religion that can not stand the storm of adversity, that can not weather the gale of mental unfoldment of the day, should be relegated to a museum as an antiquated monstrosity, lost in the fog of ignorance.

Are you reading the findings of this Open Court? Are you reading the testimony upon both sides and recording the findings in your unbiased mind? Do you appreciate our effort for truth? If so you should become a life subscriber for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. Send your name, address and remittance after you read our unparalleled premium offer.

CLAIRVOYANT REVELATIONS.

A Study of the Laws of Mental Science.

We are all reaching out after greater light, as no one has yet all the wisdom, and if I can get a little, I am more that glad.

There is so much in the laws of mental science, and mortals have learned so little, that each demonstrated proof aids a little to unravel the mysteries.

We are seeking light and giving light as we find it, and are able to prove it a reality. Mental laws belong to the spirit world, whether the spirit is free or still imprisoned in a robe of flesh.

Last winter an event, which may interest some, came into my work as a medium. A lady called, and my guide at once told me she came to learn something about a man, and gave me a mental vision of him. I described him. She said, "Yes, that is what brought me here; the description was correct."

I asked my guides to learn from the lady's friends what the trouble was with the man, and was shown a condition as if his whole physical system was all broken up. I thought he must be very ill, and told the lady so. She asked, "Where is he now?"

At once I saw a field covered with snow. I described what I saw—the road running not straight east and west, but slanting a little as it passed the field; the trees in certain places; the river running near, and the bridge as the road crossed it; also two railroads running near this field. I marked on paper a map of the whole. The lady said the description was correct, even to a house on a hill, which I saw also near the field, and at that time there was snow on the ground, but I did not see the man. Then I was shown the same place with no snow on the ground; it was night, "near midnight," I was told. The moon shone as it rolled through fleecy clouds. A man was driving in a carriage. There seemed to be something about to happen. He looked in every direction for escape or help, but none could be found. Then I felt as if struck on the head, and falling. These I knew to be suggestions of the condition. I asked to be shown what happened. I saw two men in the carriage struggling. One was the light-haired man I had seen; the other a taller man with dark hair mixed with gray; a mustache mixed with gray. One side had a very marked white spot. He was dressed in dark clothes of costly material and neatly fitting. He was tall and straight, and very particular in his dress. Then the light-haired man seemed conscious, but helpless for a little while, and as if he was taken into the field to a certain spot. I saw him lying on the ground, and his spirit standing near, as if it had left the body, but was watching it. I got the impression of his body being carried from this spot, but could not see what was done with it. The lady told me that the light-haired man was the husband of a friend who lived in Kansas; had disappeared six weeks before. He lived in the country, started home after attending theater, and never reached there. The horse came home without him.

I was the fourteenth medium she had called on, and the first one that had told her he was dead. They all told different things; some gave names, but she believed he was dead, and I felt sure of it, as parts of the vision she knew to be true, so it was likely the others were. She asked why he was killed. I then saw a large wallet, such as she said he carried. I described the interior of a bank, and saw a man belonging there who limped. She recognized the bank as the one he had visited that day and had received money, which he had in the wallet at the time he disappeared. The president of the bank is lame. She said a letter of his was found in the field where I saw him taken, as it was one he had in his pocket before leaving home; it was known to have come from his pocket that night.

One day while the lady was with me, for she called several times to see if we could get more regarding the matter, I took a pencil and automatically a spirit wrote: "Will is in hell. He can't make anyone understand his body is in the river near the bridge."

One day I saw two men hunting and the ground indicated that it was early spring. I could not tell if they were really hunting or the appearance of hunting to show they were looking for the body; but I was impressed that in the early spring two men would find him.

One other medium, Mrs. Nolan, saw him in the water; saw the lap robe on the bridge where it was found, and believing there was some truth in what we two told her, the lady wrote to her brother in Kansas, asking him to see that the river was more thoroughly examined, but as they all believed he had run away, they had not as yet done so. But another spirit influence was at work in Kansas. About the first of April, I think, a man who had with a friend, worked near the river, and had been watching to see if the body was there, dreamed that he saw it in a certain place. In the morning he went for his friend, and together they found the body just where he had dreamed it was.

I have for years been studying and testing mental laws, and am satisfied that dreams are produced by very much the same condition that clairvoyant visions are given to the sensitized medium. At no time in people's lives are they without spirit influence around them. Sensitives find the different selves if they are strong enough mentally to hold their own mind and not be entranced. If a weak physical condition makes weak mental powers, one has not the power to hold their own if the spirit tries to operate through their mind and they become entranced. But the majority of people are so physically strong and the lack of the sensitized condition makes it impossible for any of the selves, save the one which is most assuredly the self, to hold supreme control. But in sleep, when self rests, the spirit or soul which is in attendance can bring on the clairvoyant condition, and we call it a dream.

The Michigan Philosopher on the Question of Immortality

The question as to whether or not man's existence is of eternal duration is one that can never be authoritatively determined, for the very excellent reason that no person has ever lived eternally. We can only consider the matter as best our limited experience and ability will permit. Our field of observation is extremely limited. We are surrounded by a material world whose every manifestation of life or of form is evanescent; and being constantly surrounded by change, with nothing permanent, it is not surprising, it is to be expected that man's conception of the spirit world and also of his own future should be formed in accordance with his observations of his surroundings while in mortal garb.

This, however, is very likely to lead to the acceptance of erroneous opinions. Thus the inspiring belief in man's eternal existence is rejected by many profound thinkers, simply because they reason from a material standpoint. They consider that they have made an unanswerable argument in support of their position when they proclaim that whatever has a beginning also has an ending, therefore if we have not existed for an eternity past we cannot enjoy an eternal future.

Or, as Brother Baldwin stated in a late issue of The Progressive Thinker, that if the creation of spirits continues indefinitely the time will come, if spirits are immortal, when all matter will be turned into spirits, resulting in the awful calamity that the universe would be all spirits and nothing else. This would indeed be a terrible misfortune—nothing to walk on but spirits, nothing to look at but spirits, nothing to eat but spirits—much too serious a matter to make light of if there was any possibility of it being more than a fancy. He offers us another horn to this dilemma, namely, that spirits are not immortal. We shall accept neither one nor the other. In considering earth we find scarcely anything but what has its limits. It contains a definite amount of air, a certain amount of water, a limited amount of mineral matter; in fact all its component elements are subject to exhaustion. Earth would make only a "limited number of mountains," and by the same process of reasoning is capable of producing just a certain number of spirits. This logic is convincing when applied to earth alone, so much we admit, but when we come to extend it to cover the entire universe we find it inadequate.

Earth has limits; the universe has none. Earth contains a limited amount of substance. Not so the universe. It is infinite in the full sense of the world; absolutely boundless in extent, its resources absolutely inexhaustible. It is true that the earth being limited, would make only a limited number of mountains or spirits, but the universe, being infinite, would make an infinite number of worlds and systems of worlds, together with the spirits to inhabit them.

An unusually broad conception of the universe is that given by Coleridge when he says: "It is not impossible that to some infinitely superior being the whole universe may be as one plain—the distance between planet and planet being only as the pores in a grain of sand, and the spaces between systems and system no greater than the intervals between one grain and the grain adjacent." Yet profound and comprehensive as this conception is, it gives but an imperfect idea of the magnitude of an infinite universe.

There is utterly no reason whatever for assuming that the continual creation of immortal spirits will exhaust the resources of the universe. When the meaning of the word infinite is fully understood, such objections as this become pitifully inadequate, and it might almost be said, absurd

The greatest trouble to be met with in the discussion of this subject is that man, being finite, can with difficulty comprehend or define the possibilities of an infinite universe But it needs to be appreciated that a truth may be beyond our ability to prove or even to understand and still be no less a truth We may have an endless future before us and yet be unable to comprehend the fact while in our present state of development. We may be capable of infinite progression and unfoldment and yet be entirely unaware of the fact. Every indication leads us to believe that we are finite beings possessing faculties some of which are capable of infinite extension; that instead of reaching a condition of comparative perfection and then passing out of existence, we have the faculties and the opportunities for their development that justify us in asserting that the time when further development will be impossible will never come to pass. Every fact of nature when rightly interpreted gives us hope and faith that man as a conscious being has an eternal future before him. But as said before, we have nothing in our daily lives with which to make comparison, and for this reason it is difficult for some thinkers to conceive of eternity or infinity.

Considering the depth of reasoning needed to conceive of immortality it may at first glance seem somewhat incongruous that the vast majority of mankind believes in this fact, but upon second thought we find that it is natural and to be expected. A belief in immortality has been held by the greater portion of the race for unnumbered ages, while more simple truths have gone neglected or entirely unrecognized. This is due mainly to the fact that immortality was and is generally accepted without due consideration of its meaning. The correct meaning of the word immortality is never-ending life, and when I use the word I do not mean it in the sense usually employed, of a future life of indefinite length—that is sufficiently demonstrated by Spiritualism and needs no further elucidation from my pen.

The cause, however, for the general acceptance of a belief in immortal life has been the influence of the church. Because the church has proclaimed eternal life men have believed, but they have generally failed to reason concerning it. Then with the broadening of intellect came doubts and these would have constantly increased but for the advent of Spiritualism. But even Spiritualism does not proclaim an eternal future for man; it merely gives us a future life, but does not inform us concerning its duration. But if we can survive one death the general opinion is that we stand an excellent chance of surviving whatever calamities it may be our fate to encounter.

Having removed a few of the obstacles in our way, we are now in position to make an inquiry as to what conditions we are dependent on for eternal life. Herbert Spencer, though he would not have sanctioned the conclusions we shall draw from his words, has given us an excellent definition of the requisite conditions and qualities necessary for eternal life, in the following words:

"Perfect correspondence would be perfect life. Were there no changes in the environment but such as the organism had adapted changes to meet, and were it never to fail in the efficiency with which it met them, there would be eternal existence and eternal knowledge." Man, if he is eternal must possess capabilities that will enable him to remain in harmony with his environment no matter how great the changes he may encounter. Henry Drummond, in "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," makes the following remarks which are pertinent to our theme:

"A distinct relation exists, and must exist, between complexity and longevity. Death being brought about by the failure of an organism to adjust itself to some change in the environment, it follows that those organisms which are able to adjust themselves most readily and successfully will live the longest. They will continue time after time to effect the appropriate adjustment, and their power of doing so will be exactly proportionate to their complexity—that is, to the amount of environment they can control with their correspondences. There are, for example, in the environment of every animal certain things which are directly or indirectly dangerous to life. If its equipment of correspondences is not complete enough to enable it to avoid these dangers in all possible circumstances, it must sooner or later succumb. The organism then with the most perfect set of correspondences, that is, the highest and most complex organism, has an obvious advantage over less complex forms. It can adjust itself more perfectly and frequently. But this is just the biological way of saying that it can live the longest, and hence the relation between complexity and longevity may be expressed thus: The most complex organisms are the longest-lived * * *"

"* * * We are now in sight of our scientific definition of eternal life. The desideratum is an organism with a correspondence of a very exceptional kind * * * Before we reach an eternal life we must pass beyond that point at which all ordinary correspondences inevitably cease. We must find an organism so high and complex, that at some point in its development it shall have added a correspondence which organic death is powerless to arrest. We must in short pass beyond that finite region where the correspondences depend on evanescent and material media, and enter a further region where the environment corresponded with is itself eternal. Such an environment exists. The environment of the spiritual world is outside the influence of these mechanical actions which sooner or later interrupt the processes going on in all finite organisms. If, then, we can find an organism which has established a correspondence with the spiritual world, that correspondence will possess the elements of eternity."

The one problem now to be answereed is as to whether or not the human organism can adapt itself to the progressive changes taking place in the universe. In other words, does man as a conscious being possess faculties complex enough to maintain "perfect correspondence" with his environment, no matter how great the changes he may encounter?

Earth life is entirely inadequate for the unfoldment of all the possibilities inherent within the human organism. There will be no dispute in regard to this—every Spiritualist believes it. Now let us carry this line of reasoning a little further. Will a temporary spirit life suffice to complete the development begun on earth? Is there any limit to the extent the spiritual faculties may be developed? We have an infinite universe before us, and consequently we have infinite opportunities for the development of whatever latent faculties we may possess. The one question we have now to consider is whether or not we are capable of infinite and endless unfoldment. Retrogression or annihilation cannot take place until growth ceases. As long as we continue to advance we are in no danger of losing our individuality. And further, if we are capable of unlimited advancement, it is a logical sequence that we are destined for an endless future, for nothing exists without cause or use; and we would not be capable of eternal advancement unless we have eternity in which to develop and use these qualities.

In considering what is in store for us beyond the grave we can not do better than consider the testimony of those who have already reached the other shore and are thus in a position to speak with some degree of accuracy concerning conditions on their side of life. Of course they cannot solve all the various problems that will arise regarding their future and ours, but they can give us an idea of what they have experienced in their own lives or learned from their association with others more advanced. Spirits in describing the spirit life state that they are destined to advance ever higher and higher. They tell us that they are far in advance of the inhabitants of earth in intellectual and spiritual qualities, and often their communications bear witness to the truth of their assertions. Yet no matter what their character may be, they generally agree that they hold converse with and receive instruction from beings so far advanced that they seem almost divine in the comprehension of their minds and the purity of their character. And yet, so we are told, even these advanced spirits say that there are still others so far beyond them in intellect and spirituality that in comparison with these higher spirits, their own advancement seems insignificant. Thus by the testimony of reliable witnesses we can trace our destiny to heights inconceivably grand. Thus do we advance beyond the confines of earth. We leave earth because our opportunities while we are attached to it are comparatively limited. We need broader fields for the development of our powers and possibilities, and Nature from her boundless resources, offers us the conditions we require for further progress.

Never do we hear from spirits saying that any of their number have been destroyed. The general statement is that no matter how much they desired annihilation they found that to die again was an utter impossibility. But such spirits are generally of an undeveloped kind, and if spirits cannot be destroyed while in an undeveloped condition, we are doubly certain that they cannot be when they have advanced to wisdom and comparative perfection. The words of Henry Drummond as given above make this conclusion inevitable. The higher and more complex the organism the longer lived it will be and the more complete will its mastery be over its environment. So if the undeveloped spirit with practically no control over its surroundings cannot be destroyed, when further developed the danger will grow less and less in direct ratio to the development. Each succeeding year of the spirit's life makes it just that much more immune to danger of destruction, provided of course that it tries to comprehend and master its environment and makes some advancement.

For the spirit who does not advance the outlook is not so promising. Eternal life is given us for the purpose of developing our latent possibilities, but if we refuse to develop these higher faculties we must ultimately lose them, for wherever progress ceases then retrogression or disintegration takes place. But we will never cease to exist until ambition is satisfied, and therefore the spirit on the upward path will never cease to be, for never can its ideals be reached, its ambition be satisfied, and hence progression will ever continue and death never threaten. Well may we say with the spirit of Hassein when giving instruction to his friend Franchezzo:

"We believe that the soul will go on mounting continually as by ever widening spiral rings, till it has reached what we now term the centre of the universe, but whether when we do attain that summit of our present aspirations we shall not find it to be but a finite point revolving around a still greater centre, I cannot say. My own feeling is that we shall attain to center after center, ever resting, it may be millions of years, in each, till our aspirations shall again urge us to heights as far again above us. The more one contemplates the subject the more vast and limitless it becomes. How, then, can we hope to see an end to our journeyings through that which has no end and has had no beginning?"

Such is man's destiny as revealed by Spiritualism, such is its broad conception of the universe, and thus as the bud foreshadows the blossom, do the inherent faculties of man as revealed by Spiritualism foreshadow his immortality. And when we have scaled the heights we can but faintly conceive of in our present state of development—then will the universe give to our keeping the secrets we now think of with awe and long to understand, while our minds in their embryonic stage are not capable of comprehending such vast truths; and as we pause on our upward path and compare the heights we have gained with those yet to be scaled, then will the true magnitude of creation burst upon our enlarging vision, then will we be able to see and comprehend the grandeur of the illimitable universe whose eternal character is mirrored in our own lives. We are destined to a permanent life; a life where the dross of earth is cast aside, where the spirit stands supreme. We never die. Creation is not a failure; evolution is not a farce, but it would be if man were not eternal We may not be able to prove eternal life because no spirit has ever lived eternally, but this much we do know, that,

"When the moon is old,
And the stars are cold,"

we will have just begun to live.

LILY DALE.

Notes of the City of Light Assembly.

Saturday afternoon, July 16, Rev. Henry Frank, of New York City, addressed the City of Light Assembly on the "Victories of Truth." He is a fine orator and an inspired speaker of great power on the lines of progressive thought.

On Sunday morning, July 17, a hot wave struck Lily Dale, a visitation that made ice cream and lemonade the things devoutly to be wished for. It would have been an easy matter to imagine it the 17th of June instead, the anniversary of that memorable day, more than a century ago, when the decisive battle of Bunker Hill was fought that helped to achieve our American liberty and independence. We mark the wide difference in circumstances, however, fanning oneself under the cool shade of giant trees, listening to delightful band music, or the inspired utterances of eloquent oratory, is like living in another world, compared with the struggles of that little band of noble heroes who fought so valiantly in the cause of freedom, when the heat was so fierce and intense that the tongues of the soldiers swelled out of their mouths. Their hardships, their strenuous efforts, made possible the privileges we enjoy to-day. The conquering spirit of raw militia against veteran regulars may be paralleled by the steady and determined effort of the common people, to throw off the shackles of tradition and superstition till perfect mental liberty is enjoyed by all.

An appreciative audience greeted Mrs. Twing, the speaker of the morning, who took her text from the Scriptures, from the experience of Judas after he had hanged himself. "He went to his own place." She said, "It's a wonderful thing to be ready to go to your own place if you can stand in that other life, and not be sorry. I have heard people talk as though they expected when they pass on, that all the bands of heaven would be glad that they have come. I think that when people go over there they will have someone to go with them to their place. May be it is someone who has not been kind to them, and they will be surprised when those who have been unjust in life hold out kindly hands, and beg forgiveness, for all wrongs must be righted. I sometimes think that there are none so proud as the prosperous, none so heartless as the happy. Those who have not a care, nothing to disturb the tranquillity of life, often exhibit such indifference to those who are struggling, those who are so lonely and grieve so much. Oh, happy hearts, teach this lesson to the hungry world, that blessed are the homesick, that though they have struggles and cares and they are homeless, sometime, somewhere they will understand home in its fullest and sweetest meaning."

Sunday afternoon, Rev. Henry Frank lectured on "The Power of Thought" to a large and responsive audience, who manifested deep interest in his subject by frequent applause. He said: "The correct analysis of the human mind is the highest achievement of science. Every unit in nature which has utilized the past experience and thoroughly conquered a limited environment has made a step in the process of its development. Intelligence is an expression, a process, and exists as a force, a power, an energy, and has a life in everything that lives, and is supreme and universal. The stars speak the language of reason, and the processes of nature are as rational as the laws of logic. Human intelligence is the capability of an individual to utilize his past experience and thereby conquer his environment."

Maud Lord Drake followed the speaker with pleasant remarks and tests. Mr. Frank is on his way to San Francisco, where he is advertised to lecture and hold classes, the same as last year. His son, a bright lad of a dozen years, accompanies him to St. Louis, where he will visit the exposition for a couple of weeks.

Chairman Barrett surprised his friends by an unexpected appearance on Sunday. He was warmly welcomed and takes up his work with easy familiarity, and everyone is pleased to have the position so ably filled.

On Sunday evening Mr. William Bambam and Mr. Farar of New York, formerly Cleveland, gave a benefit seance at the auditorium which netted some $28 to the association. Their manifestations are given in the light, under strict test conditions, and are similar in character to those of the famous Davenport Brothers in the early days of Spiritualism. A committee carefully sewed the garments of Mr. Bambam, whose figure was concealed by the drapings of his light frame cabinet, but whose face was constantly visible. Hands that were far beyond his reach were thrust out of the cabinet. Also a profusion of flowers, roses and carnations that were fresh and fragrant. An invisible typewriter, whose clicking could be distinctlyy heard, printed messages directed to persons in the audience. Musical instruments were played and an independent voice sang in childish accents. The mediums, who furnished every indication of genuineness, are pleasant, gentlemanly appearing young men and we bespeak for them the generous patronage of all who are seeking proof of the power of the invisible.

Monday morning Prof. Lockwood commenced his class instructions at the auditorium, and Mrs. Peterson opened the lyceum exercises at the Octagon with a goodly number of children.

At 4 o'clock J. Clegg Wright met a private class at the cottage of Mr. Gaston on Cleveland avenue. These lessons, given by the controls of Mr. Wright will be continued every afternoon and are intensely interesting. Those familiar with past teachings feel that they cannot afford to miss them. Tuesday morning Mr. Wright gave the first of his series of public class lectures at the auditorium, and appears in the same role twice each week.

Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. Twing's characteristic talk was prefaced by a song service conducted by Mr. Lillie. Light showers brought a most acceptable change in the atmosphere on Wednesday and everybody was happy. The dances at the auditorium on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings are a pleasing source of recreation and well patronized by people inside and outside of the grounds.

On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Wright lectured on the history of the religions of the world ,dating back to the 11th century. A history of superhuman struggles along the path of progress, the sentiment of liberty in the souls of men had made for supremacy. He narrated in thrilling tones the inhumanities, the cruelties and atrocities perpetrated in the name of religion, gave dates and events with marvelous accuracy. He closed by a portrayal of the important considerations demanding the attention of the world at the present time.

The "Forest Temple" meetings are conducted daily under the competent leadership of Mrs. Deveraux, and are a profitable feature of the good work accomplished at the City of Light.

Thursday morning Prof. Lockwood gave his second class lecture and modestly proposed, as a friend and fellow-student, to lead the minds that are floundering in the fogs of ignorance in regard to all that is mysterious in phenomena, out of the darkness and up to the heights of understanding and knowledge, through a demonstration of the principles of nature. Prof. Lockwood has valuable apparatus to assist in the elucidation of these marvelous truths that "psychic relationship permeates every department of matter," and the soul's claim to immortality finds proof in the perfect comprehension of nature's revelations. The professor's teachings and demonstrations have kindled the most intense enthusiasm among his patrons, and attendance promises to be large and of the best quality of minds.

The admirers of Mr. Wright collected in large numbers in the afternoon to listen to a discourse from a subject suggested by Chairman Barrett, "The Power of the Ideal in the Real." Mr. Wright prophesied that three great powers were coming together, Russia, British Europe and America, and difficulties will be settled without war or the sword. Inventions will be so mighty, engines of destruction so terrible, no nation will venture into combat. Disputes among theologians will cease, and everyone will echo the sentiments of Paine, "The world is my country, to do good is my religion."

On Thursday evening the Willing Workers gave a farewell testimonial to Mrs. Twing, with a small admission, which netted $17 to their treasury.

Next Friday evening, the 29th, the lyceum children give a masquerade entertainment, assisted by Mrs. Peterson, Mrs. Zeybel, Mr. Lillie and others.

It is a welcome sight to see Mr. Allen Campbell back for a time in his beautiful spacious cottage which overlooks the entrance to the grounds.

Edward Caleb Randall addressed the City of Light assembly for the first time on Thursday. Mr. Randall is a prominent lawyer in Buffalo, and for fourteen years has been holding seances in his own home, doing what he calls "missionary work" with the spirits who need assistance.

A thing of beauty is the handsome mosaic vase of massive proportions, that has come to ornament the platform at the auditorium. It is the gift of Mrs. Dr. Mathewson of Buffalo, and the product of her own marvelous skill and workmanship. It will be highly appreciated as a work of art, and an expression of the love and good will of the donor.

Miss Ella Preston, of St. Louis, is expected on Monday, and will give tests from the platform until the arrival of Mr. Wiggin, the following Sunday.

A pleasant social function is the card party at the auditorium, given by the Willing Workers on Tuesday evenings.

Mrs. Miller Wilcox is giving materializing seances at the Sherman cottage on Buffalo street.

Mrs. Steele of Pittsburg, gives excellent sittings at her quiet home, No. 8 Cleveland avenue.

Mrs. Chas S. Hulbert of Buffalo, medium and magnetic healer, is an interested listener in many of our audiences.

Hot and cold baths, under the superintendence of Mr. and Mrs. Kent, can be had at the association's bath house, north end of Cleveland avenue.

Mrs. S. E. Pemberton, trumpet medium, is at the Sunflower cottage.

Madam Mayer, astrologist and palmistt, is at the Pond cottage.

Dr. J. M. Temple, business and test medium, can be found at No. 10 Third street.

Mr. A. Normann, spirit photographer and slate-writer, who has confounded the skeptics for so many years, is at his lovely home, No. 1 Library street.

J. S. Zebley gives instructions in dancing on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays at the Octagon.

Mrs. Tillinghast, who always smiles a welcome to visitors, is at her old post of duty in the library.

AN OPEN COURT

Established for a Few Weeks Only, for the Consideration of Certain Important Questions Connected with the Welfare of Spiritualism.

An Impartial Hearing Is the Friend of Justice.

Of What Does Materialization Really Consist?

"Are all the bones, all the blood corpuscles, all the various fluids of the body, the brain cells, etc., Materialized? Or, does Materialization consist in simply enveloping the spirit with substance that is visible without the use of bones, blood, etc?" The following is the answer to the above question propounded by the Editor to the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

To answer the above question completely would be to reconstruct and restate all science based upon the known physical laws of the universe, i. e., all the laws supposed to be known to the physicist; and this would necessitate a new vocabulary constructed to answer the needs of the new knowledge concerning the action of spirit upon substance.

"Materializations, or form manifestations are as varied in character and in their manner of production as are the human conditions under which they occur. From our own knowledge we not only can affirm that such manifestations really take place without the aid consciously or unconsciously of any human being, i. e., without the aid of already organized bodies or materials or fabrics offered as a substitute for real materializaton, but we can also affirm that many of the so-called "exposures" are mistakes of sincere people who are easily deceived to accept as fraudulent unexplained conditions of unfinished or imperfect manifestatons. That there are many simulated manifestations is also true.

But eliminating all doubtful cases and classes and returning to the first proposition, "Of what does materialization consist?" we would say: It is the old, old question of spirit and matter, and has been facetiously answered, "What is mind? No matter. What is matter? Never mind."

Sir William Crookes, Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, Prof. Zollner, Camille Flammarion, Prof. Robert Hare, Prof. J. J. Mapes, in fact scores of scientific minds who have investigated the entire range of phenomenal Spiritualism, attest the facts, accept the truth of spirit existence and manifestation through those facts to mortals, but have never ventured a theory on the subject of "how" they are produced.

Prof. Mapes once said to the writer of this: "Admitting as you claim that spirit volition can control even one atom of matter without any other dynamic agency, then everything is possible."

The relation of spirits (set free from the limitations of the human body) to organic or inorganic substance, must contain the solution of the whole question of physical phenomena produced by spirit power.

Materialization may be an appearance only, so arranged as to be adjusted to the average human sight, or so arranged as to be only tangible to the photographer's sensitized plate, which is much more susceptible than the human visual organs. A degree of form manifestation that could be seen, yet not felt, might be produced, and often is, in which case the aggregation of substance would be very slight and so ethereal in quality as to have no seeming density, no specific gravity. In that case the spirit or spirits surrounding the medium would use the psychic aura of the medium as the focalizing center for this substance relatizing the law of polarity of atoms to attract and fix to the vision of the sitters (or circle) the form desired. If, however, the sense of touch or feeling is also to be satisfied, sufficient material must be added—or the equivalent in effect—to satisfy the sense of touch. (Psychological action and hypnotic suggestion not being employed in such cases.) In this latter case, however, it is not so much a matter of added substance, as of added adaptation of substance to the sense of touch (polarization).

In case of a desire for more complete effect of human organism there may be apparently weight, flesh, bones, hair, clothing, etc.

(A lock of hair cut from the golden locks of "Katie King," a materialized spirit, Miss Florence Cook being the medium and Prof. Crookes the experimentor, and a piece of fine fabric cut from her dress, both seemed as material as any human hair or woven human fabric; both, however, gradually dematerialized after being carried on the person of Mr. Crookes for a few days, and finally disappeared.)

Forms often appear that to the human senses have every indication of being human forms. Yet they are not organic. Sometimes only head, or face and organs of speech are materialized, sometimes hands.

In all cases the substance required is aggregated by the volition of the spirit or spirits an adaptation to human senses and perception.

That "density," "specific gravity," and all similar terms are relative, and that a spark of radium under sufficiently rapid manipulation could be made to appear as a palace of light, all will admit; that the forms presented in genuine manifestations often seem to take on the appearance, and even the conditions of the medium or sitters is also true, and that an interrupted manifestation often presents the appearance of fraud when the perfected manifestation or finished seance would be completely satisfactory is also true. There can be no absolutely satisfactory manifestation of any of the phenomenal phases of Modern Spiritualism, physical or mental, except under circumstances and conditions where the question of "fraud" can be entirely eliminated Such was the case with the investigations of Mr. Crookes and such has been the case in scores of other investigations. Then to understand that the volition of the spirit or spirits producing the phenomena is the starting point, the positive center, and that matter, mediums, sitters and all that relate to the human or mundane side are relative and (to the spirit world) subjective. That "substance" even in its most refined state of the psychic aura is acted upon not by "organic law" from the material side but by psychic or spiritual power (volition). That substance—atomic—ethereal or in grosser forms of molecule or organism must be attracted and dispersed by a process superior to any known law that governs even atomic or chemical attraction and repulsion, and that the direct action of the volition of the spirit must be first upon the more ethereal substances and that action will move the grosser or more mundane conditions of matter to respond. Aggregation and segregation, integration and disintegration, materialization and dematerialization, being but relative terms applicable to states of manifestation, and not to ultimate or primal matter, nor to ultimate or primal spirit.

All materializations are therefore adaptations of phenomena to human perceptions through the senses. A "haunted house" frequently reveals forms, sounds, and lights, all of the most objective and startling nature, yet there is often no person through whose mediumship the manifestations occur, the place itself, the scenes enacted or experienced forming the requisite "conditions" when the state of the spirit producing the phenomena is considered, "earth-bound," sorrow-bound, conscience-bound, whatever may be the supposed state, the volition of the spirit seeks to make something known that was hidden. The action upon substance and the sounds and sights produced are the result. The seance room is a more orderly and harmoniously arranged "haunted house." An invitation and acceptance of the conditions by which spirits can seem to come out of the "empty air" and walk and talk with mortals clad in human forms and vesture.

The student and inquirer cannot arrive at hasty conclusions; must endeavor to be impartial; must employ all his or her senses and the requisite amount of good sense; should bear in mind that all the laws governing the material universe are not known, that the human mind is only in the vestibule of the temple of material science, and that spirits both in the human states and in the next stage of life, are yet in the infancy of knowledge concerning the methods and forces that lie between organic law and substance and the great realm of spiritual causation, where one can think a flower and a blossom will appear, where one can think a world and somewhere in the blue mantle of the sky will show another jewel of light, where one can think "let there be light," and earth and sky will be suffused with glow like the noonday sun.

If, through attempted imitation—the result of cupidity and ignorance—or any other cause this phase or other phases of the manifestations of spirit power shall seem to be withdrawn, still will the great movement that unites the spirit world with mortals go on. Until from such substance as perfect lives are made—and fairest hopes and prophecies arise—will come the "materialization" of good deeds and blessed humanities that will lead the human race unto a perfect knowledge of the methods of the soul.

The Question of Materialization.

There seems to be a great amount of discussion over the question of materialization just now. I positively know that there were genuine mediums for that manifestation of spirit power at the time I was in the East, but I also am aware that there were frauds at that time in Boston, who pretended to produce what they did not. I tried to get into some of their circles, but failed because they knew me, and knew I would not tolerate fraud a moment. But while in the neighborhood of Boston I used to have seances, with those I knew to be true, and talk with my friends from the other side. A friend of mine asked me to attend the first materializing circle I could, and she promised me that she would do the best she could to materialize so I would know her.

A short time after I was lecturing in Great Falls, N. H., and having heard of the Pickering manifestations at Rochester, I went there and engaged a seat in their circle without giving my name, or hinting my purpose. About the middle of the circle my friend Elvira Dinsmore, stepped out of the cabinet and stood about two feet in front. The room was so light I could see to read common print or the time on my watch. I know her instantly, as no other person on earth could imitate her, either in looks or movements. I said mentally, I will wait and see if any one thinks they recognize her, so I said not a word. Three or four exclaimed, "Oh! what a beautiful spirit," but they did not know who it was, nor who for, which was somewhat of a wonder. She stood there a few moments then retired into the cabinet, but shortly stepped out again, stepped along to a mirror about halfway to me on the wall, and looked in it a moment then retired to the cabinet again. All this time not a look, nor a motion from either of us that any person could know that we knew each other, but I was waiting to have her do what I knew she would do, make some move to show me that she had fulfilled her promise. In a minute or two, she stepped out again, came about half way to me and raised her hand and pointed to me. I said, "Elvira," and she came so close I could have taken hold of the form, but she could not speak. I said, "Please turn your face towards the light so I can see both sides of your face, without a shade." She turned clear around so I not only saw her face but her whole head. This lady had peculiarities in form, and movement that I will not stop to describe, but in every form and feature she was perfect, except she looked uncommonly pale. I offered at the time fifty dollars if any person on earth would produce the form by any means except her being there, and show me how it was done.

I am heartily in favor of rooting out every fraud producer of any manifestations called spiritual, throwing them out root and branch, and everything that I can do to help accomplish such a desirable work, I will do with all my will and force. I believe in exposing them everywhere and at all times. They deserve the most strenuous and persevering action from every lover of truth, and our cause, and when such a thing can be proven against them, the law should be used in every available way to stop such a diabolical imposition.

Every Spiritualist should make himself a committee of one to watch every move of any whom they have good reason to believe are frauds. But I counsel that this should not be carried too far, but give every one a chance to prove himself true. P. C. MILLS.

Demands the Full Penalty of Law.

If I was to express my ideas on this subject of fraud in the ranks of Spiritualists, I would say if we have laws to protect innocent people in the investigation of this most momentous question of continued life after the change we call death, I would say punish such offenders of such statute law to its full extent, by fine and imprisonment. I would not let the offenders off by their promise to leave the community, as was recently done at Los Angeles, and leaving the criminals free to go into some other locality and palm off their nefarious practices on other innocent subjects. All Spiritualists throughout the land are directly interested and humiliated by such criminality, and we become the laughing stock of the world. I have passed my eighty-second mile post and nearly all of my acquaintances of my youth have passed on, and supposing I make an effort to communicate with my early relatives and friends through mediumship, which is the only way given under heaven and among men to prove continued life to the race, will I enter the circle which you know should be partially darkened to make conditions for materialization, and one form after another appear, claiming to be relatives or friends, and I greet them cordially as of yore, supposing the forms to be what they represent themselves to be, but to my horror I find they are all counterfeits; and the medium a fake. But there are laws in all states to redress such wrongs, and my voice is that such offenders pay the penalty to the uttermost farthing."

A Few Thoughts on Materialization.

To the Editor:—In regard to materialization, I believe it to be possible, but I do not think it is our duty as apostles to try to induce our loved ones to come so close to earth as to take on flesh and blood, if that be possible. The beautiful fleecy form to me is enough, especially if the features are shown. This will be done in the presence of any well developed medium, who lives close to God. The Bible does not prove materialization of any kind, yet I know it is true, and it may be possible to produce the flesh and blood kind that crack coarse jokes that we so often hear in some cabinet circles. I do not say it is impossible, but I do say that those I have seen in such circles were not spirits, at least those that came to me. I am a tolerably good clairvoyant, and can see just as well in the broad sunlight, or through a wall, as any other place, and am not easily deceived. I would be glad to see the genuine, but have never seen any in circles of that kind. MRS. GRANT FYNSK.

Comprehensive View of Fraud and Deception.

B. F. Underwood is a profound thinker along all lines connected with human progress or advancement. Believing that spirits can communicate with mortals, he would like to see this great modern movement placed on a plane of action where fraud and deception would not be practiced. Clear-minded and logical, and a born critic, he reasons from cause to effect, and he sees evolutionary processes in all human methods of progress. His wife is an excellent medium, the author of "Automatic or Spirit Writing," a book that has had a large sale, and he speaks from a wide knowledge of psychical laws. We bespeak for the Professor's article a careful perusal.

An individual plant is what its progenitors and its environment have made it. The factors in its development are its ancestral forms, and the climate, soil and other surrounding influences operating upon it after its germination. The same kind of seed planted in different places, with difference of soil, and climate will show very different results in the matured products.

The same is true of systems of religion and philosophy. They do not come into existence de novo. They grow from pre-existent systems, and change in adjustment to changes in the medium—changes in thought, mood, habits, language, character and social conditions. Christianity, planted in Abyssinia, in Western Europe, in Southern Europe, in Greenland, and in New England, has developed into systems very different.

What Christianity was in its inception depended upon previous thought and conditions and upon the mental and spiritual as well as physical soil in which it took root. It was a cult of poverty, a religion of the poor, such as dwelt along the banks of the river Jordan and on the shores of the Sea of Tiberias, where the material conditions were as wretched as they can be conceived. What Christianity is to-day, a Mosaic made up of many systems in countries widely separated and among races in varying degrees of civilization, is the result of its original character as an inheritance from pre-existent paganism, stamped by the influence of Jesus and St. Paul, and all the forces, racial, national, social, religious, spiritual and secular, which have modified it and adjusted it to so many different peoples.

It existed as a great system of commanding and extended influence only when it had been largely modified by its environment, only when it had been in contact with the paganism of Greece and Rome, and of Alexandria, and had assimilated portions of the old religions and philosophies, and was thus able to perpetuate under a new name doctrines and ceremonies with which the masses were familiar under other names. The ritualism of Christian Rome grew out of the ritualism of Pagan Rome.

With belief in the supernatural—in a divine personality, a redeemer, salvation by faith, and a future endless life of enjoyment or punishment—there is always demand for theological instruction. The quality of the spiritual teachings corresponds with the prevailing mental and moral condition.

At present in large portions of Christendom, the most marked feature is the growth of faith in the almighty dollar, and the accumulation of big fortunes with such magnificent displays of luxury and fashion to impress the masses as colossal fortunes enable their possessors to make. Accordingly the clergy who minister to the rich and aristocratic churches preach to and for those upon whose liberal checks they look for the handsome salaries they receive.

The theological and spiritual teachers indulge in assumptions and pretensions of knowledge, in dogmatism, in praise of unquestioning faith, in denunciation of doubt, and assume airs of sanctity and superiority as well as a spirit of mingled humility and arrogance in order to make up for their real lack of such knowledge as the profession of theology and as the clergy once boldly claimed to possess implies. The Christian priesthood and all other priesthoods are natural and necessary concomitants of the systems which they represent, just as much as the systems are natural outgrowths of the human mind in its long, weary transition from the darkness of ignorance, credulity and blind faith to the light of knowledge, skeptical habits of thought, inquiry and reasoned belief.

Now how is it with the dark side of Spiritualism?

With belief in continued life after body dissolution and in the possibility of getting communications from those who have passed from this stage of being, the demand for the service of mediums is inevitable and in proportion to the prevalence and strength of this belief.

The demand creates the supply. In addition to those with whom mediumship is a peculiarity of personal interest and satisfaction there is a large class who serve as public mediums for profit. In addition to those who are, or who honestly believe they are mediums, and who try to be true and honorable, there are many who have learned to simulate the phenomena which they are expected to exhibit. This they have done by years of practice and study of deceptive methods. Many of these persons are very shrewd, cautious and skillful in puzzling and confounding "the very elect." They are often apparently very devout, and frequently open the seances with prayer. They are usually bold in their claims, because they know that they are adepts and that the crowd is credulous and knows nothing of their tricks.

For reasons indicated above it is not probable that Spiritualists will ever get quite rid of these frauds. Yet they will be invested with less importance as Spiritualists become more intelligent, more skeptical of pretensions, more discriminating in considering them. Pretended mediums, however shrewd, should not be able to pass off their tricks as the doings of spirits. With more intelligence and scrutiny people would cease to attribute to spirits out of the body any phenomena simply because they were perplexed, puzzled and unable to explain such phenomena without recourse to spirit agency.

Why should any person, especially one who is not an expert in legerdemain, and in all modern devices for producing deception of the senses, the thousands of illusions and hallucinations, ascribe anything to the agency of disembodied spirits simply because they can not understand how it is done, if not by such agencies? It is wiser to assume at the outset that there are methods of deception of which we are ignorant, and that it is antecedently probable that a public performer will select for his practice tricks that those present will not be likely to understand.

Take materialization, for instance. An investigator in a dark or partially dark room sees figures and hears voices which impress him as those of spirits (according to the dominant idea in the circle), and he leaves the seance with the belief that such was the case, because he cannot understand how such phenomena could have occurred if they were not produced by invisible beings. But could he tell how they were produced if they were caused by spirit agency?

I have attended many so-called materializations. Some of them were palpable frauds; none of them impressed me favorably. In no case were the conditions such as to exclude the possibility of fraud, notwithstanding that in some cases pains were taken to show that fraud-proof conditions existed. What was done to point out that certain avenues of possible deception were closed, however, served only to invite my attention to other avenues against which no precautions were taken, and references to which were unwelcome to those eager to have the show opened.

Of what evidential value of spirit agency to an investigator is a performance of any kind conducted under conditions which admit of fraud as a possibility? Of course, among friends, those who have absolute confidence in one another, such conditions are uncalled for. But with professional mediums, those who advertise to do certain strange things and receive money the same as conjurers do, for their performances, nothing should be taken for granted as to honesty and good faith, and all possible vigilance and precaution should be exercised to guard against deception and fraud.

Those who object to this either have no idea of the vast amount of deception that is practiced by large numbers of so-called mediums, or else they are so short-sighted that they imagine "the cause" to which they are attached may be injured by these exposures. Some people would rather cover up an iniquity and deny its existence, even, than to face it and the scandal which may result to a movemeent with which it is identified. No organization and no movement can be, in the long run, hurt by exposure of fraud. Leaders and representatives are in no degree responsible for the fraud except so far as they attempt to justify, excuse, conceal or excuse it. Any movement that does this ought to perish—the sooner the better.

Of course, those who are interested in fostering fraudulent methods are expected not only to deprecate investigation, or even discussion relating to them, but to show relentless hostility toward every one who exposes the frauds, unmasks their perpetrators and puts investigators on guard against spurious exhibitions given in the name of Spiritualism. But the moral atmosphere of Spiritualists' halls and camps would be much more wholesome, if commercial mediumship with the deception and fraud which it engenders, could be eliminated or reduced to a minimum. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

THE JOURNEY'S END.

Rejoice! Thou nearest thy journey's end at last,
Nor need, with toil, to tread the path again;
The goal appears, where all thy labor's past,
And rest ensues, with sweet surcease from pain.

Friends wait thy coming, and there will greet thee,
And give thee welcome, for thy fair renown,
And thou wilt joy, that henceforth thou art free,
From all the mortal clogs, which weighed thee down.

And thy deservings there, have right by grace,
And those preferred—who of thy claims made slight,
Are now constrained to take their proper place,
In spheres, where wrongs of life, are all made right.

For cause precedes and ever binds effect,
And still will rule aright, whate'er the plea,
For justice holds the scale and will direct,
So, in the end, thine own will come to thee.

What ye have sown in grief, ye reap in joy,
And garner still, in all the coming years;
So wilt thou gather bliss, without alloy,
In full fruition, for thy earthly tears.

"A Conspiracy Against the Republic." By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. A condensed statement of facts concerning the efforts of church leaders to get control of the government. An important work. Paper, 25 cents.

A Candid Criticism.

A Comprehensive Analysis of the Present Situation—Excellent Evidence of Spirit Power and Presence, by a Prominent Lawyer.

To the Editor:—The true Spiritualist cannot be other than honest, fair, sincere and truthful in his dealings with others, for he knows that not only are there myriads of bright spiritual eyes looking upon him, but that to intentionally wrong or defraud another of that which is due him is to turn the sun of progress within him back upon the dial degree for degree commensurate with every injury done. Hence, it follows that no true medium—and mediums are Spiritualists par excellent—is ever guilty of the practice of fraud in mediumship.

But there are mediums, or persons, who practice fraud in the matter of spiritual, or alleged spiritual, phenomena. Of course they are not spiritual phenomena if they have their origin from physical or earthly causes solely. Spiritual phenomena, as the term implies, must originate in a spiritual domain; they must proceed from and be caused or produced by the spirits of persons who once lived in the body but who are now in a spiritual realm without a physical body.

Determine to a certainty, by any method or process whatever, that any given manifestation is so caused and you have a genuine spiritual manifestation, If by "conditions" imposed upon you by the operator, or medium, or others, you are deprived of the opportunity to determine certainly as to the nature of the manifestation, you not only cannot say whether you have witnessed a genuine spiritual phenomenon or a counterfeit, but you are justified in a prima facie presumption of fraud which nothing but subsequent proof may remove.

That there is such a thing as genuine materialization of the spirit form, or body, in part, at least, as the hand or face, I take it is amply demonstrated. In my own experience I could cite instances which to my mind, and I believe, to any reasonable person, amount to a demonstration. As long ago as the year 1864, in the presence of a lady, a member of the Episcopal Church, and not a professional medium, in a little town called Alton, in Wayne County, N. Y., not twenty miles from Hydesville, I saw at an improvised cabinet the faces of a number of departed friends under conditions which precluded fraud or collusion, and one of the neatest demonstrations came one afternoon at Marion, N. Y., in the presence of the same lady, at a neighbor's house where some six or seven sitters were invited to be present at a voluntary seance. The room was slightly darkened by placing blankets, etc., at the windows, and all sat at the dining table with all the hands, including those of the medium, visible on the top surface of the table, Presently there was a tapping on my shoe underneath the table, then a twitching and pulling at my pants leg, and then a firm grasp at my leg by a real, tangible human hand. I didn't see the hand, but we know those things as well by sense of touch as of seeing; and then to test the matter I asked questions and the hand, or fingers, tapped out the answer on my shoe; thus connecting human intelligence with the movements of the hand; and all the time all the hands of the whole company, including those of the medium, plainly within my view on the table. This was all simple enough, and was absolutely convincing to all present of spiritual interference and causation.

Instances of this nature might be cited by the dozens, and by Spiritualists all over the country, more than sufficient to establish any science under the sun. THE TROUBLE IS, NOT THAT THERE ARE NOT GENUINE PHENOMENA ENOUGH, BUT THAT THERE IS INTERMINGLED AND MIXED WITH THEM A LARGE AMOUNT OF GROSS FRAUD AND IMPOSITION IN THESE MODERN DAYS. You can generally detect the fraudulent manifestation by the failure to produce convincing results. The "spirits" or "controls" do not seem to know their subjects. A full form will appear at a cabinet window; it will not know whom it wants to communicate with until the "manager" points the individual out; it cannot talk; the room is too dark for identification; the message given will be so general, and the name or names given so common that they will fit a good many people; only persons who attend the seance often will get anything they can recognize.

I remember attending a seance given by a prominent and well-vouched medium in a city foreign to my abode where there was no one present who knew my name or residence. I was a strange cat in a strange garret. In this new and strange environment assuredly my real spirit friends—and I have a lot of them—would have known me.

If not, why not?

But what was the message I got? While others—old-timers, I judged by their familiar conversation with medium and guides—were overwhelmed with loving greetings from their spirit friends, this was the word from the land of souls to me: "Tell them to make less noise.—The Guide." This is what I got for not letting the medium know who I was; and I suppose I ought to be satisfied. Well, I was satisfied of one thing, and never attended another seance given by that medium.

When spirits and mediums can give us nothing but noise, jingling of bells, banging of tambourines, twanging of guitar strings, phosphorescent lights, patting of cheeks, touching of hands in the dark, full-form figures in fantastic garb with voices too indistinct for purposes of conversation, and no real token by which they can be recognized, with no message of any importance, I for one shall refuse to patronize or endorse them. THEY ARE WORKING TO NO PURPOSE SAVE THAT OF EXTRACTING COIN FROM THE POCKETS OF THE TOO CONFIDING SPIRITUALIST OR THE CURIOSITY SEEKER IN GENERAL.

Let us as Spiritualists refuse to be satisfied with the phenomena of the variety show, the spectacular and mystifying performance of the juggler, and demand spiritual phenomena with a purpose, or let us have none at all. The old family circle, as advocated by many old-time Spiritualists, it seems to me, would go a long ways toward the solution of the fraud question in Spiritualism.

By no means do physical manifestations occupy the important position in Spiritualism that they are given by some. The mental phase is more logical and more convincing to the thinking mind than the physical demonstration. A few weeks ago, having occasion to visit a friend on a matter of business I went to his house in this city, where unexpectedly I met a certain medium and one whom I had never met before. She did not know me and I did not know her; had only heard of her incidentally. After I had been introduced to her and had seated myself she said to me: "I do not know what you will think of it, but I am going to tell it anyway. There was an old gentleman came in with you; he is very helpless; something the matter with his limbs; I believe he has the palsy; he has to be moved and helped up and down in his bed. You had a case for him (law-suit) shortly before he passed out; he goes this way (grasping an imaginary rope hand over hand); you had a great deal to do with his affairs; he wants you to know that he sees and knows it all now. His name was Mar—Marsh—no, not Marsh, but something like that." Every word of this was true and a complete identification of my old friend H. B. Martin, whom the medium never knew and I doubt if she had ever heard of him. Then again on the same occasion the medium quite as impromptu told me there was once a lady who was associated with me in business as a writer who had lately got married and moved away; that she was of such and such description personally; that she had two infants in spirit life. "No," said I, "you are wrong. I recognize the lady, but she never had but one baby, and that was by a former husband."

"Oh, yes," says the medium, "this lady has two babies in spirit life. I am certain of that because I see them."

"Well," I said, "there is some mistake somewhere, for I never heard of but the one baby."

The next day, telling the circumstance to a mutual friend, she said to me, "Why, Mrs. ——— did have two babies, but she never told of but the one, the other was so small when it died."

The glib-speaking telepathic, mind-reading, sub-conscious Spiritualist will never talk me out of the only legitimate, logical conclusion to be deduced from that incident, viz., that it came directly from a spirit and is proof positive of the truth of Spiritualism. Hereon I plant my feet and here shall I stand because to do otherwise would be to deny one of the most patent facts of my existence.

TRUTH UNDEFILED.

Every heart knows its weakness, its burden of sin,
What need to reveal them? Love says, "Look within,"
For God and each soul there's a witness between.

He shall judge thee and others, fear not, for the scale
Of Justice and Mercy He holds shall prevail—
In the triumph of Truth, though its teachers be frail.

Let the good in thy brother be dear to thy heart,
With his vices and follies the truth has no part,
It will live, and will triumph the most through Love's art.

Men cannot defile it, though sunk in the mire,
'Tis the jewel of heaven that mortals shall tire
Of striving to tarnish or burn in the fire.

They may try it as dross in the furnace of pain,
But pure as when given the truth will remain,
And show never to angels one scar or one stain.

Oh! learn then the lesson Love bears to the earth,
All truths that exalt thee are jewels of worth,
And none the less holy, though lowly their birth.

But, remember, Love never works ruin or ruth
To any who toil in the kingdoms of truth—
For behold Love herself is the holiest truth,—

And when born in the spirit, then sink to repose
All the passions that add to humanity's woes,
For Yove hides the secrets that hate would disclose.

Oh! sing then in gladness the songs of the heart
And the joys that they give thee to others impart,
'Tis Love, and Love only, gives food to the heart.

WHENCE AND WHITHER?

An Inquiry into the Nature of the Soul, Its Origin and Destiny.

BY DR. PAUL CARUS.

This little book treats of the central problems of all religion; the nature of the ego; the origin, development, and destiny of the human personality; spiritual heredity; the dissolution of the body and the preservation of the soul; the nature of human immortality; mankind's ideals; the rational basis of ethics, etc., all from the standpoint of modern psychology and biology. 188 pages. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

"Dr. Carus answers the question: "Is Life Worth Living?" very fully and satisfactorily. The whole is a comprehensive and helpful treatise."—Journal of Education, Boston.

TREATMENT BY HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION; or Psycho-Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D., Aberd. New York. Price $3.

This is the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, 376 pages 8vo, of a most valuable and standard work, by an acknowledged authority and expert in the science of healing by hypnotism and suggestion. The method of treatment by suggestion is clearly and exhaustively considered, and illustrated by descriptions of numerous actual cases in the author's personal experience. The work will be found a valuable auxiliary to physicians in ameliorating and curing the mental and physical ills of their patients, and is worthy of most careful study not only by physicians, who should be thoroughly informed in the nature and methods of curative hypnotism or suggestion, but also by all students of hypnotism who desire to thoroughly understand the subject. It is a valuable mine of information to all who consult its pages.

True Papal History

Abridgment of the Letters of Charles MacArthur, the Eminent Historian, Who for 30 Years Has Made a Specialty of the Catholic Question.

BY A STUDENT.

Recently says the pope, "the Holy Ghost has informed him that the list of popes is incorrect, and has ordered a revision." We are informed that ten vicars of Christ have been dropped from the list and five others have been added. The name of only one of the new ones has been given; the other four are to follow.

Duchesne, said to be a "famous historian" was selected to assist the divine messenger, and as all the reasons for dropping the names of the popes have not been given, I propose to assist in the work. I think the inspired revealer was right, but I also think that the present pope did not catch the entire message; it should have been 210 instead of 10. I use the term "pope" for convenience. There is not a scintilla of historical evidence to support the claim that Peter ever saw or heard of the city of Rome. The papal claims are based on the most diaphanous legends. Many early writers entirely ignore the first three popes. The first mention of any bishop of Rome is of Clement in 91. Before that time the papists in Rome formed a very small society of unknown numbers. The term 'pope' from 'papa' was applied to every cleric until the time of Siricius, 385, who decreed that it should be the distinctive title of the Bishop of Rome. The custom was followed in the Eastern or Greek church, and even to-day every Russian priest is designated as 'pope.' The term has lost its early significance; is esteemed only by interested clerics and by the ignorant.
